CHINA'S STRONG ARM TO BE FELT IN WAR

Her Trained Workmen and Raw Materials Likely to Weigh Heavily on Side of Allies.

200,000 MEN FOR FRANCE

Gardner L. Harding Tells of the Potentialities of the Kingdom and Aid Alre dy Given.

China's declaration of war against Germany has hardly been taken seriously by the Allies as yet, but her help may prove vital before peace is finally restored, according to Gardner L. Harding, a close student of Oriental affairs and author of "Present Day China." In an article published in a current issue of Asia, the official publication of the Asiatic Association, Mr. Harding declares that for five important reasons the Entente Powers will be glad China fights on their side.

He first points to the number of trained industrial workmen China will be able to send over to Europe; second, to raw materials, metals, and minerals of use in munition making, which can be obtained in limitless quantities from the celestial kingdom. Then there are troops; the Chinese make superb soldiers, writes Mr. Harding; fourth, the food supplies should not be ignored. Lastly, and in some ways most important of all, China friendly to the Allies means a stable Far East and an absence of an Eastern question, a vital factor in any permanent peace.

"China realizes that we must get through this war before we commence the task of averting another," declares the writer. "Accordingly, before she asked from the Allies a single guarantee, before she even broke off relations with Germany, she had an expeditionary force in France. A hundred thousand Chinese workmen, a contingent that matched in size Sir John French's first 'contemptible little British army,' by Feb. 1 was busy plugging up vital holes in France's industrial army and freeing many thousand French soldiers for service at the front.

"Immediate plans call for the expansion of this Chinese labor army to two hundred thousand; and it is rapidly reaching that figure. I have just heard from an old friend who left St. John's College in charge of a typical battalion of what he calls the Chinese Expeditionary Labor Corps, of the actual conditions under which these Chinese workers proceed to the industrial front. They were enlisted, 1,100 strong at Weihaiwei, the British naval base on the coast of Shantung. They obtained upon embarkation, by agreemen. between the British and Chinese Governments, two new suits of clothing, bedding, a rucksack, native eating utensils, (with their own cook and complete Chinese paraphernalia), new shoes, raincoat, hat, &c., and $10 pocket money. A foreign doctor, three foreign officers, and a corps commander, all Chinese speakers and long residents in the country, go with them; and their non-commissioned foremen and officers are all Chinese. All wear civilian dress, as the enterprise is strictly non-military. They carry with them an absolute guarantee that their work will be noncombatant, and that they will be returned to their homes with a substantial bonus at the end of the war.

"Men are by all odds the outstanding feature of China's contribution to the Allies' campaigns of the present and the immediate future. But from now on—and this, we may depend on, the German General Staff has charted, too—the Allies may count more and more for war purposes the vast storehouse of minerals and coal which lie practically beneath the virgin earth in China.

Big Deposits of Iron.

"Everybody in the Far East knows of the great Tayeh mine in the Hupeh province, near the Yangtse River, where there are great workable deposits of the highest grade iron ore amounting, on von Richtoven's estimate, to more than 2,000,000 tons. The surface of this vast deposit is being barely scratched today to the extent of something like 1,500 tons a day, about half of which goes to the ostensibly Chinese Hanyehting Coal and Iron Company's huge foundries and smelting works on the Hanyang, opposite Hankow, on the Yangtse, and the other half to Japan, where it is divided between the Japanese Iron Works at Wakamatsu and the great Muroran Steel Works. The half that goes to Japan is most of it booked through to the allied front via Russia, leaving of course a substantial Japanese profit on the way.

"China needs only the right kind of co-operation to make a substantial part of her huge potentialities in industrial raw material cash in with greatly increased exports. Last year she exported over half a million tons of first-rate iron ore and manufactured iron combined, out of not more than three-quarters of a million tons which she produced. So it is not the flow to the ports, but the production which needs to be stimulated. Once the Allies take an interest, once the Allied Commission on utilizing China's mineral resources goes actually to Peking, they will find a very lively Chinese initiative all along the line, and they can get immediate results in iron by simply co-ordinating this initiative.

"The energetic Minister Ku Chun-hsiu, a non-party young Chinaman of the best type, has had his experts out for six months in China's six chief iron producing provinces getting data on the possibility of immediate production. His estimate is that if the Allies want it China can produce next year twice as much iron and, with really substantial loans and advisory co-operation, four times as much.

10,000,000 Tons of Coal.

"China also produces over 10,000,000 tons of coal a year, including the famous Pinghsiang and Kailan products, rated among the best in Asia. Pinghsiang is tied up with the Japanese; and the Kailan Company, being of joint British and Chinese management, is already working for the Allies to its utmost capacity. Still, China managed to export last year well over 2,000,000 tons; and she can do more.

"At the last strategical point, if we accept the matter of soldiers as too largely speculative, that of helping feed the Allies, China is a vast, potential reservoir. The bitter road of famine she has intermittently trod for the last fifty years, you might say for the last fifty centuries, has obliged the modern Chinese Government to put serious obstacles in the way of the export of grains. Wheat is grown and exported, as is also the famous Manchurian soya bean. If we could only find it palatable, it would feed Europeans in vast numbers. China as she is, however, is a vast exporting trafficker in frozen meats, nuts, sugar, macaroni and vermicelli, dried fruits and vegetables, canned fish and preserved eggs products, and, last but best least, wheat.

"If China encourages wheat export, the present annual shipments, valued at about $3,000,000, will be doubled or tripled next year. It will take ten years of river banking and drainage and many more of forestation to put China's agricultural possibilities on the high road of pure development. But the self-scrutiny that comes in war time will do much for China toward that end; a little solid experience with food control might at once increase China's food services to Europe and America many times."

CAPELLE AND THE MUTINY.

The German Government is so proficient in the art of creating pretended "crises" for effect and then suppressing them that the world has grown wary. It bit too often at the bait. And yet some day there will be a real crisis in Germany, and the joke will again be on the world if it proves skeptical at the wrong time. The revelation of the sailors' mutiny was made by the Government, and therefore is open to suspicion as a political dodge; but still there are certain facts that make for the belief that this time something may be really going on in Germany.

CAPELLE'S resignation is too solid a fact. The demand for MICHAELIS'S resignation is another solid fact. If it is said that the mutiny was revealed as a political stroke to save MICHAELIS'S head, that head must be in desperate danger to need such heroic measures. The incident as a whole has led the Socialist press to take more advanced ground in its demands than it has ever taken before, and that is another solid fact; a bogus crisis has never had that effect. We now see Vorwärts demanding that the next Chancellor be chosen by the Reichstag, not by the Kaiser; in other words, demanding that parliamentary government be adopted without waiting for a change in the Constitution. The mere fact of the demand shows the distance that has been traveled.

Whether the mutiny was great or small, a mutiny there was. The Government charges that the mutiny was fed on Socialist literature. If that is true, then that Socialist literature must be making its way into German homes as well as German warships. If it has an incendiary effect on sailors, may it not have an incendiary effect on others? Deputies give the names of persons who have been arrested for inciting the sailors, one of them a Deputy himself. Then there is sedition in Germany. That is another solid fact.

How large or how slight was the revolutionary movement in the navy? There are two facts that may tend to strengthen the belief that it was not slight. The German Navy certainly did begin a movement against Russia, and did not carry it out. Was it because its sailors could not be trusted? The submarine campaign certainly is failing in effect. We have all been attributing it to the increase in effectiveness of the measures taken by the Allies. Is it not possible that this, too, may be due in part to distrust of the men by the officers? The mutiny was on battleships, not submarines; but the crews of the submarines are being drawn from the larger vessels, the very vessels touched by disaffection. A German sailor who has been reading seditious or Socialist literature for several months is just as likely to be affected by it if he serves on a submarine as if he serves on a cruiser.

There is another fact, one that has an inescapable meaning. German sailors on the battleship Westfalen took possession of the ship and imprisoned the Captain in his cabin. Such an action could not possibly have been sudden, could not possibly have failed to be preceded by many signs and warnings. A battleship is not a submarine or a rowboat; it is a great ship with hundreds of men on board. It would no more be possible to miss the signs of rebellion on a battleship than in a city. In the old state of discipline in the German Navy a rebellious movement could never have got without discovery to the point where the crew could take the ship and Captain prisoner. It did not spring from a clear sky. What is the present state of discipline in the German Navy?

Two things we know. The Government proclaims that at least a part of its navy cannot be trusted; and the head of the Navy Department resigns immediately after that revelation. It would be premature to form any large conclusions from the little we know; but it is not too optimistic to believe that all this may be the beginning of important events.

UNITY.

At the time he accepted the honorary Chairmanship of the National Unity League Cardinal GIBBONS wrote Mr. WILSON a letter whose wisdom, clear reasoning and fine loyalty are worthy of his lofty place, worthy of that beneficent old age honored by Americans, no matter of what religion; worthy of a great churchman and a great religion. The Cardinal speaks for all loyal Americans when he expresses his sympathy for the President in the heavy burdens of the war, and their "unwavering determination "to stand by him in every effort to "bring success to our aims and to "achieve those ideals of justice and "humanity which compelled our en"trance into the war." He urges obedience to the Government. Especially needed and helpful is his rebuke of "the folly and grave dis"obedience of unjust and ill-tem"pered criticism of national policies."

He reminds the impatient and hostile critics that they "see the present "situation from only one angle, "whereas the Government sees it "from every viewpoint, and is there"fore alone in the position to judge "of the expediency of national af"fairs." Remembrance of the hasty, uninformed and malignant criticism to which Mr. LINCOLN was subjected all through the civil war should have been a sufficient warning to the successors of those critics in this war. In peace there is full play for individualism, eccentricity of opinion, dissent of all shades, the utmost flatulence of the freest and most foolish speech. In war we must all stand together, following our leader, in unity to fight the foe. We shall have plenty of time to quarrel among ourselves after the war.

Meanwhile, as Cardinal GIBBONS says, all Americans "can do the "greatest good to themselves and "their country by a cheerful and "generous performance of their duty "as it is pointed out to them by law"fully constituted authority." Catholic and Protestant and Jew, Agnostic and Christian Scientist, men and women of whatever religion, or of none, should be a unit in that cheerful and generous performance. The time for argument and opposition ended with the declaration of war.

Cardinal GIBBONS'S appeal for American unity and loyal support of the Government appeared on the same day with Archbishop IRELAND'S direction to the Catholic priests of St. Paul to commend to their parishioners today the purchase of Liberty bonds. "Akin to religion," says the Archbishop, "a very vital part of religion "is patriotism, love of country, "obedience to its commands, warm "interest in its welfare." In this religion of patriotism, in this "very vital part of religion," all Americans fit to be Americans can attain unity.

THE CAMPAIGN BEGINS.

Of course, Judge HYLAN is not allowed to enter into a joint debate with Mayor MITCHEL about the Mayor's administration. The masters of the Phonograph Candidate know better than to expose him to "a "mere oratorical contest with this "petulant young man." They write the Münchausen record, and the Judge repeats it mechanically. It is a small series of inventions, misstatements, exposed falsehoods. If the Mayor or anybody else familiar with the facts were on the spot and permitted to answer, the whole paper house of lies would tumble down. Evidently Tammany's theory is that the constant repetition of false statements will make them believed. That is a cynical view of popular intelligence. It supposes, also, that the persons who go to Judge HYLAN'S readings have no other means of information about the affairs of the city than the romances of East Fourteenth Street.

The Fusionists have every reason to be content with the decision of Judge HYLAN'S discoverers. He is painting a picture of himself upon the public mind. There is the sign of Tammany, the Red Light, in the background, the ascetic features of Mr. MURPHY in the right foreground, Mr. HEARST and Mr. BRUCKNER waving German flags from the right and left centre, respectively, and in the middle distance the true effigy of Judge HYLAN, a blank, an unoccupied space; absolute vacuity, shapeless, colorless, save for reflection from the background, void, null, nothing.

Three weeks of contemplation can only increase the stupefaction of the public. In a less busy time a torrent of cachinnation would already have succeeded the first dumb, honest wonder. Why, the man, whatever his talents for the county bench, is, as a candidate, dummy, dumb, it is not impolite to say, remembering his sponsor. He seems to know nothing whatever about city affairs. He drones out every night Tammany fables that to any ear of intelligence sound like intentional cruel ironies, purposed attacks by the fictionists of the Murphy Foundation upon their employers. "Money oligarchy," "officials who can be depended upon "when elected to resist every en"croachment of the corporations," "moneyed masters," "waste and extravagance," "fraud and dishonesty" "corruption"—the Judge is giving a short history of Tammany.

The vain inventions about "the Rockefeller agents," "REYNOLDS and his associates," and the rest will soon be swept away. The campaign begins today. It will not be a defensive campaign. Tammany hopes that the Fusionists will squander their time in hunting the ghost issues it has set up. Not a bit of it. Fusion stands on its achievements. These it will show. Its campaign will be one of attack. In contrast with what New York is under Fusion will be exhibited remorselessly what New York was and would be again under Tammany; foul streets, the reign of organized vice, the gambler, the dive-keeper, the gunman, the police a partner of crime, neglect and filth in the Department of Charities, squalor in the parks, favoritism, incompetence, maladministration, government for graft.

What Fusion is, what Tammany was, is and ever must be: that is the issue.

IF KUEHLMANN MEANT IT.

If, as Foreign Secretary KUEHLMANN alleges, the only obstacle to peace is Alsace-Lorraine, why should Austria, Turkey, and Bulgaria go on fighting any longer? Not one of them has the remotest interest in the question whether Germany shall keep that spoil or return it to its rightful owners. The best proof that KUEHLMANN was not speaking the truth is that Austria, Turkey, and Bulgaria do not believe him. If they did, if they thought they were staggering on through a war of which they are weary just so that Germany might hold on to the land of which she robbed France forty-six years ago, a mighty clamor for a separate peace would arise in at least one of those countries. What interest, for instance, has Hungary in Alsace-Lorraine? The Austrian Kaiser would not be able to resist Hungary's demand for peace for a day. But they know that KUEHLMANN did not speak the truth, that it was merely a manoeuvre to sow dissension among the Allies, to set the pacifist tools of Germany going again in England, Russia, and the United States.

The obstacle to peace is not Alsace-Lorraine, but the German Government; the German Government with its intention, either now or later, to make Germany dominant over the rest of the world. Now, if pacifist dupes in the enemy countries can bring about that German victory which cannot be won by German armies; later, if the enemy countries can be fooled or bribed into a peace on the basis of the status quo ante, into any peace short of a peace that so handcuffs that Government that it can never again threaten the peace of the world.

RUSSIA'S AID.

The new Russian Government's announcement of its purposes is gratifying in so far as it promises to "extend its whole strength in support "of the common cause of the Allies," that is, the checkmating of the German attempt to dominate the world. However, the Allies are fighting for more than that; they are fighting to prevent Germany from doing it again, as soon as she has caught her breath after this war. How does the Russian Government stand on that question? It says that it will also extend its whole strength "to defend the "country, to oppose every attempt at "the conquest of territory of other "nations, and every attempt to im"pose the will of others on Russia." This logically would mean that Russia will oppose every attempt to make the German defeat more than a checkmate; every attempt to extort such guarantees as would make it impossible for Germany to renew the assault in ten or twenty years. If the freeing of Alsace-Lorraine and of that region north of the Alps which was taken from Italy for the very purpose of making such a war as this one possible, were deemed necessary by the Allies as guarantees, then Russia would be bound to oppose them; for they would come under the technical head of conquest. Thus Russia, while resisting "every at"tempt to impose the will of others "on Russia," would seek to impose the will of Russia on others.

But it by no means follows that Russia will withdraw from the war unless her view of the case is taken. The Government announces what that view is, but manifests no intention to be impossibilist about it. KERENSKY has won a victory over the mad party, but it is a power and he cannot ignore it. The parts of his declaration that grate a little on Western ears are probably the least he could say and still have harmony at home. Everything that is said or done by any responsible person goes to show that Russia intends to stay in the war, and, despite her insistence on her peculiar views, to play fair.

The question that remains is how far she can be of aid. General VERKHOVSKY, the new Minister of War, announces his plans in an interview published in The World of Friday. He intends to reorganize the army during the Winter; indeed, he has begun by decreasing its size, which he considers to be unwieldy. "By next Spring," he says, "you will see a new Russian army," based on new principles. The old officers are to be set aside and new ones substituted, in whom the soldiers will feel more confidence. These old officers "have been hostile to the coun"cils," and must give place to officers who will not be. Once an officer secures the confidence of a council, the council will see to it that the men obey him, and thus the question of discipline will be solved.

It is foolish to say that anything is impossible until it has been tried, and, indeed, the French Revolution succeeded notably by dismissing the old officers and raising new ones from the ranks. It did not, however, add to the risk of the change by having these new officers controlled by debating societies of private soldiers. Officers and men alike were controlled by a central power stronger than that of the monarchy. Russia is taking a double risk, even though, as General VERKHOVSKY'S statement seems to suggest, it is forced by circumstances. The trial of an enormous experiment, novel in warfare and contrary to all that has hitherto been believed of human nature, may result in a success which will compel man to readjust his ideas of his own capacities. But if it should not, if it should fail, if this gigantic toss of the dice should fall the wrong way, then the Russian armies next Spring will again be of no military assistance to us.

We must face that possibility, and construct our plans as if it were a certainty. It is not prudent to count on Russia when Russia is engaged in a colossal guess like this. If it turns out well, then the victory we hope to win will be a dazzling triumph; but if, as experience hints, the Russian experiment is not well founded, it will be too late then to change our own movements. The British and French learned that lesson last Spring. It is probable, of course, that even in the event of failure Russia could still be of service by detaining inactive German armies on her frontier, and for that service we would be grateful; but that is a service she is rendering now.

ROUNDING UP LOAN SLACKERS.

It is easier to explain than to excuse the backwardness in taking the Liberty Loan and asking for more. It is everybody's business, but too many think it the business of somebody else, "Wall Street" in particular, for choice. Wall Street no doubt can take all the loan. Quite certainly Wall Street will take all the country's leavings. Later on Wall Street will submit to the country's blaming it for its sordid ways, its only fault being that it appreciated better than others what patriotic duty requires, and what a chance there is for profit in the direction of this particular duty. If the country is honest with itself, it will admit that it has been given first chance to take the world's standard security, and that it has been besought in fair, or even pleading, words.

The time is near when another note will be struck, and the first signs of it are appearing. If those who ought to take the loan for the sake of themselves and the country will not do so upon invitation, then there are other and more persuasive ways of addressing the loan slackers. For instance, the Minneapolis district is particularly backward, and the Minnesota State Deposit Board has applied an appropriate remedy. It has adopted a resolution that State funds should be withdrawn from banks able to promote the loan and which fail to do so. Trust funds in general will be safer in Liberty bonds than in any bank, and will return more interest than any bank can afford to. The Maryland Board of Public Works has taken action along the same lines, by putting $450,000 of sinking funds available from the State loans into the Liberty Loan. That action is doubly commendable. It is a practice more honored in the breach than in the observance for public debtors to invest in their own bonds as sinking funds for other bonds of their own. There are cases in which that is safe procedure, but it is not praiseworthy when there is available such an opportunity as the Liberty Loan.

New York is ahead of the country in its work, but it is behind both its previous record and its present quota. Therefore it is necessary to say to New York, as well as to other districts, "This means you!" When only a fifth of the loan is raised and the campaign is half over, it is time for individual appeals. Subscribers are wanted, as well as their dollars. The loan is a failure if it is taken by the banks. To foreigners in general, and Germans in particular, that would seem to mean that the citizenry are not behind the President. That would be as false now as it was when it was first reported, and as later events have proved it to be. The true significance would be that Americans are not accustomed to investing in national loans, and need to be coaxed, educated, compelled.

The man who wishes to free himself from this reproach can put himself behind the President by buying a bond, or several bonds.

MR. BRUCKNER CONFESSES.

Mr. HENRY BRUCKNER, Representative in Congress of the Twenty-second District and Tammany nominee for President of the Borough of the Bronx, has been good enough to explain his vote in the former capacity against tabling the McLemore resolution. He loved free speech. He wanted to have the resolution debated in public.

The sincerity of Mr. BRUCKNER'S explanation, his zeal for the protection of American rights, his ardent Americanism, his total lack of sympathy for Germany may be judged from his own words:

> It wasn't because Americans did not have the right to travel on the high seas, for they surely did, but because McLEMORE felt that one man, ten men, one hundred, or a thousand men should not in any way involve the liberty, prosperity, and the happiness of one hundred million Americans.

Mr. HENRY BRUCKNER has confessed. German papers please copy.

UNIVERSAL TRAINING.

Representative JULIUS KAHN of California, who, though a Republican, led the Administration's forces in Congress in the fight over the selective draft, proposes to include in the new draft bill which must be passed in the next session a provision for the drafting of boys as young as 16 or 17 to receive training which will fit them for a soldier's duty when they reach the age of 21. The subjection of boys as young as 16 to rigorous military training will probably be strongly objected to. A compromise on 18 or 19 may be necessary. But there is no doubt that the institution of a permanent system of universal military training is essential to the safety of this country. The examination of men registered for the draft thus far has resulted in too large a number of rejections for physical disability. In the future it will be necessary to subject the youth of the country to the sort of training which produces healthy men.

The situation when Congress meets will determine whether or not it is wise to take measures thus early for general military education. But even the hysterical pacifist can see, by this time, that if such a system had been established years ago we would not have been so hard pressed when called upon to assemble a large army at short notice. There would have been a million men ready for the call, men whose physical health and mental outlook had been developed by discipline and training. All the energy of the country is now concentrated on the huge task of drafting and training an army. With universal training we would have been prepared, and with an army of young citizens always in training supplies and equipment would have been easier to obtain. The machinery for fitting out a war army would have been ready. It may be too early, in December, to urge the establishment of universal training upon the country, but it is better to be early than late. After this war is finished we must look to the strengthening of our defenses, and of all the defenses of a nation a ready army of trained citizens is the most important.

THE EVE OF THE STORM.

General Hawkins Tells of German War Preparations in 1913.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

During the Summer of 1913 I was at one of the larger hotels of an old German spa city. Not caring for the 7.30 full evening-dress dinner of the English-speaking guests, I applied for and was sent to the midday dining room of the Germans, who were of the better sort of business men engaged in the larger commercial affairs of general commerce, iron, cloths, banking, chemicals and the making of newspapers—one of the latter from Berlin.

My seat was at a table with three, parents and daughter. The father was a large manufacturer of a specialty in iron, was intimate with the Krupp establishment and, a man of rare intelligence. He had been twice to our country and was a close student of our ever varying capacities, the mother was of the model hausfrau order of a well-to-do domestic menage speaking only German, the daughter was not so very young, of very attractive manners, well educated and could talk intelligently upon many subjects. With these and some of their friends I passed an interesting three weeks.

The father had been a good observer, was fond of talking and had something to say worth hearing. Our conversations, generally, were about the more important conditions involved in European every-day life. He was ardently interested in the welfare of his country, proud of its prosperity and its position among the nations. He said Germany had outgrown its territory and was too far from the open waters of the world for its commercial conveniences. He advocated "more Germanys." One had already been started in Africa and there should be another in America, not in North America, but in Brazil, where there was a good German beginning. "Of course, we understand your country might object to our having a foothold in North America, but surely you could not object to our occupation of a part of Brazil in the interest of good government, our commerce and general world prosperity." These conversations usually led to the needs of Germany in Europe which were immediate and pressing, often pointing in the direction of Antwerp, and I was not surprised when I heard that the German Army had invaded Belgium, which, no doubt, was in accord with a plan being worked out not long after the signing of the Berlin Treaty.

In 1914 I was in Brussels a short time before the German invasion, when I became acquainted with two German officers of the reserves who believed they might receive an early call for war service. They had been informed that 900,000 soldiers had been ordered to assemble in the Rheingau for field maneuvers, and that the orders were then being obeyed by the marching of large military units from many directions. They remembered that 150,000 was then the largest number ever before assembled for field practice, and could not understand why so many more were there ordered to the colors unless for war.

Upon reflection I concluded that some thing was intended more than appeared on the surface, and my thoughts went back to the Summer before at Weisbaden, when neither officers nor soldiers were to be seen in the streets, at the Sunday concerts or about public gatherings. I noted this change so far from the usual in Germany, asked the why of it, always without receiving any definite explanation. But two days before leaving Weisbaden an incident occurred which ought to have explained itself. It came in the form of a military display, when there appeared upon the principal street a body of 20,000 troops in full marching order for field service. It was a part of the sly, cunning gathering of the German Army that had been going on for many months, making ready for the savage pounce upon France and Belgium.

REGULARS FOR RANGERS.

Hardened Troops, Anxious to Fight, Held Here as "Park Policemen."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am a regular army Sergeant and wish to call attention to what seems to be a mistake.

The First Squadron of the Seventh United States Cavalry is detailed to take the place of civilians in time of war. That is, 450 regulars are taking the place of about fifty rangers when trained men are needed the worst way. In this squadron there is probably a larger percentage of men with over a year's service than any in the army. Over three-fourths of my troop were in Mexico and were pretty well hardened for any service. We are now cooped up in Yellowstone Park, with no place to transfer and no chance for service. For my part, if I did not have a mother and sisters I would "pull out" and enlist in the Canadian Army. There are 450 more here who feel the same way and do not wish to be park policemen. There are thousands of men who do not wish to go. Why throw away seasoned, willing troops? We are fighting men by trade, and the country can better afford to lose us than the men they are now calling.

Of course, the War Department is busy, but there is no earthly use for us here. In a month we will be snowed in for the Winter and can do very little, if anything, toward training.

Another thing I would like to call your attention to is the enlistment period. I enlisted for three years with the colors and four years on the reserve. When our outfit came back from the Philippines in December, 1915, I intended to buy out and enlist in the Canadian Army, as I thought they were fighting our fight. I could not leave till we were settled on the border, and then the Columbus raid was pulled off. Of course, there was no buying out then. My three years were up while in Mexico and my four years are up now. They will not give me the privilege of reenlisting, as I could then pitch my own outfit and could get foreign service. No, I am compelled to stay on here as a park policeman, and it gets my goat.

If you print this it may come to the eyes of some one who can do something about it.

SERGEANT,
Fort Yellowstone, Wyo.

FOR BOROUGH PRESIDENT.

Franklin Simon Urges the Re-election of Marcus M. Marks.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In these days of mounting prices, increasing costs, and growing Governmental burdens, it is of vital importance for us to elect to public office men whose training and experience will enable them to give us the kind of service we would expect in the management of our own business affairs, and to retain in the public service officials who have given us just that kind of service.

During the last four years the voters of Manhattan—the taxpayers, the rentpayers, and citizens generally—have been fortunate in having as the head of their Borough Government an official possessing not only splendid business ability and experience, but a broad knowedge of Governmental and civic problems.

As President of the Borough of Manhattan, Marcus M. Marks has made an enviable record in his successful business management of the borough's affairs. His administration has been clean, wholesome, free from graft or waste. He saved money in the construction of buildings and in other public work. He reduced operating expenses, but gave greater service. He abolished useless jobs, so that he was able to improve the conditions of underpaid and overworked employes. He secured greater co-operation and better service from public employes by inaugurating mutual welfare work for their recreation and improvement. He played no favorites. He made merit, not political pull, the basis for appointment and promotion and in the transaction of other public business. There has been no "back-door" access to his office, but the front door has been an "open door" to all citizens.

President Marks has not only given a successful business administration, but he has been alive and responsive to all civic needs. His activities in behalf of better labor conditions, the settlement of strikes, free public baths, music in the parks, evening schools, roof play grounds, safety of children in the streets, improved housing conditions, better drainage of sewage, cleaner and better paved streets, new type street signs, and many other projects and improvements for the health, happiness, and convenience of the public, are matters of common knowledge. His record is an open book.

We need four years more of Borough President Marcus M. Marks, and in this I believe every citizen, regardless of party, who will study his record will agree with me.

FRANKLIN SIMON.

THE KNITTER.

("Across and back—across and back again.")

I took the wool, and fifty stitches cast,
The trick I knew so well in childhood's past—
Across and back—across and back again.
The task was pleasant and the rule was plain;
And, as in those old yesterdays, it sped,
Nought new except the needles' amber-red—
An ardent flash against the fleecy gray!
And busy were my thoughts—the knitter's way!
How urgent was the cause—how dear the need—
My very hands knew, too, and doubled speed.
The muffler grew. Its wearer, soon-to-be—
The boyish wearer—seemed to signal me:
"Make haste, make haste, for nights are frosty-keen
In this scarred land where fiends-at-arms have been,
Where we must strike our blows of might-and-main!" . . .
Across and back—across and back again—
The stitches lope away in endless train,
These make the ridge, and those the little plain!
The amber needles dart a fiery light—
The only way that they (and I) can fight!
The needles flash—the wool is gray as moss:
Across and back—across and back—across.
I do no longer see my flying hands—
I see the earth upheaved in those scarred lands!
The trenches in between the ridges show
And battle-fire, in stormy, hurtling glow!
Amidst the danger bright I glimpse a face—
The boy's for whom the needles gleam and race! . . .
*Across and back—across and back—*A Cross?—
O sacred Victory, heal whatever loss!

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF LA FOLLETTE.

"Hatred of Power That Was Not His, Panic Terror of Disappearing From the Public Eye Drove Him Into an Open Opposition."

By GERTRUDE ATHERTON.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The abrupt if ignominious return of Senator La Follette to the front page of the newspapers, and the proud preening of himself as a destructive force at a critical time in the history of his country, his alternations of violent diatribes with ordered reasoning (when on the defensive) must make him far more interesting to the psycho-analyst than in the days when it was possible to admire him.

There was a time, as we all remember, when La Follette's name was on every lip, not in contempt and repudiation as it is today, but because he was the chief hope of a genuine progressive democracy, whose natural destiny was the Presidency of the United States. Wisconsin was, under his dynamic propulsion, the great political "experiment station," a happy phrase coined for a notable factory of ideas both altruistic and practical. At that time La Follette was genial and normal, his egotism no more developed than that of any successful man, although perhaps more naively exhibited; at all events it was not distorted, for he was happy and hopeful and sure of his future. No doubt in those days he really had deep disinterested moments when he dreamed only of ameliorating the lot of the human race, and if at other moments he saw himself at its head holding aloft a gorgeous banner of new device, what harm was done? The achievement of legitimate ambition would have toned him down.

Some day the immediate cause of his collapse at the Philadelphia dinner when seeking nomination on the Progressive ticket will be known to all men. Whatever it was, however, it proved that there was a point both physical and mental beyond which La Follette could not go. He had reached his limit. He was "Presidential timber," but he could not deliver the goods. There were contractors and carpenters on hand panting to do their part, but the loss was in seclusion with the hollowed bits; and all the king's horses and all the king's men couldn't put Humpty Dumpty together again.

No one who follows the political life of the United States will pretend that La Follette has been the same man since his failure to reach the goal toward which he had been straining ever since he realized that he possessed the magnetic potential forces of a leader of men, a leader with new ideas and a commanding intellect. It is the worthiest goal toward which any American can strive, a goal of which all bright little American boys dream, the supreme reward of the greatest of all republics.

No wonder La Follette was disappointed; but it is possible that he still cherished hopes, off and on, until the nominations of 1916; for it takes a very level-headed man indeed, particularly if he is filling the honorable office of a United States Senator, a long while to realize that he is a back number, a "has-been," sure of a place in the history of his State, but of no more than passing mention in the history of the nation.

Here was the crucial test. A brilliant mind and a gift for leadership will only carry a man just so far unless there is character to resupply exhausted energies beset with disappointments, keep them stable and balanced and on the straight track.

When the older Senator Hale found that his hour had struck and that his State would never send him to the Senate of the United States again, he made a farewell round of calls in Washington, bearing himself to the last as the suave, humorous man-of-the-world that Washington had known for half a century. La Follette said to him, "Well, Hale, when my time comes I hope I may retire as gracefully as you have done."

I wonder if La Follette ever thinks of that interview. True, he would say the cases are not parallel. Senator Hale never amused himself with the delusion that he was a great man, and I remember he said to me once, "Men in public life are divided into just two classes—those who want to be President and those who do not. I do not."

At all events, La Follette has sat there in the Senate through at least four years of surpassing bitterness, opposed to a Democratic majority, watching Wilson—a mere schoolmaster when his own star was effulgent—grow to be the recognised leader of the nation, assured of a commanding place in history, winning the confidence of the Allies, and, an almost prouder conquest, the hatred of Germany; sat there knowing that if he kept his oath of allegiance his opportunity to serve his country was limited to casting his vote on the right side—he—La Follette!—once so convinced of his supreme destiny that it became an obsession from which he has never recovered. Fate had swept Wilson into the White House, for, no doubt, the full period of the war, and the same jade had condemned her old favorite to a comparative obscurity. That she condemned a few other brilliant and able men to a like portion afforded no consolation.

There was La Follette's chance. Of course his test was one of the most crucial to which an ambitious man has ever been subjected. No simple, natural, nerve-titillating patriotism was demanded of him, such as shouldering a rifle and tramping off to Plattsburg to test the heroic qualities of his legs and stomach. Not even to desert vast business interests and help the President reorganize the country on a war basis. Nothing simple, spectacular, or even decently public; nothing in fact but to sit in the Senate Chamber and vote his country past the quicksands as speedily as possible; perhaps talk sense and expedient patriotism into thick alien heads in Wisconsin.

It was a bitter pill, this simple patriotic rôle, forced by that jade Destiny, who for so long had led him upward by a sloping flower-strewn road; then taken a whim and abandoned him. It was a bitter pill and he did not swallow it. He choked. The blood went to his head, poisoned blood, and it has remained there ever since.

It is not difficult to imagine the morbid condition of this man's mind, sitting there at his desk in a chamber growing more historic every moment, brooding on his inexplicably deflected star, hating Wilson with black Teutonic energy, convinced that he himself has the greatest brain in the United States, a mighty instrument designed for power, for domination, but as individually negligible as that of the least of all those Senators he so honestly despises. He had his chance at last to prove himself a great man—in his own eyes and in those near enough to see, even if the world forgot him; but the glittering metal of his character was what the miners call "fool's gold," and the consuming bitterness of his soul was the acid that devoured it.

Then his unrestrained ego, fed to the proportions of a Frankenstein by that disappointed vanity which blindly seeks compensation in placing the blame everywhere but on one's self, went on the rampage. Hatred of power that was not his, panic terror of disappearing from the public eye, drove him into an open opposition that at least assured him of notoriety, and of the illusion of power. He was still a force in the land—he would show them—he could cripple the Government if he chose, round up all the freaks and fakers and pests with which this country more than any other is cursed; to say nothing of the deliberate traitors and plotters; goad them into noisy acts—leading the pack with his own shrill yelp—that would dampen patriotism at home and create false hopes in Germany and Russia that would at least add disastrously to the casualties of the Allies and defer their ultimate victory. He might—who could say?—create a revolution; no one knows what Burrlike dreams have been buzzing in that turgid brain of weakened inhibitions, imbibing daily draughts of bitterness. He knows that it will be a long while before the Senate "gets round to his impeachment—it is too busy; every moment of its time is needed for the more immediate business of war. He knows that a man can go far in this easy-going country without condign punishment; and the excitement of running the danger zone and a certain measure of revenge compose all of best there is still to be found in his broken life—unless—who knows?—it may be his destiny after all to rule—that the apparent whim of fate was a mere halt in a progress leading to far greater ends—Who knows? Why not? Why not?

If this man has put himself in Germany's pocket that is a mere incident, another opportunity to gratify his hatred and spleen. His course would have been the same in any case. For, to repeat, La Follette has a poisoned brain. The sooner he is relegated to private life the better for him and the United States.

THE REAL LINCOLN.

A Further Statement of the Case Against the Barnard Statue.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have been deeply interested in your articles on the real Lincoln in connection with the discussion of the Barnard statue, and especially pleased with the letter of "M. V. N. C." in last Sunday's TIMES. I am no art critic, and, perhaps, cannot appreciate the artistic points said to be brought out by that statue, but when standing before it and patiently studying it, the result was to produce in me a feeling of profound sorrow that such a grotesque caricature should ever have been made of the man whom I knew personally and loved so well.

It was my good fortune to see and meet Mr. Lincoln under many different and some peculiar circumstances—public, private, social, and official—and to know him as well as a young man could know such a great man, so much his senior. My father had the honor of an intimate personal acquaintance and warm friendship with the civil war President, and with my father I had the opportunity of visiting him and being able to study his appearance at leisure, and from many sides.

It is true that his figure was tall, lean, possibly lank, and, in a sense, "ungainly." Yet with all this, he had a dignity of bearing, a purposeful, self-possessed, and natural pose that, to me, not only demanded admiration but inspired reverence on almost every occasion. In intimate association, the movements of his body and the gestures of his arms and hands were so pleasing and kind that all impressions of ungainliness were swept away. As I stood before the Barnard statue another feeling came to me, that of indignation, that the hands that had so often clasped mine with such friendly warmth should ever have been put into the form and position there shown.

In decrying the Barnard statue, it has been said that Mr. Lincoln never was slouchy. It was very rare that he ever let down to that extent. I saw him once when he did, but it was not his fault. It came about in this way:

One night the White House stables were burned and the President's carriage horses were lost. Early the next morning, it would seem, Mr. Lincoln wished to pay a visit somewhere, and had sent some one out to get a public conveyance. Whoever was sent must have chosen the first cab he met. I happened to be passing the White House just as the President drove out of the east gate. The cab in which he sat was one of those very low, one-horse, open vehicles of old Washington, a few of which still remain.

This particular cab did not look as if it had been painted since the time of General Jackson's Administration. The horse looked as if he had been fed on half rations ever since the war began. The old, white-haired negro driver wore a dirty blue coat and a one-time black high hat so battered from long usage that it looked as if it might have been a present from General Washington. On the exceedingly low-back seat was crouched the tall frame of Mr. Lincoln, all alone. The worn-out springs of the old cushion had sunk so low that his knees came up nearly on a level with his chin. It was impossible for him to sit up straight. His chin did not exactly rest upon his breast, but his high silk hat leaned forward at an angle of about 45 degrees. There was no lap robe to cover his long limbs. The, at other times, dignified President of the United States could hardly have been placed in a more slouchy position.

Would it not be just as proper, and as artistic, to perpetuate that picture in bronze and call it Abraham Lincoln as to call the Barnard statue a true representation of our beloved civil war President?

May that statue never go to Lenox, but rather be melted down, and made into bullets for our army in France, and I promise that my son, of the ammunition train, will gladly transport them to the front.

For the Early Volunteers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am glad to learn that "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," has done us the honor of repatriation—we citizens of the United States who have been fighting with the Allies for the last three years. Now, why not a decoration granted by the Senate, as a tribute to those who have helped to stay the blond beast by enlisting in the Legions of Democracy?

RED CROSS TO SEEK 1,500,000 MEMBERS

Will Soon Start Campaigns in New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut.

KITCHENER FUND IS $27,000

Capt. Dugmore of British Army to Lecture Here for Benefit of Relief Fund.

The Atlantic Division of the American Red Cross, the headquarters of which is in New York, is about to begin a campaign to increase the Red Cross membership in this part of the country to at least 1,500,000. The States in the jurisdiction of the Atlantic Division are New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut. The campaign will be waged in one locality at a time. The campaign in Newark ended last Wednesday, and it is expected that when the results are made public it will show that more than 100,000 persons have joined the Red Cross in Newark and vicinity.

In February of this year the total membership of the Red Cross in the United States was about 200,000, and today it is approximately 4,000,000. The Atlantic Division now has an enrolled membership of about 800,000, representing 234 chapters in New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut.

The campaign to double the Atlantic Division total was mapped out by Albert W. Staub, the Assistant Manager of the Division. Mr Staub established chapters and auxiliaries in all parts of the territory and formed the scheme of organization which is now being followed by George O. Tamblyn, the Director of Red Cross Membership Extension. To date Mr. Tamblyn has directed about forty membership campaigns in as many cities and towns, and in five months these campaigns, the one just ended in Newark not included, have brought in 200,000 new members and added $350,000 to the Red Cross war funds.

Campaigns have already been made in Trenton, Utica, Binghamton, Rome, Ilion, and other places. In Utica, where the population is 86,000, more than 22,000 new members were secured. Rome with a population of 22,000, enrolled 9,000, while in six cities of less than 15,000 the average membership increase was 4,000.

Short Drives Most Effective.

The membership campaigns conducted by the Atlantic Division are intensive, it having been learned from experience that more can be accomplished by concentrating the drive in a week than by spreading it over a period of two or three weeks. A few days, necessarily, are needed for preparatory work, but even including the preliminaries the Red Cross campaigners have remained in no city except Trenton for a longer period than ten days.

The Red Cross, through its Town and Country Nursing Service, has chosen the Richmond School of Social Economy at Richmond, Va., as one of the training centres at which scholarships in public health nursing will be offered this Fall.

To encourage trained nurses to take these courses and quality for public health work, a series of scholarships of $250 each have been established at various schools throughout the country. The Red Cross is seeking especially to interest nurses in the South in these courses, since the demand for public health nurses in the Southern States is far in excess of the supply. Not only must applicants be registered nurses, but they must also be women who have had experience in the field or others of unusual ability and initiative.

Unlike the trained nurse serving in a hospital or under the immediate direction of a physician on private cases, these public health nurses work independently under local organization in cities and in rural communities, handling problems in health and sanitation which require expert attention. They are employed in many cities and States by the public health authorities. Fifty public health nurses have been assigned for duty by the American Red Cross to the zones around national army cantonments, National Guard camps, and naval bases, where they work under the Red Cross sanitary directors in cooperation with the local State and Federal health authorities.

The Work at Richmond.

The work at the Richmond School of Social Economy will include courses in prevention of disease, rural health problems, anti-tuberculosis work, public health nursing, field work with public health nursing agencies of Richmonod, biology and bacteriology, diet, and the farmers' budget. The courses will be in charge of Director Henry H. Hibbs, who received his doctorate at Columbia University.

The sum of $250 is not sufficient, of course, to cover the expenses of the training, but a nurse receiving a scholarship will be privileged, when necessary, to utilize the student loan fund of the Red Cross to an amount equal to the scholarship.

A Red Cross Home Service Institute has also been established at the Richmond school by Dr. T. J. Riley, National Director of Home Service Institutes. These institutes are being established in connection with twenty or thirty schools and universities for the training or Red Cross volunteers who wish to assist in the "Home Service" of the American Red Cross for families of the United States soldiers and sailors.

French War Orphans.

The American Society for the Relief of French War Orphans, of which William D. Guthrie was the President and which has been caring for more than 18,000 French children who have been orphaned as a result of the war, has been absorbed by the American Red Cross, and has turned over to the Red Cross all of its national machinery, as well as all undistributed funds in its possession. Hereafter the society requests all persons who have in the past assisted it in providing relief for the children of France to send their contributions to the American Red Cross in Washington.

Under the agreement entered into by the society and the Red Cross the Red Cross agrees to continue for a period of six months from Oct. 1 last the assistance which up to that time the American Society was extending to the orphans through various French committees and other organizations. In the event the French law known as "pupilles de la nation" becomes operative before the expiration of six months it shall then become optional on the part of the Red Cross to continue or discontinue the contributions through the mediums named. The future course of the Red Cross, it is pointed out, will depend upon the funds at the disposal of the organization.

Of Small Account.

"Over 2,000,000 iron crosses have been given out by the German authorities." We doubt if the German soldiers place any great value on these crosses. We recall a good-natured old German who spent the declining years of his life in Toledo. One day, with due modesty, he showed the writer of this paragraph an iron cross he had won in the Franco-Prussian war. "You may have it," he said quietly, "it means nothing to me."—Toledo Blade.

25,000 SOLDIERS BLINDED IN ONE EYE

3,000 More Totally Sightless and 200 Who in Addition Have Lost Arms or Legs.

HELP IS URGENTLY NEEDED

A. B. F. B. Appeals for $2,500,000 for Special Relief That Red Cross and Governments Cannot Furnish.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Statistics furnished by the French and British authorities to the American-British-French-Belgian Permanent Blind Relief War Fund of 590 Fifth Avenue, New York, show that there are in England, France, and Belgium more than 3,000 soldiers who have been totally blinded in the war and nearly 25,000 blinded in one eye, a large proportion of whom will eventually lose the sight of the other as the result of shock or of the wounds themselves. In addition there are in France alone nearly 200 who, besides losing both eyes, have also suffered, by explosions or amputation, the loss of both arms or both legs, or a leg and a hand, and in many cases have been rendered stone deaf into the bargain.

Consider for a moment what this means. Try to imagine the tragedy, the horror of it! But you cannot; the thing is impossible. To understand it at all one must be here, in the midst of it, seeking what there is to see in the earnest desire to help the sufferers and alleviate their torture of mind and body, and undergo one's self the anguish of such a quest, undertaken in order that we Americans may be privileged to minister to the victims stricken in this particularly horrible manner who have fallen by the way along the Via Dolorosa that leads to the salvation of the world.

This is a situation with which no Government, no Red Cross can cope satisfactorily. It is not possible for them to devote to each individual sufferer the care and tenderness which are necessary to lead him up from his depth of suffering, hopelessness, and despair to renewed hope and send him forth into his new world of darkness firm of tread and resolution equipped to do a man's work and provided with tools and materials to enable him to hold his own again. But this is the task which the A. B. F. B. undertook two and a half years ago, and to which it has devoted its sole and constant energies with a large measure of success, thanks to the generosity of the American public.

Let me tell just what we require in order to carry on this constructive work to which its founders and their voluntary staff are devoting their own money, time, and lives:

1. We want 30 generous-hearted Americans each to adopt for life one blinded soldier with both arms or hands amputated; $5,000 set aside by each donor will more than provide the pension of 1,200 francs per year required, which will double that given by the French Government.

2. We want 150 generous-hearted Americans each to adopt for life one blinded and mutilated soldier who can do little or no work and has a family to support; $3,500 put aside by each donor will provide the pension of 900 francs per year necessary.

3. We want 100 generous-hearted Americans to send us $600 each to purchase cottages for 200 blinded and mutilated men, who are included in Nos. 1 and 2.

4. We want 2,500 generous-hearted Americans each to contribute $200 for the purpose of sending 2,500 blinded re-educated men to their own homes and give them an opportunity to make a new start in life and earn their own living.

5. We want $500,000 for our permanent fund, to provide for our after care project and to enable us to maintain additional pensioners.

6. We want $2,000,000 toward our general fund to carry on the work of re-education, to run our workshops, to keep up our markets for raw materials and our exchanges, to maintain our Industrial School and our Superior School, and to enlarge and improve our schools for future requirements.

Any Americans blinded in the war will, of course, benefit to the fullest extent and be re-educated to fit them for any walk in life to which they are adaptable by inclination, knowledge, or previous occupation.

Having made known specifically just what our needs are, it is proper to tell just what the A. B. F. B. has done.

Since we began our work of mercy Feb. 18, 1916, to date the fund's receipts through letters of appeal, collection boxes, dime banks, subscription books, &c., have amounted to more than $635,000, which has been disposed of as follows:

|---|---|
| Remitted to France, (1,221,530 francs) | $211,683.05 |
| Remitted to England, (£12,129) | 57,628.69 |
| Invested in French bonds, to provide for installments for permanent relief; for re-education and for sending home blinded men; for pensions; for the maintenance of our two institutions, the Superior School of Re-education, 27 Boulevard Victor Hugo, Neuilly, Paris, and the Industrial School at 35 Boulevard du Chateau, Neuilly, Paris, and to keep up our bureau and warehouse, 26 Avenue Raphael, Paris, with a full stock of raw materials for the re-educated blinded men | 196,628.47 |
| | $465,940.21 |
| Balance in National City Bank | $130,436.83 |
| In hands of various local Treasurers and committees, (not yet transferred to New York) | 33,744.45 |
| | $160,181.28 |

Not one cent of the money contributed by the public directly for the blind soldiers has been deducted for the fund's administrative expenses, which are defrayed from other sources.

Thanks to the liberality of the British public, who have subscribed $2,500,000 to care for their blinded, there will be no further need for the A. B. F. B. to help St. Dunstan's, the great institution in London under the direction of Sir Arthur Pearson, (himself blind,) except to contribute 10 per cent. from our general fund for the after care of its graduates. The French, however, have been too occupied with the war on their own territory and their resources have been too severely taxed for it to be possible for them adequately to aid their blinded.

A final word to your readers: I should like to emphasize that the blinded soldiers who stumble from the battlefield, having made the supreme sacrifice of their sight so that those they left behind might never witness the scenes that froze their blood and so that all peoples might develop in freedom and peace for all time, want neither pity nor charity. They ask only a chance to take their places again among their fellow-men equipped to earn their own living at an honest trade. You and yours, whom they have helped to save, owe help to them in your turn and are glad of the opportunity to extend it. Do it right now!

NEW WAR RELIEF SYSTEM.

Red Cross Establishes Warehouses in France to Serve Our Troops.

The American Red Cross announced last night that it has established a chain of thirteen warehouses in France to serve the American troops under General Pershing, the hundreds of war hospitals behind the battle lines, and the thousands of refugees and other war sufferers in France. Cablegrams describing the operation of this new war relief distribution system were received yesterday by the Red Cross War Council, of which Henry P. Davison is the Chairman.

Six of the new Red Cross warehouses have been located in Paris, which serves as the centre of the distribution system. Ten other warehouses are located in departments outside the capital, and from these supplies are distributed by motor trucks, wagons, and every available means of transportation to hospitals and other institutions.

Approximately 15,000 tons of materials are now being distributed monthly from these warehouses by the Red Cross Commission. A large proportion of these supplies is received directly from the United States and is forwarded by the Red Cross Supply Service from chapter workrooms and from relief societies affiliated with the Red Cross. Owing to the shortage of ocean tonnage, large quantities of supplies have been purchased by the Red Cross Commission in France.

Plans are now under way to increase the warehouse facilities of the commission at French seaports. At present these are limited, but as soon as additional storage space can be provided, greater quantities of supplies from the United States can be handled. Every kind of medical supplies, drugs, and surgical instruments is carried in stock in the warehouses for the use of hospital staffs. Foodstuffs, clothing, building materials, plowing implements, and tools also are being imported in large quantities for the assistance of French refugees.

American college men, many of whom formerly served as drivers in the American Ambulance, are directing the work, while the force of workmen is recruited from veteran French soldiers and Belgian men no longer fit for military duty. The French Government and the municipal authorities of Paris are co-operating with the commission in obtaining the labor and maintaining the transportation service.

CHINESE MOSLEMS FOLLOW US IN WAR

Look to America for Guidance, Abu Bekr, Leading Priest, Writes President Wilson.

WANT GERMANY HUMBLED

But Never Cease to Pray for Speedy Peace—Sultan of Turkey, Despite His Wisdom, Misled.

PEKING, Sept. 13, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Abu Bekr, the leading Mohammedan priest in North China, has prepared a letter to President Wilson on behalf of the Chinese Mohammedans, assuring him of their loyalty to the Allies and denouncing the German Emperor and the Sultan of Turkey.

The position of the Chinese Mohammedans in the present war is of special interest, because of the persistent campaign German agitators have kept up in China to prejudice the Mohammedans against the Allies. In many of the western districts of China, where Mohammedans predominate, the German propagandists are reported to have been successful in persuading the natives that this is a religious war. The German campaign unquestionably has been a failure in the less remote sections, where the public is reached by the foreign and Chinese press.

In his letter, Abu Bekr urges President Wilson to advise China wisely in its weakness and enable it to settle its domestic difficulties and bring harmony and comfort to the masses. He also urges the President to exercise his influence in hastening the end of the war, which is costing so many lives.

Still a Chance for the Kaiser.

"The German Emperor," Abu Bekr says, "became great in his pride for conquest and in the possession of a great army and navy until he looked upon other rulers with the eye of envy and hatred, and he did not scruple to add new horrors to war, although the use of the submarine was forbidden by international law. If he should, however, cease this sort of warfare and make peace with other nations, God might still preserve his Government, and others might then look upon him with favor and ask God to grant him mercy. In this prayer Moslems, Jews, and Christians might join. Now is the time when he should repent. Now is the fitting opportunity for expressing his regret.

"But as for the Sultan of Turkey, in inverse proportion as he has wisdom, and knowledge, and power, he has not shown the least judgment in the direction of the affairs of his kingdom. The present crisis of affairs in the great world, although it might strike fear among those who love deceit and continue to use flattery with him, should not have dismayed him. His flatterers were not sincere toward God. If he would drive away these evil counselors, welcoming those who were sincere, the true lovers and patriots of religion, then, perchance, his kingdom would be restored to peace.

Will Follow United States.

"But as for your excellent country, the United States of America, it has now cut off friendship and relationship with Germany and openly declared war, and we know that this will result in nothing else than the destruction of the pride of Germany. Since Mohammed the Prophet (upon him be peace) has declared, 'Tread upon the proud until he forget his pride,' therefore we continue the war until they repent. But, alas, some think that the war will last a long time, which may God prevent. Surely, if the war continues, this will not be in accordance with your noble principles of humanity. Alas, our Chinese Republic has already been compelled to do what your honorable Government has done; but we are persuaded that our country is weak in its condition and disturbed internally by matters which occupy its attention.

"Now such conditions are not in accordance with the will of the Creator. Very frequently our Chinese Republic is glad to follow the example of your noble Government, just as the members of the body do its head. So, if you will give the word, we will follow. If you are patient we will continue to be patient. We do not ask anything from you save the favor of using your influence to quench the fires of war in the world, and so you will secure everlasting remembrance. As God says in the Koran: 'Is the reward of good anything else than lasting good?' He also says: 'Verily, the mercy of God is near to those that are good.'

"We therefore turn to you and hope that you will arrange and give us good advice for the future affairs of our republic, in order that prosperity and safety and peace may come to us speedily."

'NEW YORK GUARD' MUSTERS 10,600 MEN

Sherrill Is Organizing a New Militia Force on a Business Basis.

HOME DEFENSE UNITS JOIN

Chamber of Commerce in Every City Where There Is an Armory Called On for Advice.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Oct. 13.—The chief duty which confronted Adjt. Gen. Charles H. Sherrill when he assumed the duties of his new office on Sept. 1 was the organization of the New York Guard, a task which is now well-nigh completed and which reflects great credit upon the State's chief military official. The New York Guard is to occupy the place of the National Guard which has been taken into the Federal service. There are now 10,600 men in the New York Guard, composed of 400 officers, 5,800 men who enlisted directly into the guard, and 4,900 men from the various Home Defense units who have already expressed their desire to join the new organization.

The task of enrolling these men in the New York Guard is progressing rapidly. Only a few days ago the Rochester units were taken in, and others will follow as soon as the necessary details can be arranged. In the new organization are many men who have seen previous service with the National Guard, and who are thus doing their bit for their country, and, although remaining near their homes, are doing the home drudgery of the war.

Just at this time the State is spending $150,000 a month on the New York Guard which is guarding 95 miles of aqueduct from the Ashokan Dam to New York City, and 500 miles of canals, railroads, &c. This work is being done by 3,000 men, and among the number not one who has dependents is serving, for the reason that when it was found that a man was on duty who had left dependents behind him, he was sent home and his place taken by some one who had less responsibility. The privates are paid at the rate of $1.25 per day.

Waiting List of Volunteers.

In the New York Guard are many business men, lawyers, clerks, stenographers, and other young men with good positions. Obviously it is economically unsound for such men to be guarding a stretch of the State's lines of communication while their other interests suffer. Adjt. Gen. Sherrill realized this when the guard was being formed, and he promptly called for volunteers who would do permanent patrol duty. He needed 2,000 of them, and last week the number was not only filled, but there is now a waiting list of over 400 volunteers.

When General Sherrill took command of the military forces of the State he sought the advice of the Chambers of Commerce throughout the State.

"In view of the fact that this office," said General Sherrill, "expends nearly $2,000,000 a year on matters of administration, which, in my opinion, should have the best business advice, I have established a division in this office which will deal with Chambers of Commerce throughout the State, which is something entirely new and was indorsed by the National Chamber of Commerce at Atlantic City a fortnight ago and recommended to every State in the Union.

"I am asking the Chambers of Commerce in every city where there is an armory to advise me how that building can be best and most cheaply conducted. I have asked the New York Chamber of Commerce to appoint a committee of five, which they have done, for the purpose of investigating and reporting their recommendations to me upon Camp Whitman and the State camp at Peekskill.

"I have asked the Citizens' Preparedness Association, which put upon the streets of New York City that great parade of 140,139 in May, 1916, to investigate the State Arsenal, at 463 Seventh Avenue, a warehouse for which $630,000 has been offered to us, and they have appointed a committee of seven of the leading citizens of New York, who are now working on this problem, and will make their recommendations as how best to run that important piece of business."

General Sherrill also called to his aid two experts. One is a former National Guard officer, Captain Howard Caswell Smith of New York City, in charge of enrolling Home Defense units into the guard. The other is Edward G. Miner, President and General Manager of the Pfandler Company of Rochester. The work of Mr. Miner, who, by the way, isn't a military man, and, therefore, one of the few about the office of the Adjutant General who doesn't wear a uniform, is to take charge of the task of putting the armories of the State on a business basis. There are approximately 100 armories in the State, valued at $25,000,000. It costs $900,000 a year to maintain these armories. Mr. Miner's job is to find a way so the armories can be run just as a good business man would conduct his business.

Mr. Miner is collecting advice concerning the armories of the State from business men who live in the cities where the armories are situated. They are in a position to have full knowledge of all local conditions. It is not the intention to conduct the inquiry merely for the purpose of lopping off a head here and there, but it will show when the task is completed whether it is necessary to have three building superintendents and three janitors for one building, as one of the State armories had just prior to the time the National Guard went into the Federal service.

State Must Provide Rifles.

When the Home Defense units were first organized it was expected that rifles would be provided for them by the Federal Government, but this has proved impossible, and the expense and responsibility have fallen upon the State. It is the purpose of Governor Whitman to provide an armed force to comply not only with the constitutional requirement that there shall be constantly maintained in the State an armed force of 10,000 men. This force, the New York Guard, will be apportioned throughout the State and the quotas made up after careful consideration of the population of the counties, the necessity for guarding certain points, and other details.

Members of the Home Defense units who are unable or unwilling to enlist in the depot units shall by their commanding officer be passed to the Home Defense Reserve, unarmed by the State, but they will continue to drill and will serve their community in time of an emergency. To this reserve will belong all Home Defense units which own their arms and which have not gone into the New York Guard.

The State will shortly be prepared to equip with rifles members of the guard. Such units as have already uniformed themselves will be in an advantageous position to enter the guard. Where no armory exists in the immediate neighborhood of such new guard unit as may enlist with the guard the commanding officer will arrange for temporary drilling facilities.

Speaking of the decision of the Federal Government to take away the regimental numerals and merge several regiments into one under a new number General Sherrill says that the protests sent to Governor Whitman by veteran associations of regiments, accentuates the wisdom of the decision of the Governor "that every old organization of this State should have its traditions kept alive by a unit of the new guard, bearing the same number and located at the old armory. If we did not put a Sixty-ninth Regiment of the New York Guard into the Sixty-ninth Armory, how in the world could the traditions of that regiment be carried along now that the Federal Government has taken the numeral [illegible] from the men which they have put into the [illegible]"

GERMAN AIR CHAMPION PRAISES BRITISH FLIERS

Richthofen Says Their Daredevil Tactics Make Them Formidable Antagonists.

High tribute to the daring displayed by his British enemies is paid by the German champion air fighter, Major Baron von Richthofen, in an interview with Baron Ompteda, a German novelist, printed in Die Woche of Berlin, and summarized in The London Daily Mail of Sept. 21.

According to a report sent out from Berlin and printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES of July 22, Major Richthofen had brought down sixty-two enemy airplanes up to the first week in July, thus far outstripping the record of the late Captain Boelke, who conquered forty opponents. Lieutenant von Richthofen, a brother of the German champion, is reported to have brought down twenty-four machines up to Sept. 1.

According to the description of his private headquarters on the western front, Major von Richthofen concentrates most of his thought and energies upon the British Flying Corps. The walls of his lair are decorated with trophies from British planes, such as propeller parts, the emblematic red, white, and blue circles cut from wings, remains of machine guns wrecked when his victims crashed to earth, and other tokens of the conqueror's prowess. Richthofen is filled with lively respect for British antagonists.

"I am a great believer," he said, "in taking and retaining the offensive. Airmen must attack. Once we are jockeyed into the defensive, it is devilish difficult to turn the tables. Above all else, we have to outwit the English in this respect. Their airmen are simply daredevilry personified. They hardly ever take time to study the situation, but are always ready, even under most unfavorable conditions, to attack. This often results in their coming woefully to grief, but their intrepidity makes them foes to be respected. Their battle tactics differ conspicuously from the French, who adhere to the more conservative rule of attacking only when in superior force or when conditions are unusually favorable. It has been my experience that the English are not attacking now with as much vigor as hitherto. I attribute that to the circumstance that their experienced flyers, their best men, have been lost, and the newer and younger airmen have not yet had sufficient practice in actual fighting.

"There is no room for 'soft' methods in air fighting. I often attack at 300 yards, but can, of course, achieve better results at 150. Airmen cannot be governed by regard for anything but victory. Above all, they must not indulge in any sentimentality. That's something entirely unknown in an English antagonist. Indeed, he would laugh at such a thing. To give way to wishy-washy thoughts with an enemy's machine gun blazing away at you at close range can easily cost you your life."

Richthofen is 25 years old, of medium height, and muscular build. He has blue eyes and fair hair, and is described as being so shy that he creates the impression of being able to blush easily. A simple Lieutenant of Uhlans in 1912, he has risen in rank with unusual rapidity. Richthofen's battleplane is said to bear many scars inflicted by enemy bullets.

GERMAN ARMY COURTS TERRORIZE ALSACE

Sentences Totaling 5,000 Years Imposed for Speaking Favorably of France.

FRENCH FRONT IN FRANCE, Sept. 26, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Fresh evidence of the German campaign of terrorization in Alsace-Lorraine comes to hand every day. Since the beginning of hostilities, German courts-martial sitting in the annexed provinces have inflicted sentences totaling five thousand years' imprisonment on residents of Alsace and Lorraine whose sole offense has been the expression of opinions favorable to France. All classes and all districts have suffered.

From the time when Alsace and Lorraine were annexed by Germany in 1871 up to the outbreak of the war in 1914 no fewer than five hundred thousand of the inhabitants of the provinces, according to official figures, migrated to France. Immediately after the declaration of war, it is said here, nearly every one in the provinces of real Alsatian or Lorraine origin who could find a way to do so made a hurried departure over the frontier line. Hundreds of those who remained owing to their inability to leave in time were seized as suspects and sent to prison or internment camps, where they have been kept in confinement three years.

While the migration was in progress the younger and more daring spirits among the men of Alsace and Lorraine took the still more serious step of joining the French Army. More than thirty thousand of them have fought beneath the Tricolor since the war began. Many of them by their heroism have gained rank, while numbers of their comrades have made the great sacrifice. The two provinces have supplied prominent military leaders, among whom no fewer than five Generals have sealed their patriotism by dying a soldier's death in fighting the Germans. These five were Generals Sibille, Dupuy, Dion, Trumelet-Faber, and Stirn.

ART NOTES

At the Daniel Galleries.

Twenty-one painters of the modern group are at the Daniel Galleries, ranging from the most expertly sincere improvisations of Man Ray to the not less sincere figure subjects of Kenneth Hayes Miller. The public has yet thoroughly to realize the fact that the "moderns" are as various within their group as their predecessors were within their larger circle. In such a comprehensive exhibition as the present it is possible to make close discriminations and find your place by your instinctive preferences. You may, for example, find yourself in sympathy with Samuel Halpert's methods of organization, the bold architecture of horizontals and perpendiculars, the heavy color that suits the heavy frame, the recognizable flower and other forms that fit into a constructive plan without veiling it; you may say to yourself that this is the truth as generation after generation has seen it, only dressed in the mode of the present decade and with a rich personal note of style. You may like in a different way the bunch of flowers in a vase by Gus Mager. You see what is French in both paintings. One is the reasoned order and inspired space composition of the wide Paris scene, the other is the piquancy of the bouquet that welcomes you on your hotel mantelshelf, the pink curtains and embroidered linen of a well-conducted French hostelry, all that evokes charm and daintiness from the gregarious atmosphere. Man Ray's "Still Life" may please you deeply by its color march from dark red to lemon yellow, without a note of discord; you may like the forms he has placed casually on his canvas with a youthful emphasis on the bottle form and a funny bluster over making the necessary scroll of pale color in the lower right corner spell "sec." The bottle and the sec may strike you as a little stupid, but what he has done with them is so amazingly intelligent as to blot out all ineptitudes of wit. Then you may turn to the companioning canvas, a very delicate experiment in color which he calls after a modern fashion, "Symbolization No. 1, Bermuda." Apparently a sailboat named "Elsa" sat for the symbolization, but one cannot be sure, nor does it matter, except that the artist has introduced the name "Elsa" where it fails to help the artistic effect. If you feel that the design is tight and the beautiful color ever so little prim and the whole picture too circumscribed and bounded to give the imagination any run, you may reflect that it would be admirable on a tile or printed on a fabric. The other pictures are as interesting in many instances as these; some are more readily referred to familiar traditions, other are greater curiosities for the exploring mind; but if you discover in such an exhibition four canvases that give you a sense of your own direction among the moderns you may as well go away like the little boy in the nursery rhyme "to come again another day." The collection is on view until Nov. 6.

Opening Exhibition at Snedecor Galleries.

The new Snedecor Galleries are walking in their accustomed ways, with pictures of long-recognized merit comprising their opening exhibition. Winslow Homer is there and no room can be dull inhabited by one of his seashore pictures. This is called "Forebodings," a group of women and children pressing together in a compact mass as they look out to sea. The composition is monumental and the color as fresh and pearly as Homer knew how to make it with a water-color brush in his hand. A George Fuller "Interior and Figures" is characteristically mysterious in tone and mystic in suggestion; Emil Carlsen celebrates the approaching holiday with flaming pumpkins; Eastman Johnson appears in a new rôle with a small deathbed scene, a study in color and light, of astonishing competency and freedom; C. D. Currier speaks of Munich and of Hals in the same breath with the head of a laughing boy; Charles Melville Dewey is at his most serene with a flat autumnal landscape, as blonde as wheat; a good Inness, a Ryder, characteristic Blakelocks, a Homer D. Martin, are among the features of the exhibition which lasts through the month.

Lady Drummond's Collection.

It is reported that one of the important auction sales of the present season will be that of Lady Drummond's collection under the auspices of the American Art Association, an event that will stir the pulse of collectors, as this Montreal treasure has been famous for many years. Among the old masters are four portraits of men by Frans Hals, an "Interior" by Pieter de Hooch, a "Toreador" by Goya, and there is a fine woman's portrait by Gainsborough. There is also a large and fine representation of the "Men of 1830" with a Corot of particular importance.

The American Art Association will sell on Monday the furnishings and pictures of the late James V. Parker at his residence, 233 Madison Avenue. The little collection of paintings includes three portraits of dogs.

"Hudson River School" at the Public Library.

The Prints Division of the New York Public Library adds its item to the list of exhibitions brought about by the completion of the Catskill Aqueduct. In Room 112 of the Library's Central Building (Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street,) there have been assembled a number of engravings after paintings by artists of the so-called "Hudson River School." These engravings emphasize the exhibition of original paintings of the "School" now on view at the Metropolitan Museum, and amplify it to the extent that they include reproductions of paintings not in the museum's collection.

The art of an interesting period in this country is thus illustrated in works by A. B. Durand, Thomas Doughty, J. W. Casilear, Thomas Cole, J. F. Kensett, J. F. Cropsey, Whittredge, Bierstadt, and others. But these prints tell us also of the days when artists such as Smillie, Jones, Hinshelwood and others were engraving on steel plates these reproductions of paintings which dealt with scenes in our own lands. In the paintings, and the engraved copies of them—of this mid-nineteenth-century period there is a refreshing concern with American subjects, the daily life of farmers, flatboatmen, trappers, Indians, "the beauties of our land, both in its wilder Western aspects and in the calmer beauty of rural scenery in the more closely inhabited East."

Comparisons Show the Value of CONCENTRATION

From October, 1916, to June, 1917, a boy of 16 made the following record:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Plane Geometry | 88 | Algebra I. | 74 |
| English I. | 60 | Algebra II. | 74 |
| English II. | 60 | Cicero | 68 |
| French II. | 60 | Advanced Latin Composition | 62 |
| Physiography | 76 | Physics | 81 |
| Chemistry | 98 | | |

The same student spent three years in a well-known preparatory school in this city, and during that time passed only two subjects.

This is only one of many excellent records made by Clark School Students.

The Principal will be at the school from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. daily, and will be glad to talk to parents whose children have failed in other schools.

ARE YOU QUALIFIED?

Excellent positions are now open to all those who qualify, not only for Government positions, but to fill the many vacancies in leading New York firms. It is the general opinion that stenography is a very difficult study to master. Such is not the case, as the average Moon student can take dictation at the rate of 100 words per minute at the expiration of 30 days by the Boyd Syl-lab-ic System. So confident are we that any young man or woman with an average education can attain a speed of 100 words per minute in shorthand in 30 days by our Syl-lab-ic System that we invite you to enroll at our risk. If, after becoming a student at one of our schools and attending for three days, you feel that it will be impossible for you to master stenography in 30 days' time, we will cheerfully return the entire fee.

MITCHEL DEFENDS HIS SCHOOL POLICY

Mayor Sets Forth Grounds for the Stand Taken by His Administration.

DISCUSSES GARY SYSTEM

Most Important Problem Is to Open Public Institutions to Every Child, Rich and Poor.

Mayor Mitchel, in a series of questions and answers yesterday, outlined his reasons for the policy he has pursued in regard to the public schools during his administration. The questions and answers were as follows:

Q.—Mr. Mayor, what do you believe is the most important school problem? A.—To open the doors of the public schools to every child of school age—rich and poor—and for a full school-day's work. To see to it that the school system trains the body as well as the mind and turns out well-developed boys and girls and not half-trained, poorly equipped and physically stunted workers to compete unfairly with skilled labor. The one fundamental problem really is, "How are we to give each child sufficient academic and practical training to lay the foundation for his success in whatever trade or profession he may afterward choose?" Then there are the further problems of the high school, the trade school, the continuation school and the several colleges maintained by New York City. Among these is the problem of industrial education, which has recently been so often confused with the "work-study-play" plan.

Q.—Then you maintain, Mr. Mayor, that the so-called Gary school plan is really not a scheme for the introduction of industrial training? A.—Certainly not. It is simply a plan of improving instruction in the so-called three R's, and of training the child constantly in such close touch with life as to develop the body and the mind and to lay the groundwork for the future development of the child either in the outside world or in the higher schools. While upon this point of industrial and trade education, let me say that we must not permit the products of the so-called practical boys' trade schools to be sold in the open market. No one in official position, either in the city Government or in the Board of Education, has, so far as I have known, advocated or even spoken of such a thing. The idea is one of the usual vaporings of prejudiced persons. Of course, it is unthinkable and to my mind an entire improbability to encourage a weakening of prevailing rates of wages for the skilled trades by the employment of half-trained youngsters turned out by our public schools. Common concern for public welfare would protect the skilled laborer from unfair competition through the sale of products of such trade schools as may develop in the future.

Elementary School Need.

Q.—What was the particular reason so much attention was given by you to the elementary school situation? A.—Because of the urgent need for it. When this administration took office 115,000 children were either not able to get into the schools at all or only for part of a school day; school properties which cost over $156,000,000 were permitted to remain idle about 60 per cent. of the time. There were 700,000 children with no playground save the street, with all its dangers to childhood. We found a Board of Education with a building program which was impossible from a financial point of view and which, if carried out, would not have provided a seat for every child for a single year after the money was all spent and the new schools put in use. With a few notable exceptions we found an antiquated curriculum, according to which, at its best, the child was required to sit for five hours on a seat nailed to the floor, and was then turned out to the mercies of the street. This condition was tolerable sixty years ago, when children had the fields, the barnyard, and the blacksmith shop, and almost limitless space for play. Today the streets are congested with traffic and the open spaces are used for other purposes or overcrowded. These conditions had been brought to our attention through years of intimate contact with the City Government and through an extensive study of school conditions made in 1912 under my direction as President of the Board of Aldermen.

Q.—What were the principal recommendations of your committee at the conclusion of that investigation? A.—Our main conclusions were as follows: First, the course of study in all schools should be organized around human problems and made simple and elastic enough to permit of differentiation to meet the needs of different nationalities and groups; second, the content of the course of study should be made as practical as possible and special attention should be given to the development of commercial, industrial, and vocational subjects, emphasizing the larger and more important aspects of industrial and commercial activities; third, each school as a neighborhood centre should ally itself with neighborhood interests and take cognizance of local needs, and, fourth, the Board of Education, through the proposed bureau of investigation and appraisal or other bureaus, should establish a fact basis for its educational, administrative, and financial work.

Q.—In other words, your school inquiry report stated what should be done, but failed to state how it could be done? A.—Yes, that is true, in part. Our educational experts advised us that the Board of Education should have a bureau at its own headquarters manned by the most capable and progressive experts in education to be found, who should be continually studying the system, so that the courses of study could be changed from time to time to meet the needs of the pupils. But we believe that since, as the inquiry showed, the local school system had already conducted experiments and produced tested results, they should be utilized for further experimentation and for the removal of patent weaknesses in the present system.

Why Wirt Was Employed.

Q.—Then, if that is so, why did you and former President Churchill of the Board of Education travel out to Gary, Ind., and to Cincinnati, Ohio, and later employ Supt. Wirt of Gary and Supt. Schneider of Cincinnati as advisers in the development of the so-called Gary plan? A.—I am glad to have you ask that question. Our investigators and experts found right here in the city a number of progressive and able men and women who had broken through the old traditional and overloaded course of study of the New York public schools and had demonstrated successfully the possibilities of better, more modern, and more practical schemes or plans of education. Among these were Supt. William McAndrew of Washington Irving High School, now Associate City Superintendent of Schools; District Supt. William Ettinger, now Associate Superintendent of our schools; Angelo Patri, Principal of Public School 45, in the Bronx, and others. What the New York system as a whole lacked, we were informed, was a well correlated, well thought out system of education sufficiently elastic to permit of its application to all of the elementary schools of the system, and also a plan of industrial education which would hold the children in school until they had been sufficiently trained to make it possible for them to compete successfully in the workaday world when they were turned out of the public schools. We believed that there were features of the so-called Gary schools developed by Mr. Wirt which could be correlated with the best features of the New York schools and developed into the kind of system for elementary schools which school men, educators and practical minded labor leaders and business men all agreed that we should have. Accordingly, the President of the Board of Education and the committee on education of the Board of Estimate decided to employ Mr. Wirt to help the leaders of our own school system to try out "work-study-play" schools, and to employ Dean Herman Schneider of Cincinnati for a different problem. The introduction of the Gary school plan called for structural modifications in certain buildings, funds for which the Board of Estimate agreed to supply and did supply. The President of the Board of Education placed the matter in the hands of Associate Superintendents Haaren and Ettinger, representing the Board of Education, and Mr. Wirt. Another consideration which must not be lost sight of was the fact that the new plan, which included intensive utilization of school facilities instead of a practical use, as heretofore, offered relief of the part-time problem then so acute.

Q.—If former President Churchill of the Board of Education agreed upon this plan how did it happen that disagreement developed between you? A.—We found after a time that the money appropriated to make structural changes and to purchase equipment in order to carry through the experiment of the "work-study-and-play" type of school had been diverted or was being diverted by the Board of Education to the establishment of pre-vocational schools; that is, schools that have the later industrial training of the child in view.

Q.—Well, don't you believe in pre-vocational schools? A.—That is not the point. We had agreed that the "work-study-and-play" system should be tried out in a number of schools of New York, and that the Board of Estimate would supply the necessary funds for the reconstruction of certain buildings and for the purchase of certain equipment which the Board of Education reported was necessary in order to carry out the "work-study-and-play" plan. The Board of Education representatives did not expend this money in the way agreed upon or in a way to permit an actual trial at an early date of this particular plan which had been agreed upon.

Proud of the Co-operation.

Q.—Why did this happen? A.—I believe that President Churchill was captivated by the idea of making workshops or semi-workshops out of our public schools, and he was so anxious to try this experiment that he was willing to divert the funds appropriated for an entirely different purpose to carry out his own ideas. He was particularly proud of the co-operation he had secured between certain factories and the public school, and between certain other business houses and the public school. That may have been good work, but the Gary plan was intended as an effort to meet definite problems—part time and too cramped a school life, and the vocational school to meet other problems.

Q.—Well, didn't you advocate industrial education during your campaign four years ago? A.—Not for the elementary schools; and further consideration of the problem showed that our first necessity was to organize properly the elementary schools where the great bulk of children were not securing the right kind of training. And if they were improperly trained in the elementary schools there was not much hope that they could be better served in the few trade schools we had and in any number of trade and industrial schools which we might be able to secure.

Q. Then do you admit that you did nothing to carry out your promise with respect to industrial education? A. No. I have carried it out as fully as conditions permitted. At the request of the Conference of Organized Labor on Industrial Education, whose President is Mr. Hugh Frayne, New York organizer of the American Federation of Labor, I appointed a commission to make an industrial survey for the better guidance of the Board of Education in the extension of industrial education. The personnel of that commission was representative of labor and employers, of the Board of Education, the Board of Estimate, the Board of Aldermen and of the New York State and United States Departments of Labor. The Chairman was Dr. Charles R. Richards, Director of Cooper Union. The representatives of the Board of Education were John Martin, Thomas J. Carroll, William L. Ettinger and Miss Florence M. Marshall; the representative of the Board of Estimate was Mrs. Mathilde C. Ford, Secretary of the Committee on Education; the Board of Aldermen was represented by Alderman Charles Delaney; the State Department of Labor by George A. Stevens, the United States Department of Labor by Charles H. Verill, the employers of labor by William D. Baldwin, President of the Otis Elevator Company, and C. G. Norman, President of the Manhattan Fireproof Door Company; organized labor was represented by Emil J. Deering, of the United Board of Business Agents of Manhattan and Vicinity, and by John J. Mulholland of the Pattern Makers' League of North America; the Committee on Investigation of Commercial Schools was represented by Mrs. Sydney C. Borg. This commission has conducted an exhaustive study during the last year of the trades of printing, machine work, electrical work, carpenter work, and joiner, as well as the present provisions for industrial education in public schools of this city. Early in the organization of the survey, conference committees were appointed in each of the four trades, all representative of employers' associations and the labor unions concerned. The following men served as representatives of the labor unions:

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES COUNCIL.

Leon H. Rouse, President, Typographical Union No. 6; Theodore A. Douglas, Business Agent, Typographical Union No. 6; Herbert F. Mulroy, Business Agent, Pressmen's Union No. 51; E. W. Edwards, Secretary, Allied Printing Trades Council; Philip Umstadter, Pressmen's Union No. 51.

B.; Charles Dubourg, Vice President of the Inside Electrical Workers of G. N. Y., I. B.; Arthur O'Maves, Chairman of the Executive Board, Inside Electrical Workers of G. N. Y., I. B.; Paul McNally, Business Agent of the Inside Electrical Workers of G. N. Y., I. B.

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS.

George H. Stilgenbauer, Business Agent and Secretary of Lodge 434; M. J. Carney, Business Agent; J. J. McEntree, Business Agent; C. A. Durbin, Business Agent; D. Walkins, proprietor of Walkins' Garage.

Repeated Conferences Held.

During the progress of the survey repeated conferences were held with these committees, who gave valuable advice and assistance in regard to the methods pursued and who at the end checked up in every case the findings of the report and gave them their approval. As a matter of fact, the special investigators who conducted the trade surveys were for the most part men suggested by the unions and who were themselves prominent in the organization and master craftsmen in their own vocations.

In the case of the printing report, which is now in the hands of the printer, the findings and recommendations were referred to business meetings of the following unions and indorsed by them:

Typographical Union No. 6, New York Printing Pressmen's Union No. 51, New York Newspaper Web Printing Pressmen's Union No. 25, Franklin Union No. 23, New York Job Press Feeders' Union No. 1.

Q. Then there is no truth in the charge that you didn't confer with organized labor with respect to your educational work and program? A. That is certainly not true.

Q. How did such an idea get abroad? A. Through the willful misrepresentations of a scalawag who was disappointed because he could not secure an appointment at a good fat salary from the city as director of the industrial survey.

Q.—Why did you appoint Mr. Flexner and Mr. Fosdick members of the Board of Education? A.—I appointed Mr. Fosdick; former Mayor Kline appointed Abraham Flexner, Thomas W. Churchill and General George W. Wingate upon my recommendation. I recommended the reappointment of Mr. Churchill, although forewarned that he would use the schools for political purposes. I recommended Mr. Flexner because he was known as one of our foremost students of education. That was before the Gary question had ever arisen. As for Mr. Churchill, he fulfilled the prophecy of my friends and proceeded to play politics with the children of New York as pawns. He had given us to understand that he would favor a small Board of Education and reorganization of the department along the lines recommended in the Goodnow-Howe report. He actually opposed the bill to reduce the size of the board introduced in the Legislature. Furthermore, he misdirected the Bureau of Reference and Research, which had been created in response to the recommendations of the experts of the school inquiry on his own request, from its work of readjusting the course of study to the foolish performance of studying over again the organization of boards of education in different parts of the country which had already been reported upon by Messrs. Goodnow and Howe in their report. The purpose of this diversion was merely to "throw dust in the eyes" of the public and the Legislature, and by its suggestion that even an unwieldy board of forty-six members could work efficiently, to prevent the enactment of legislation reducing the size of the board. This legislation, Mr. Churchill evidently believed, would permit me as Mayor to appoint a new Board of Education in sympathy with the progressive ideas of the Fusion administration. This did not meet with the desires of Tammany Hall, which needed a bone of contention. When Mr. Churchill saw that he could not accomplish his purposes with me, and when the disappointed job hunter realized that he could not bully me into making the whole program of industrial education his football, the two men joined hands and invented the ridiculous myth called "Rockefeller Foundation control." This talk of Rockefeller control is malicious falsehood manufactured to deceive the people of this city for low political purposes. No persons except the Board of Education, the Board of Estimate, and the school authorities control the schools, and it is their business to control them.

Did Not Exact Pledges.

Q.—Do you believe it was right for you as Mayor to pledge the new appointees to the Board of Education to carry out the Gary plan before you appointed them? A.—I never exacted from them any pledge that they would apply the plan to all the schools of the city. I asked them if they were willing to give the work-study-play plan a full and fair trial. To that extent I am satisfied I was fully justified in pledging them. The Board of Estimate and the Board of Education had agreed to carry through the experiment. President Churchill attempted to divert funds provided for this purpose and to prevent carrying through the experiment because he wished to serve his own ends. It was therefore necessary for me to pledge the new appointees to the Board of Education to carry through the work planned sincerely and honestly. In doing so I did not commit them to the system as a whole. The pledge meant merely that they should see to it that the experiment was carried out honestly and thoroughly, so that we might determine whether the "work-and-study-play" school offered us a solution of the problems of the elementary school. No fault can be found with the calibre and character of the men and women I have appointed to the Board of Education. I took the greatest care to select only the most fit and representative persons.

Q.—What kind of men would you, in the event of your election, appoint as members of the new Board of Education, to be organized shortly after Jan. 1, 1918? A.—I would apoint to the new Board of Education representatives of the educational and moral forces of the city, of labor and business. I should expect them to handle the problem of education in a broad-minded, comprehensive manner, to the end that we shall have established in our public schools the kind of education which will give the child of the poor man an equal opportunity with the child of the rich man. The new law makes the new Board of Education independent of the City Government. Under that law the board, once organized upon a non-partisan, efficient business basis, can hardly be made the catspaw or plaything of politics. On the other hand, if it is first organized as a political agency of Mr. Murphy, since the board will control the Board of Examiners, Mr. Murphy will control promotions in its teaching staff. May Heaven help the teachers if that day ever comes. They will then be where the police were twenty years ago, when Bill Devery and his cronies conducted their own kind of civil service examinations to determine a policeman's fitness for employment or for promotion.

HAND FARMING IMPLEMENTS

Orders for Them Indicate Big Preparations for Next Year.

The present season is remarkable for an unprecedented demand for hand farming tools, or "steel goods" as they are generally called in the trade, for future shipments in late Fall and early Winter. They are to be used in the Spring for sowing next year's crop and for harvesting it later on. The nature and quality of these goods indicate beyond question that there will be an unusual acreage devoted in 1918, not only to wheat, but also to other food products and to cotton as well.

Many of the retail dealers in the West and Southwest were so eager to have them when needed that they bought them some two months ago, before the advance in the price of these goods, paying cash for them at the time, and taking them for immediate shipment, as they figured that the speculative profit and the certainty of getting them outweighed the advantage of the usual Spring datings and terms. It does not seem likely that there will be any scarcity in these goods, despite many unfounded statements to the contrary. The amount of garden plows, cultivators and small hand implements ordered seems to pronounce another Spring and Summer of productive gardens and hitherto vacant lots.

Rubbers Scarce in Sweden.

Manufacturers of rubber shoes in Sweden have notified their customers that no more of these goods can be delivered for this Winter's trade, according to information received by the Department of Commerce.

BRITISH IMPORTS CUT TO WAR NEEDS

Difficult Now in London to Buy Many Articles Manufactured in America.

ECONOMY'S EFFECTS SHOWN

Swiss Statesman Doubts Early Peace—Kilted Scotch Numerous on Paris Streets.

By CHARLES H. GRASTY.

LONDON, Sept. 14.—American manufacturers must be suffering acutely from British control downward of imports. It is almost impossible to buy any kind of American-made articles. I know from personal inquiries that the supply of American typewriters has been shut off.

I wanted a well-known lightweight make that is useful for the front. At the London agency they told me that they not only could not sell me one but that I would have to put my name at the tail-end of a waiting list of 800 in order to have any hopes for the future. I bought an imitation of the American machine made in Germany. A ship carrying a load of these machines was sunk off Spain by a British destroyer a few months ago and the cargo was sold as a naval prize. A well-known Oxford Street firm bought them and had them put in order.

The submarine war has made necessary the drastic cutting down of imports. According to the best figures I am able to get, United Kingdom imports before the war rose to 58,000,000 tons. In 1916 they were 43,000,000 tons. The estimate for 1917 is 33,000,000 tons.

The decrease is accounted for partly by a greater economy in use and partly by increased home production, especially in agriculture. The reduction that most seriously affects the welfare of the country is that in material for productive industries. The decline in this item is from 40,000,000 tons before the war to an estimated level of 15,000,000 tons in 1917.

In naval circles in London there was a good deal of snickering over the alleged attack on American ships by six German submarines reported on the 11th inst. An early Washington report had it that all six were destroyed; later the figures were reduced to one. The whole story bears the earmarks of a Fourth of July yarn.

In the first place the Germans would have practically to abandon all other U-boat activities on half of the Atlantic Coast in Europe in order to organize such a squadron. Secondly, U-boats can neither travel or fight in company, owing to their blindness when submerged. The Germans who have got economy down everywhere to an irreducible minimum are in nothing so sparing as in the employment of their submarines. Every boat, every tube, every man is handled like so much radium.

A commander will not go anywhere near a destroyer if he can possibly help it. His game is the safe one, "treading on little chickens." That is the reason for the success of the convoy system. The submarine has quit trying to "show off," and gone strenuously to the effort to "sink and leave no trace." The slow cargo boat without escort is the particular prey of the U-boat, which, whenever practicable, operates, from the surface in order to save precious torpedoes.

I asked one of the most sagacious Swiss statesmen when the war would come to an end. He deliberated a full minute before returning the answer: "Not this year. Conditions are not yet ripe."

This particular statesman is supposed to have Entente leanings, though Switzerland as a whole is rated as pro-German by a narrowing margin. The army—or, to speak more accurately, the officers—are notoriously pro-German. Switzerland has modeled her army by German standards, and the staffs of the two countries have thereby been brought into close relationship. Within a few months there is thought to have been a growth of Entente sentiment among the people which has tended to even up the natural preponderance attributable to ties of blood and language.

When I was in Berne recently I was impressed by the great number of bake-shops. One might conclude from a casual examination that the Bernese stomach is insatiable. Upon inquiry I learned that in Switzerland there is no baking whatever in the house and all bread and pastry come from these bakeries. Baking has become a business that is handed down for generations in the same family with a pride of excellence peculiar to an old country.

In America the typical small baker thinks of advancing his son to a more lucrative business and a better social position. In Switzerland the same business and the same shop pass from father to son and grandson. The family, perhaps, possesses the secret of making a certain kind of cake which is treasured for scores of years and is the basis of prosperity and fortune.

The submarine swaggerers in Switzerland hand out this kind of talk: "You are getting ready for our submarine war, yes. By the time you are ready for conditions as they now are we will have something new to spring on you. We will always keep from four to six months ahead of you." Another taunt from U-boat boasters was along this line: "America knew for months and years that she was coming into this war against Germany. What was she thinking about not to have a few things ready for use when she did come in?" All the same, it is America that the Germans fear.

An encouraging straw: Paris hotels have recently been receiving applications for rooms after the war. Among those who have booked at the Ritz I noticed the names of Mr. and Mrs. John C. King of New York. The rush of Americans to Europe is expected to be the outstanding feature of the first Summer season after peace.

If the war should end today France would have a mending job on her hands that might require a quarter of a century. The withdrawal of energy from normal uses has compelled general neglect, especially in Paris. The beautiful old city is, in many quarters, in a tumble-down condition that will make necessary the putting forth of that energy on which the French character excels. It will be a rare treat to see the French hustling on the job of rebuilding, repairing, and tidying up.

Before the recent attack on Lens Canadian soldiers were numerous on the streets of Paris. Evidently leaves had been granted in large number by way of freshening men of the shock regiments. A week or two ago there was an influx of Scotch in Paris, and kilted men walking five and six abreast were the cynosure of admiring eyes on the boulevards.

These prettiest of all soldier men—in the soldier man way—were like colts loose in a paddock. As they walked along they would often play rooster, doing a kind of chicken step and shoving at each other shoulder first. The liberty of the sidewalk was cheerfully accorded these young men, brimming over with the spirit of youth—a spirit which has made the kilted men one of Fritz's bêtes noirs.

From a source closely connected with the inner life of the King and Queen of Greece I have heard interesting gossip of their feelings toward and relationship with the Queen's brother, Kaiser Wilhelm. Things often appear very different when looked at from the inside instead of the outside.

"King Constantine and Queen Marie are far from loving the Kaiser," my informant said. "They feared him, and with good reason. Hardly a day passed without some threatening communication from him. He literally made life a burden to them. The King was a physical wreck from cigarette smoking, and between the demands of the Allies and the bullying of his brother-in-law exile was a relief. You will notice that the royal couple have shown no undue haste about taking refuge in Germany."

HOPE TO GET THRACE AND CONSTANTINOPLE

Greeks Talk of Hellenic and Serb-Rumanian Barrier Against Central Powers.

ATHENS, Sept. 4, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—If the Turk is to leave Europe, as the Entente Allies have required in their war terms, then there is a well-defined belief in the Balkans that two results will occur of high importance to Greece and all Europe:

First—That the Greek inevitably will succeed the Turk throughout Thrace and in the whole region down to the Dardanelles and the Bosporus.

Second—That a new zone of territory friendly to the Entente will thus be stretched horizontally straight across the Balkans as a barrier to the German dream of making the Balkans a German highroad to the Orient.

Professor Andreade of the University of Athens, one of the foremost authorities on international affairs relating to the Balkans, holds this view, and, in the course of a talk today, he explained how these two results would naturally come about in the final peace adjustment by reason of the principle of nationalities now accepted by the Entente Allies as a basis for territorial readjustment.

Professor Andreade, who is a specialist on the extent of Greek citizenship beyond the Greek frontiers—in Macedonia and the other Balkans, in Turkey, Syria, and Asia Minor—pointed out the great predominance of the Greeks in the regions to be evacuated by the Turks if they are to leave Europe.

The whole vilayet, or province, of Adrianople, extending from the Balkans down to Constantinople, he declared, is as much Greek as it is Turk, and with the Turks out it is practically all Greek. "Even Constantinople," he said, "is a Greek city—the largest of Greek cities—with a population of 350,000 Greeks. That gives an idea of the extent of Greek citizenship in all this section down to the straits, which will have to be considered on the basis of nationality and race when the Turk leaves Europe."

Professor Andreade, referring to the Balkan map, showed how the readjustment of Balkan boundaries, based on nationalities, would interpose two barriers to Germanic expansion toward Asia Minor and the Orient: one, the Greek zone across Thrace, and another, the Serb-Rumanian link of territory which lies as a dam between Hungary and Bulgaria. This Serb-Rumanian link is only fifty miles across, but with Rumania getting the Banat region, to which Professor Andreade says she is entitled by the principle of nationality, this Entente link will be 150 miles across.

NEW PRICE SCHEDULE SATISFIES STEEL MEN

Trade Now in a Position to Arrive at a Basis Where Business Can Be Done.

Steel manufacturers who appeared at their offices yesterday following the holiday recess said they were satisfied with the additional prices announced by President Wilson on Thursday. If disappointment was felt anywhere it apparently was more than offset by the fact that the fixing of prices for the semi-finished products would do much to help the trade arrive at a basis where new business could be done. There has been no question in the minds of steel makers and consumers alike that buying would continue at a minimum so long as only the prices for fuel, raw material, plates, and bars were known.

The Steel Corporation's statement of unfilled orders on Wednesday drew an accurate picture of conditions, showing a decline of more than 570,000 tons in orders during September. Buying was reduced because the producers did not have sufficient data to quote definite prices, while the makers of articles from semi-finished steel made no effort to buy because they could not decide what prices to charge for their products.

With the price of billets known, the companies which roll billets into various forms of steel are now able to figure the full cost of their raw material and thus are in a position to talk business again with their customers. The head of a leading steel company predicted yesterday that the whole trade would quickly "loosen up" under the influence of the President's second announcement. Enough semi-finished products were included in the list, he stated, to enable the steel makers to quote definite prices to the trade and arrange their schedules for the future.

Reading between the lines, the price announcement indicates that the steel men who consulted with the War Industries Board last week made substantial concessions from their original ideas about quotations. In some manufacturing quarters it was thought before the conference that $55 a ton would be a reasonable price for Bessemer billets and blooms, in view of current production costs, and open market quotations running between $60 and $65 per ton. The War Industries Board, it was said, thought $45 would be a more desirable price, and in the end both sides gave ground and the price was established at $47.50. Sheet bars were nominally quoted at Pittsburgh at $60 a ton early in the week, and the Government price of $51 set by the President represented a decline of 15 per cent.

Wire rods suffered, probably, the most drastic price revision of the new list. The open market quotation, reported by the Iron Age, was $85 a ton before the War Industries Board handed its recommendation to the President, and the new price of $57 a ton represents a reduction of more than 30 per cent. The following table shows the new prices for the three products mentioned, with comparisons:

| | New Fixed Prices. | Market Price Oct. 11. | Market Price Sept. 12. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Billets, 4x4-in. and larger | $47.50 | $55.00 | $65.00 |
| Wire rods | 57.00 | 85.00 | 90.00 |
| Sheet bars | 51.00 | 60.00 | 75.00 |

While easier conditions are looked for in the steel trade, it is a problem as to how soon the private consumer will become a decided factor in the market. Notwithstanding the falling off in private buying during September the mills of the country at the end of the month had sufficient forward business booked to keep them busy for a number of months. More than that, they had the certainty before them that Government orders must continue in heavy volume for a period whose length could not be determined. Contracts for the army and navy, the shipbuilding companies, and for foreign Governments have been coming to the steel companies on a heavy scale at the prices fixed in the first order by the President.

MAKING FEWER SORTS.

Manufacturers Drop Out Duplicate and Superfluous Articles.

The interest in conservation in all its forms is affecting in a very general way the variety and assortment of goods made by manufacturers. In the past, because of keen competition and desire to get and hold trade, an undue variety in all lines was a pronounced feature of business. In order to offer a cheaper article a manufacturer would add a new and smaller size, or give it a less expensive finish, or alter its shape or mechanism or general make in order to make it more cheaply. In every instance, however, he kept the original article in his list, because he had established a trade on it, and thus had two or more articles used for the same purpose, and consequently duplicates.

In a general way all he really accomplished was to increase the cost of manufacture of both articles, because of the lessed volume of each, since it rarely happened that he sold more of the two articles combined than of the original one. This procedure also increased the stocks of merchandise on hand and consequent expense of doing business of all the wholesalers and retailers who carried both articles in stock. Moreover, this variety of assortment grew because of the whims and notions of consumers who were cranks, especially in regard to sporting goods, those relating to all outdoor sports—who insisted upon certain changes and variations in certain articles they used.

With the great revival in business, which came in 1915, manufacturers found themselves greatly hampered in filling orders, because of the great variety of goods they carried. With a lesser number of articles, yet affording the same tonnage, they could obviously manufacture more efficiently and economically. So they took counsel with each other, and with the trade—especially in the line of hardware—and set about intelligently and effectively reducing their assortment, and today are steadily dropping out and discontinuing the manufacture of duplicate and superfluous articles.

TO GET BUYERS FOR SILOS.

Method Whereby a Special List of Prospects Was Obtained

"Here is a roundabout but effective way in which we built up a special list of farmer prospects," said a representative of a silo company. "We planned to conduct an intensive campaign in certain limited territory, trying to secure an up-to-date list of farmers ready to consider buying a silo.

"Our first step," continued the silo man, "was to advertise by direct mail alone in order to get the desired mailing list. We wrote to newspapers and banks, asking them to supply us with the names of men in their localities operating creameries. The banks, which are just now taking an unwonted interest in agricultural matters, were especially prompt and satisfactory in their replies, and the newspapers accommodated us almost as much in detail, though more tardily. Next in order, we wrote to the men whose names thus had been supplied as operating the creameries. In turn, we asked them to give us a list of the farmers who had at least five cows.

"The creamery owners were, for the most part, willing enough to help, for they fully realized that after a farmer had built a silo he would be likely to keep on producing milk for the market.

"The mailing list we obtained in this way was supplemented by calls from active, well informed salesmen. We kept the list up to the moment, through occasionally sending a postage-paid return card whereon we asked the farmer addressed to state how many horses and cows he was keeping.

"If he held a sale and reduced his stock below the point that indicated the need for a silo, we dropped his name from the list.

"We found this plan much more satisfactory than other more direct plans and less trouble was experienced in keeping the list up to date."

SURPLUS RESERVES UP $18,493,000 IN WEEK

Clearing House Bank Statement Shows Total of $102,483,000, the Largest Since Aug. 4.

The Clearing House bank statement issued yesterday showed an increase of $18,493,000 in surplus reserves, bringing the total up to $102,483,000, the highest figure since Aug. 4, when excess reserves stood at $168,735,000. For the week, loans expanded by more than $95,000,000 and deposits increased by $141,000,000.

At the close of the week loans and discounts of the fifty-nine associated banks amounted to $4,053,806,000, an increase of $716,000,000 compared with the figures of the corresponding week last year. The total for deposits, time and demand, and including $173,448,000 of Government deposits against which no reserve is carried, was $4,048,349,000, an increase of $611,410,000 compared with the statement of a year ago.

The weekly report of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York indicated an increase of $38,700,000 in rediscounts, the total for "bills discounted and bought" advancing to $223,000,000, a new high record, and $3,000,000 in excess of the June 22 figures, the previous high record. The Reserve Bank's statement showed that during the week the bank had disposed of $20,000,000 of United States Government securities—most likely Treasury certificates of indebtedness—and that its present holdings amount to $8,683,000. Deposits of member and non-member banks decreased by $12,000,000, but deposits of the Government increased $10,000,000. The increase in Federal Reserve notes outstanding was only about $9,000,000, and the total now is $298,550,000. Against this issue of notes there is deposited with the Federal Reserve agent gold and lawful money to the amount of $200,500,000, the balance being commercial paper. The expansion in note issue has been gradual, at the average rate of $6,000,000 per week.

ROADS TO ASK MORE.

Expected to Seek Higher Rates on Specific Commodities.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—Eastern railroads have asked the Interstate Commerce Commission for a conference to discuss "rates not favorably acted upon in the recent decision of the 15 per cent. advance rate case." The commission has designated next Wednesday as the time of the conference.

The railroad executives asked for "a short informal conference." The commission replied that they could present their statement at a public session. The conference, it is thought, will be preliminary to action looking toward financial relief of the roads in some way.

The wording of the railroad executives' request for a conference indicates that they will ask for a further increase in rates on specific commodities. No statement of a definite proposal is contained in the request.

SITUATION IN CUTLERY.

The Demand for Certain Articles Greater Than the Supply.

Manufacturers of cutlery, especially pocket knives, find themselves full of orders and unable to take care of the business coming to them. This situation is made more acute, because all importations of foreign cutlery, not only from Germany but from England, have entirely ceased. There is a little easier tone to the demand for shears and scissors, except such scissors as go in manicure sets, and these are almost impossible to obtain. Genuine stag-handled pocket knives or carvers are harder and harder to obtain because of the lack of sea transportation from India, which furnishes most of the material for the handles. So the demand has shifted largely to the imitation stag or fibre handles, which only experts can distinguish from genuine stag handles.

Wood handle pocket knives still sell in some sections, but are gradually falling into disuse. The once popular "Congress knife," especially popular in the South, is now largely a thing of the past. Bowie knives are also decreasing in use, for the "bad man," even in the West, is now a "gunman" and carries an automatic pistol, it being deadlier than the bowie knife. Dirks, being imported items, are practically unobtainable.

There is an unprecedented demand for safety razors, especially in sets with a strop and stropper, shaving brush, and shaving soap. This set is not now complete without the small, nickel-plated, steel, or brass mirror, which is preferred to a glass mirror because of being unbreakable. There is an unusually heavy demand for butcher knives, as evidently many farmers are doing their own slaughtering in a small way. Steak knives are slowly superseding the regular plated table knife for cutting meat, for the reason that it is easier to keep an edge on them.

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

The movement of wheat at interior points during the week showed a falling off of nearly half a million bushels from the previous week. Reports from Minneapolis said that mills there had been ordered to cut down their production to 60 per cent. of capacity until further notice in order to relieve the scarcity of wheat at Eastern mills. Rye—Market quiet; No. 2 Western, $1.89, cost, insurance, and freight, New York.

CORN.

The corn market was weak, and while there was a moderate rally at the close on week-end covering, final prices were ⅝@1¼c net lower. The peace rumors during the week have been a factor in the situation which helped to discourage buying, and have also inspired much of the liquidation. In the local cash market No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at $2.06, and No. 2 mixed at $2, cost, insurance, and freight, New York.

OATS.

The oats market was influenced more or less by the action of corn, but prices showed resistance to pressure, closing steady at net unchanged to ⅛c advance. Receipts over the holiday were moderate and the continued lack of pressure from the country, as well as the purchases for export, have given the market a show of firmness and have discouraged selling. The local cash market was firm; standard quoted at 66c; No. 2 white, 66½c; No. 3 white, 65@65½c; No. 4 white, 64½@65c; fancy clipped white, 66½@68½c, and ordinary clipped white, 65@66½c, all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market was irregular, with the October positions showing some steadiness on covering, while the late months were weak and lower under liquidation prompted by the talk of Government control of the whole hog situation. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 8,000, estimated for Monday 25,000, and for next week 100,000; Kansas City received 1,500 and Omaha 3,500.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The market for cottonseed oil was dominated by the restrictions placed on operations and the undertone was weak, despite cold weather in the South, which threatened to again reduce the size of the cotton crop. At the close, prices were net unchanged to 50 points lower, with business small, consisting of 3,100 barrels. Range of prices:

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 16,313 packages. Rather better demand than usual for Saturday, and the market gained another ¼c on the finer grades of fresh table butter. Most of the Exchange sales of creamery extras were at 45c, and that figure was current on the street, with some fancier lots selling up to 45½@46c. Firsts were steady at the recent advance. Seconds sold rather slowly. Moderate inquiry for held creamery. Renovated, ladles, and packing stock unchanged. Creamery, higher than extras, per pound, 45@46c; extras, (92 score,) 45c; firsts, (88 to 91 score,) 43½@44½c; seconds, (83 to 87 score,) 42@43c; thirds, 41@41½c; creamery, unsalted, higher than extras, 46½@47c; extras, 45½@46c; firsts, 44½@45c; seconds, 43@44c; State dairy, tubs, finest, 44@44½c; good to prime, 42@43½c; common to fair, 39@41½c; renovated, extras, 43c; firsts, 42@42½c; lower grades, 39@41½c; imitation creamery, firsts, 40½@41c; ladles, current make, firsts, 39½@40c; seconds, 38½@39c; lower grades, 37@38c; packing stock, current make, No. 1, 38½@39c; No. 2, 38c; lower grades, 36@37½c.

EGGS—Receipts yesterday, 17,712 cases. The week closed with some reduction of previous accumulation, advices of lighter shipments of fresh goods in transit, and a slight hardening tendency on the better grades of fresh gathered. There is still, however, a liberal accumulation of medium and ordinary qualities and the full range of values is wide. Storage eggs without quotable change and tone somewhat unsettled. Nearby white eggs of uniformly fancy quality very scarce and command extreme prices; mixed and lower grades irregular and selling at a wide range. Fresh gathered, extras, per dozen, 45@46c; extra firsts, 43@44½c; firsts, 40@42c; seconds, 37@39c; thirds and poorer, 33@37c; fresh gathered dirties, No. 1, 36@36½c; No. 2 and poorer, 30@35½c; fresh-gathered checks, good to choice, dry, 33@34c; under grades, 30@32c; refrigerator, special marks, fancy, storage and insurance paid, 38c; firsts, storage and insurance paid, 36½@37½c; seconds, storage and insurance paid, 35@36c; lower grades, storage and insurance paid, 32@34½c; refrigerator, State whites, 41@48c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby Western hennery whites, fine to fancy, 62@68c; ordinary to good, 50@60c; gathered whites, good to fine, 45@62c; Western and Southern, gathered whites, 42@50c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery browns, 48@54c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 42@46c.

STEEL MILLS AHEAD ON FEDERAL ORDERS

Told to Slow Down Deliveries After Consumers Complain They Are Coming Too Fast.

PLEASED WITH NEW PRICES

Washington Authorities Now Expected to Order Material to Relieve the Car Shortage.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 13.—Comment in Pittsburgh steel trade circles is that the additional prices just announced for steel products are quite in keeping with the basic prices agreed upon nearly three weeks ago. There had been talk of somewhat higher prices, and it is made evident that the authorities at Washington intend to have all the prices strictly in line with the basic prices.

The pig iron price of $33, valley, is that agreed upon as a pig iron basis. Sheet bars are very fairly placed at $51, although the $47.50 price for 4 by 4 billets may be a shade low. The skelp prices—$2.90 for grooved, $3.15 for universal, and $3.25 for sheared—are quite in keeping with the original finished steel basis fixed, naming $2.90 for merchant bars, $3 for shapes, and $3.25 for plates. Rods at $57 are in keeping with small billets at $51, while slabs at $50 a gross ton are in keeping with plates at $3.25 per 100 pounds.

Outside the cut in plates, the biggest reduction is in wire rods. They sold freely at $90 and higher, and now are set at $57. While, technically speaking, rods are raw material of wire products, nails, &c., marketwise they have been the material for making nets for submarines. Wire products were held on something like an even keel because the mills wished to take care of their trade, while rods were bid for by the Allies, and fancy prices resulted, so that rods actually sold at a higher price a pound than wire nails.

With prices fixed on some iron and steel commodities, while prices are to be fixed on nearly all, the market has naturally been extremely quiet. In the circumstances the only demand would be for early deliveries, and these cannot be compassed when producers are already so well sold up. Furnaces and mills, however, are taking care of their regular customers as well as they can for such odd lots as are required for early deliveries, and at the agreed prices.

Shortly after the agreement was reached that there should be "one price for all," it was predicted that orders would be placed within a couple of months by the Government, for itself and its allies, for about 7,000,000 tons of steel. Orders have been passing to the steel mills thus far at about the same rate as formerly, and if the prediction is to be verified, there will have to be much heavier orders in the next few weeks.

To Help Railroads Next.

It is now believed that when the Government has allotted its tonnage of war steel it will turn its attention to helping out the railroad situation by arranging for the rapid filling of large orders for cars and locomotives. Through the Priority Board the Government can obtain early delivery against such car and locomotive orders as the railroads may be disposed to place at present prices.

Iron and steel production continues at the rate of about 90 per cent. of capacity, the curtailment being due to shortage of coke and labor. Thus far this year the production of pig iron has been at a slightly lower rate than last year, while the output of rolled steel has barely shown an increase, despite the greater capacity available.

The United States Steel Corporation reports a decrease in the unfilled obligations for September of 573,572 tons, the largest for any month since May, 1913. The decrease last month was a little over 5 per cent. of the obligations on the books at the beginning of the month, whereas the percentage for May, 1913, was 9.4 per cent. There were large bookings of Government orders in September, without which the decrease in unfilled obligations would have been much greater. Shipments last month were estimated at 90 per cent. of capacity, the same as the month previous. Production was restricted by coke shortage, largely, and also by a scarcity of labor, while there were some few difficulties in transportation, &c.

Government Orders Will Increase.

The prospects are that the unfilled obligations on the books of steel mills will continue to decrease as long as the war lasts. The unfilled orders for the Government and its allies may increase for a while, both because the Government is working up a full program and the buying for account of the Allies has been held back for months and is now let loose, but eventually the shipments will become heavy. The Government will obtain priority in all deliveries, and has no occasion to fill the mills long in advance.

While Government orders for steel products have been increasing, it is probable that the confusion arising will diminish during the next few weeks, as the priority system is being worked out. While the Washington authorities have been rushing the mills for quicker deliveries, the consumers themselves have made representations to the officials that the deliveries were coming too fast for them, and they could not store the steel, and so now instructions have come to the mills to slow down a little.

The next thing to iron out is the allotment to the various producers of given commodities. Some of the mills have been more ready than others to accept Government orders, and the Washington authorities, having so big a job on hand, have naturally chosen the line of least resistance, but they fully intend to equalize in the end. It is thought that the reserve of some mills has been due to a curious condition of ignorance as to the power and capacity of the Government to see that each does its share, but a campaign of education along this line will soon be enforced in an emphatic manner.

On account of the fact that the Food Administration has so many matters to arrange, the date before which the tinplate price for the new season is to be announced has been set back from Oct. 15 to Nov. 1. The Food Administration's position has been that its power included that of fixing prices of tinplate, or at least such as is used in packing goods, as it cannot control food prices without controlling the raw materials. They desire a tinplate price to be fixed for the whole year, while the practice recently inaugurated in the tinplate trade is to fix prices for six months at a time. There is little probability that the price will be below $7 or above $8.

THE CONDITION OF TRADE.

Commenting on the condition of trade and the business of the banks, Dun's Review says:

The most potent and gratifying factor in the situation, as it has been for some time, is the general spirit of conservation which curbs speculative tendencies in trade and industry and operates to keep commitments within the limits of safety, and though in some branches business is not so conspicuously active as a year ago, it unmistakably rests on a more solid basis. Yet with the extraordinary and unprecedented conditions arising from the war, the future naturally remains more or less clouded, and the difficulties of holding production and distribution at the high rate necessitated by the extensive and expanding demands from governmental and other sources do not appreciably diminish with the labor shortage and the congestion in transportation continuing.

Total clearings through the banks at the principal cities in the United States amount to $4,176,027,909, a decrease of 4.1 per cent. as compared with the same week last year, but a gain of 18.5 per cent. as compared with the corresponding week in 1915.

Bradstreet's says:

Stocks of general merchandise everywhere are light, and this fact, together with the high price of raw cotton, explains the strong undertone witnessed in the general textile situation. Buying for holiday distribution is not receiving much attention, but a noteworthy development is that which shows up in the heavy sales of confectionery, the movement in this respect probably being due to gift buying for soldiers. After a period of quiescence the market for shoes and leather has become active, chiefly because of operations by Russian and foreign buyers, plus prospective heavy buying by our own Government.

Bank Invades Captured Territory.

The National Bank of South Africa, Limited, has established a branch at Tabora, German East Africa, in territory conquered by the British. Tabora is an important distributing centre on the main caravan route to Lake Victoria. The bank already has opened branches at Dar-es-Salaam and Tanga, two of the most important towns in the former German colony.

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

THE MERCHANT'S POINT OF VIEW

A certain amount of dullness, some of it seasonable and some due to the unsettlement of raw material prices and to the happening of a holiday, was a feature of the primary markets during the last week. Retail distribution, however, was not checked, and was in the main satisfactory, being better in the interior of the country than in this immediate neighborhood. The weather this Fall has been favorable for business, the change of seasons having been well marked. The stores have not yet reached in their prices the levels attained in the primary markets, and customers are receiving the benefit of the earlier purchases. This applies to both goods in the piece and made-up garments, and it is a help to distribution. The favorable crop report is an element which inspires much confidence. It betokens a great deal of buying power over a large portion of the country. While liberal investment in the new national loan bonds is expected from the agricultural districts, the belief is entertained that there will be sufficient surplus to keep trade active in all directions.

Moving for Trade Acceptances. A concerted effort is to be made to induce the substitution of trade acceptances in the place of the open account system. Those back of the movement are bankers and credit men. A number of representatives of these two classes met in this city the other day to determine on plans for bringing about the change which they have in view. Although the general movement dates back to the organization of the Federal Reserve Bank system, it is conceded that comparatively little progress has been made. The difficulty in the way, as has been pointed out in these columns, is to convince buyers—who are in general the retailers of the country—how it will be to their benefit to change their customary methods. That acceptances will be of decided help to sellers of goods, their bankers, and credit men needs no argument. It is self-evident. If personal advantage could be as readily shown to the buyer, the task of bringing about the general use of the acceptances would be an easy one. This does not appear to have yet been done. The latest appeal is one not directed to the self-interest of the buyer but to his patriotism. It is urged that the substitution of acceptance for the open account will make business resources more liquid and help support the increasing financial and credit needs of the Government. This plea may avail for what is undoubtedly a good purpose. But action penalizing in some way the open account or putting a premium on the use of acceptances is more likely to be effective.

Conference of Woolen Men. After a great deal of preliminary fussing came a rather lame and inconclusive result from a conference of woolen goods manufacturers with representatives of the Commercial Economy Board held here during the week. The trouble came from the fact that the board started wrong. It should have taken example from Mr. Hoover, the Food Administrator. He took the public into his confidence, told how much wheat was available, and how much would be needed for the allied powers. This left a balance for the use of the people of this country of a size that called for the exercise of economy. In the case of wool, clothiers and other garment makers, as well as the manufacturers of woolens, were told at the outset that styles must be changed and adulterations put into fabrics because of the scarcity of wool and the needs of the military forces. No figures were presented and none have been publicly given out in support of the proposals made. Indeed, it has been tacitly admitted by the Commercial Economy Board that the wool supplies on hand are ample for all needs, but they say these may not be sufficient if the war should last, say, ten years. The inference is that sheep will cease to grow wool in neutral countries in war time. So far as the shipping situation goes, which concerns the bringing of foreign wools here, every one knows this will improve from now on, and that the tonnage used for this purpose is not the kind that would be employed in the war zone.

Amount of Material Available. No data have been furnished showing what will be the probable wool needs of the military forces in any year. It is known that 35 per cent. of reworked wool, or shoddy, is used in the fabrics supplied. Does any one suppose that there will be required for each man in the service as much as thirty pounds of wool beyond what he would use in civilian life? But, even at that, a force of 2,000,000 men would only use up 60,000,000 pounds, which is a little more than 10 per cent. of the amount ordinarily consumed in the mills of the country in peace time. Now, the wool clip of the country is about 289,000,000 pounds. The imports for the last fiscal year, despite the British embargo on Australian wool, totaled nearly 300,000,000 pounds of clothing and combing wool. These imports are to be enlarged decidedly by the coming here of Australian wools, of which 70,000,000 pounds have already been released. Then, too, the recent census showed a very large quantity of wool in this country, much of it in the possession of the mills, not one of which complained of a scarcity. So it happened that, when the woolen and worsted manufacturers that were called to Washington to consult the head of the Commercial Economy Board they had to show him, first, that he was not familiar with the facts in the case, and that some of his suggestions would be hurtful rather than otherwise.

Conjuring Up a Phantom. A confusion of mind on the part of Mr. Shaw, the head of the Commercial Economy Board, seems evident still to exist, judging from his reported remarks at last week's conference. He conjured up this phantom:

> Suppose the war should go on for four years. Suppose, for instance, because of the action of the submarines it should go on, shipping be confined to transatlantic lines only and we could bring no wool to this country, and there was no wool except what the army could use?

Now, it does not take much judgment or knowledge to show the absurdity of this kind of talk. Who, for example, believes or has any reason for believing that the war will last four years? In case it should, even, who imagines that the Germans will be able to strew with submarines the ocean lanes between this country and South America, South Africa and Australia in such a way as to prevent wool from coming here from those countries? Then, too, there is a certain wildness in the notion that, if wool were not imported, there would be only wool enough for the army. This would imply an army of between 12,000,000 and 15,000,000 men. The wool situation is one to be taken seriously. It is everywhere conceded that waste should be avoided. But there is no reason why all wool fabrics should not continue to be made, not only for the domestic trade but also for export. There should be no premium to encourage the imports of all wool fabrics from Great Britain which, after over three years of warfare and being obliged to import so much of the raw material, has put no such ban on the making of fabrics of the kind as was suggested here.

British Exports to Neutrals. While attention has been attracted repeatedly to the fact that the countries contiguous to Germany have been, since the war began, importing from the United States large quantities of foodstuffs, cotton, &c., which found their way into the Kaiser's dominion, it has been assumed that Great Britain was on the job of stopping this kind of thing so far as its own exports were concerned. The British did, in fact, try to control exports through the agency of the Overseas Trust in Holland and similar agencies elsewhere. They are beginning to doubt the efficacy of their methods now that the figures of exports are being analyzed. It is explained that, while consignees of British products kept their agreement not to export the articles to Germany, they did ship them to other neutral countries from which they found their way thither. This would appear from a comparison of the exports in 1913 and 1916 to countries contiguous to Germany. Of strictly British products, for example, the exports of corn and grain to Denmark were 94 hundredweight in 1913 and 23,137 in 1916, and, of grease and animal fats, they were to Sweden, Denmark, and Norway 5,680 hundredweight in 1913, and 36,382 in 1916. More emphatic are the figures of shipments of foreign and colonial products from Great Britain. Of maize there were shipped to Denmark and the Netherlands 232,385 hundredweight in 1916 as against none in 1913, and of other corn and grain 239,149 hundredweight as against 2,564. Of cleaned rice, Norway, Denmark, and the Netherlands took 1,028,833 hundredweight in 1916, as against 1,353 in 1913. Similar increases were noted in sago, tapioca, &c. Of cotton, Denmark, Norway, and the Netherlands got 444,174 centals in 1916, as against 55,158 in 1913. Of lard, the Netherlands received 97,022 centals in 1916, as against 12,332 in 1913. Denmark and the Netherlands obtained of oleomargarine 303,289 hundredweight in 1916, as against 100,756 three years before. These are only a few samples. They are in addition to the extra large imports from this country.

The Position of Cotton. Violent fluctuations in the quotations for cotton during the week were evidences of the nervousness on the part of speculators, who know that the price of the article has been forced up by artificial stimulation and who have no way of reasoning out which way it should ultimately go. A suggestion of frost in the growing district sent up the price of cotton $5.50 a bale, which is equivalent to adding nearly $70,000,000 to the cost of the crop. There are evidences that the high prices are proving attractive enough for some holders in the growing regions despite the organized efforts to induce them to hold for a 30-cent minimum figure. But it is also apparent that the ease with which loans can be made is inducing many to hang on in the hope of securing every bit of possible profit. The exports of cotton thus far since the new cotton year began seem to indicate a possible total for the entire year of about 4,500,000 bales. The domestic takings are hardly likely to exceed 7,250,000 bales. Unless things improve there will be a sizable carryover to add to the surplus on hand. Statistically, it does not augur well for those who pin their faith in the maintenance of high prices, but other factors, especially the ability of holders to keep the cotton, may be controlling. In sympathy with the raw material quotations, prices of cotton fabrics were firmer, and some constructions advanced during the week to new high records. The strength of prices for colored and printed cloths has been more than maintained, and the same is true of bleached fabrics. Belated deliveries of knit goods are being welcomed in view of a possible scarcity.

TO CUT TIME OF COMMERCIAL PAPER

A Proposition to Make It Four Months Instead of Six Favored by Bankers.

Not for a long time has anything attracted so much attention in the wholesale business world, especially in the credit end of it, as the proposal of the Money Committee of the Liberty Loan Committee to cut the time of commercial paper from six months to four in order to strengthen the financial situation. The plan has been approved both by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. Part of the statement calling attention to the plan, which is signed by several of the country's best-known bankers, reads this way:

"This committee, in analyzing the present financial situation, considers it of utmost importance to emphasize this suggestion in every possible way. It should be made certain that the amount of commercial paper eligible for rediscount is the maximum that can be provided.

"This committee believes that the financial machinery of the United States is sufficiently sound and elastic to meet the strain incident to the forthcoming war loan and subsequent loans. It feels, however, that the handling of such vast sums as are required by the present situation calls for the most careful preparation and forethought. Any method which will obviously strengthen the money situation should be adopted."

Among those who commented yesterday on the suggestion was William F. H. Koelsch, Vice President of the Bank of the United States. Mr. Koelsch was much in favor of making money more elastic, but thought that it could be better accomplished through the general use of the trade acceptance than through a shortening of the period for outstanding single-name paper.

"There appears to be some misunderstanding," he said, "with respect to the suggestion made in connection with the Liberty Loan campaign regarding the matter of asking merchants to make commercial paper notes for a period not exceeding four months. Last Summer, Mr. Alexander, President of the National Bank of Commerce, issued a statement to the effect that if commercial borrowers would arrange to have their notes mature in not more than three months from the date of issue, it would assist the banks in rediscounting more freely with the Federal Reserve banks, and in this way produce a broader and more stable open market for commercial paper.

"This suggestion, of course, refers almost entirely to merchants who have been accustomed to drawing their single-name notes usually at six months and disposing of them through the medium of note brokers, as well as by discounting them at their own banks. Some objection was raised to this suggestion on the ground that the six months' term of borrowing had become a custom among most single-name borrowers. It was then proposed by some that it might be arranged to have these merchants draw notes at ninety days, with the understanding with their banks that a renewal for another ninety days would be granted in order to meet the suggestion referred to.

"While this sounds like a solution of the problem, there are many who do not consider it in that light by any means. It is a well-established principle of sound banking that the practice of granting renewals should be avoided and discouraged whenever possible. It is also well to consider that, in order for commercial paper to be eligible for rediscount at the Federal Reserve Banks, it is necessary not only that the paper shall mature within ninety days from the time of discount, but that it shall also comply with the other provisions of Section 13 of the Federal Reserve act. The mere fact that a note will mature in ninety days does not make it eligible for rediscount.

"What it is really hoped to accomplish is the mobilization of commercial credits now existing on the books of the merchants of the country as open accounts. There are many who have given this subject much thought, and who are confident that this cannot be accomplished by simply shortening the time of single-name notes so that they will mature within the ninety-day limitation. It is not self-renewing paper which is so desirable at this time as it is self-liquidating paper, which, maturing within the limit, and bearing also the indorsement of a bank, provides commercial paper that will be, in all respects, eligible for rediscount at the Federal Reserve Banks. A rough estimate of the total amount in open accounts now carried on the books of the merchants of this country places it at several billion dollars, and, in their present form these credits may properly be termed 'frozen' capital.

"A movement now on foot, which promises to become nation-wide, proposes to mobilize these credits as a war measure, as well as for the purpose of supplementing the efforts of the Federal Reserve Board directed toward a more scientific and pliable credit system, always keeping in mind the fact that the currency of the country under the new banking law is now, or eventually will be, based almost entirely upon commercial paper.

"The American Trade Acceptance Council, which was organized the other day as a result of a thorough discussion of this subject at the war convention of American business recently held at Atlantic City, has undertaken a campaign of education and promotion among our merchants and bankers, with a view to securing the general adoption of the trade acceptance. It is, of course, hoped that by thrift and the accumulation of savings our people will aid materially in providing the necessary funds for the use of the Government at this time, and, while this may be accomplished eventually, it now seems quite evident that other means must be taken to provide the Government with the enormous amount of money that will be required by this and future war loans. In the meantime, the commercial interests of the country should at once co-operate in the movement to convert open-book credits into self-liquidating commercial paper eligible for rediscount at the Federal Reserve Banks, this being the aid desired from merchants by those directly interested in the wide distribution of Liberty bonds.

"That the trade acceptance is most desired is reflected in the preferential rate fixed by the Federal Reserve Board for rediscount of this distinctive character of self-liquidating commercial paper. Only the other day the Federal Reserve Bank of New York fixed a rate of 3½ per cent. for the discount of trade acceptances payable within 90 days. This is at the same rate fixed for notes or drafts secured by Government bonds or notes. At the same time the rate of discount for other notes and drafts was fixed at 4 per cent., thus favoring the trade acceptance by the material difference of one-half of 1 per cent.

"The members of the board and Federal Reserve Bank officials have further emphasized the desirability of a transition from the old form of single-name note to the trade bill in their remarks addressed to merchants and bankers on many occasions. Mr. Vanderlip's declaration, that we must market $14,000,000,000 in bonds by next June and that we must prepare for as great an expansion of credit as our present gold base will permit with safety, should interest all of our merchants, both wholesale and retail."

Credit men for prominent local wholesale concerns also were in favor of shortening the time of outstanding paper. The impression gained from talks with these men was that anything which would induce prompter payments was a good thing. It was further asserted that if the time of single-name paper were cut to four months greater conservatism would be shown by the borrowers—a thing that would not be altogether amiss at this time. If a merchant has six months in which to meet his obligations it was said he would be inclined to borrow more heavily than if he had to meet his note in four. With this money he would be inclined to plunge, especially on rising markets, possibly to the ultimate detriment of all concerned.

There appeared to be no fear in the minds of these men about a tightening of credit in event of the shorter term being brought about, as it was said that the banks were about as careful in this respect at present as it is possible for them to be. Another point raised in favor of shortening the period was that better borrowing terms probably would be obtained. One of the best-known dry goods men in the city summed that matter up when he said: "The best banking brains in New York, which means the country are back of the movement, and when these men get their heads together the result is certain to be something to swear by."

AT FALL RIVER MILLS.

Demand for Goods Keen with Prices Showing Upward Tendency.

Special to The New York Times.

FALL RIVER, Oct. 13.—There has been extensive buying of printcloths during the week. Prices have advanced in some instances while in others much strength has been added. The demand for wide goods continues unabated. Manufacturers of such styles state that they are in a position where they can insist upon full prices and in most cases buyers have accepted them uncomplainingly. There are some mills which cannot accept much new business for deliveries during the current quarter because of their sold-up condition.

While the call for narrow goods has not been so large as that for wide goods, still the narrow end of the market is strong and printers and converters have shown a marked interest in the trend of trading. There has been moderately good call for sateens, twills and specialties, and some of the prices which have been secured for these goods will net manufacturers handsome profits.

The manufacturers of fine goods report that business has been fairly good but their sales output is nowhere as large as that of printcloth. Cotton yarns are still high and spinners are in a position where they are indifferent to the attitude of buyers. Some spinning mills have been swamped with orders during the last several months and they are not caught up as yet with deliveries.

The total sales of cloth for the week are estimated at 300,000 pieces. The week closed with the demand for goods rather keen and prices showing an upward tendency.

VELVETS IN MILLINERY.

Some of the Shapes and Trimmings That Are Now in Vogue.

White hats of panne velvet, also of beaver, are now being shown here for Fall wear, according to the bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America. As yet, it says, no action has been reported on them. The bulletin goes on:

"Velvet hats of the better class continue in favor in soft effects in small shapes. Hats trimmed or combined with fur are good. The better grades of hatters' plush hats also are in demand, principally in straight sailor effects with soft crowns. Black and brown are the favorite colors.

"A visit to the exclusive Fifth Avenue shops reveals some new and interesting things. Among the things displayed are satin antique dress hats, combined with velvet, in large shapes, some with high-turned backs. Some high side effects, or old-fashioned pokes, are also seen. Crowns are both high and low, soft or draped. The trimmings consist of paradise, goura, chous of antique satin and burnt effects. Hats of chiffon velvet of a cubist pattern are among the novelties shown. They are combined with velvet and are trimmed with fur and velvet figures."

EXPECT GOOD SILK TRADE.

The Present Dullness Not Believed to be One to Continue.

The week just past in the local silk market has not been featured by any marked activity. Though there was reported some evidence of renewed buying early in the week, it seemed to fade away at the approach of the holiday on Friday.

But the pessimism of some few in the trade over the prevailing dullness is by no means general. Many believe the silk industry to be in the best position it has enjoyed for years. They point in support of it to fashions which unmistakably favor silks and to the situation in woolens, which are forcing the use more and more of other materials in women's wear.

Several houses report their road orders to be larger than they have ever been before at this time of the year. Buying outside of New York is apparently going on at a great rate, and the belief is general that it has got to start in locally very soon.

"Big business is inevitable," says one authority in the local trade, "because of the enormous amount of money that is being put in circulation, and I thoroughly expect to see very shortly the advent of one of the greatest buying movements throughout the country that the industry has ever experienced."

ERROR OF ANTICIPATION.

Suggestion to Keep Stocks Even and Avoid Excess Buying.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The extraordinary condition of scarcity of materials and labor is being aggravated more and more by the practice of "anticipation" in merchandising. Salesmen are influencing buyers to stock up. Buyers are ordering away in excess of their normal requirements. Warehouses and shelves of merchants are loaded with millions of dollars' worth of goods they do not need.

Consumer demand is not high. On the other hand, the saving habit is taking hold of the people. The unusual demand for goods is due to the requirements of the army and navy.

Conservation of merchandise is essential. But in one spot there is an accumulation of shoes and a shortage of socks. In another will be found an overstock of socks and a scarcity of shoes. All through the list of staple merchandise there is unbalanced distribution. Salesmen and buyers are as patriotic as other men, and it seems that now they should see it their duty toward the nation, as well as good business, to keep stocks even and stop trying to corner the market in every line of merchandise.

JOHN R. THOMPSON.

New York, Oct. 6, 1917.

Want Smaller Cotton Bales.

The question of the density of the American cotton bale has again come to the fore in Europe, this time as a result of the shortage of ocean freight space. Consul General Robert P. Skinner, who is at London, calls attention to an article on this subject which was written for The Textile Recorder by William H. Taylor. The main point made by Mr. Taylor is that if American cotton were baled to the density of the Indian or Chinese staple, more than double the quantity could be carried in the tonnage now available. Numerous figures are given to support this contention. A movement has recently got under way in this country for reducing the size of cotton bales in order to conserve space in common carriers and to bring about a more rapid handling of the crop.

Barring Imports to Australia.

Perfumery, perfumed spirits, and bay rum have been added to the list of articles recently published which are prohibited from importation into Australia, according to a cable dispatch from Consul General Skinner in London. The prohibition on spirits will be enforced, it is reported, so as to admit during the year 1917-18 not more than 70 per cent. of the amount entered in 1916-17.

WOOLEN FABRICS' CLEARING HOUSE

Some Doubt Expressed Whether Its Advantages Are All That Are Claimed.

Not all the members of the local cloak and suit industry are as convinced of the great value of the recently established clearing house for woolens as are its advocates. Some are inclined to make light of the argument used that by making a market for woolens it no longer will be necessary for the manufacturer to make up his excess, or left-over, materials at the end of the season into garments which necessarily can be sold only at greatly reduced prices.

"I do not see," said one manufacturer prominent in the local trade, "that the clearing house for woolens will in any way correct the so-called 'tail-ends abuse.' As a matter of fact, I do not even see that there is any justification for calling tail ends an abuse. On the contrary, I believe this is one of the best ways there is of keeping the cloak and suit business from becoming purely a two-season business and of furthering its development into an all-year-round industry.

"For, unfortunate though it is, our trade has, strictly speaking, but two short seasons, though they are brisk enough while they last. Only in the Fall or in the Spring of the year do the majority of women start out with the set purpose of buying a coat or a suit. This is not so true of dresses. In the middle of the Winter, or at the height of the Summer season, a woman may decide she needs another dress, or see one in the stores that appeals to her fancy. But, in the matter of suits and coats, her ways are more clearly defined. She gets what she requires in the Fall, and that usually ends it until the following Spring. And so through the Summer, generally speaking, she could not be induced to buy a coat.

"The result is that the retailers are interested in our merchandise only at these times. During the remainder of the year, unless we are willing to make considerable sacrifices and offer exceptional values, we might just as well close down our workshops, so far as making and selling goods is concerned. Thus, you see, our 'til-end' offerings play an important part in our industry by keeping us going to a greater or less degree throughout the entire year, and few manufacturers will be anxious to do away with the practice, unless some other means can be found to keep their workers busy between seasons.

"For no industry can hope to prosper in a large way that has to shut down between seasons. Skilled labor, such as we require in our workshops, will not continue in an industry that offers employment only during a small part of the year. They do not have to, particularly in these times when there is such a great scarcity of labor in every field. And if they did it would be only on a wage scale made up on the basis of fifty-two weeks of work a year. Obviously, this would be a highly impractical arrangement which could only work additional hardship to the trade.

"On the other hand," he continued, "I am by no means opposed to the clearing house idea. I believe it is another and important step forward in the general direction of improved conditions throughout the entire industry. It is a practical exemplification in the cloak and suit trade of the spirit of co-operation and advancement toward the elimination of waste in manufacturing methods that is the order of the day in the country's industrial life. But it is still in the formative stages, and just where in its chief benefit will be is hard to say. The system of competitive bidding for woolens, under which it is operating at present, may result in our getting more money for stocks we are willing to sell than we did under the old method, but, on the other hand, what will we have to pay when we want to buy? This is a very important matter in these days when there is a great deal of trading in goods between ourselves, due to the practical impossibility of getting them from the mills at any time or at any price. Last month, for instance, we sold to several of our competitors a total of nearly $5,000 worth of materials.

"It frequently happens in our trade that while one manufacturer is having a call for broadcloth, we'll say, and running short of it, another will have the same condition to contend with in serges. As we all have to buy a fairly well rounded out supply of materials at the start, it usually happens that they are able to come to each other's assistance. Under the method we have always used, by means of the Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers' Protective Association, the two manufacturers are brought together and an exchange is made at the prevailing market price, irrespective of whether the materials changing hands cost the original purchaser more or less. It has always worked out satisfactorily, it was as fair to one as to the other, and the desired result was obtained promptly. Whether or not the new system will come to supersede the old, and whether or not the better prices we will be enabled to get for our materials will offset the increased costs when we go to buy, will only be determined by the future."

"Undoubtedly there are," said another large manufacturer of this city, "some few buyers here and there who live solely by taking advantage of the low offerings at the end of the season, and others who await placing of their full requirements until these 'tail-ends' have made their appearance. There naturally can be little question but that the abolishing of this practice, if it could be brought about unaccompanied by greater evils, would be a great benefit to the trade as a whole. But it will not be accomplished through the existence of a market afforded by the clearing house for woolens, which after all will do no more than take the manufacturer's excess materials off his hands without a loss to him. Though he may realize no profits by making the materials up into garments and selling them for what he can, he would rather do this as a means of keeping his help employed and working than by availing himself of the clearing house, make reductions in his force to avoid actual losses, and thus face a labor situation at the start of the following season. While it has been said that the small operator would find the clearing house particularly attractive at the end of the year, when he is probably long on some kinds of materials and short of funds, the same rule applies to him as to the larger manufacturer. He can no more afford practically to close down his work shop than anybody else."

Velour and Broadcloth Favored.

Silvertone velour and plain wool velour in a wide range of brown shades, particularly rust color, are reported by local mill agents to be in strong demand just now, due to the popularity of suits for women made of these materials. Broadcloths and oxfords are said also to be widely sought for the same purpose, in beige, Pekin blue, army blue and beetroot. Though dark grays are selling, there is not reported such an active demand for them as for the other colors mentioned.

TANNERS' ALLIANCE TASK.

Obviating Need of British Licenses for Foreign Trade.

Under the Trading with the Enemy act it is expected by importers that British consular officials in the United States will be relieved from further supervision of imports drawn from British sources, as well as their re-shipment from this country in the form of finished products. As an indication of what may be expected in this direction, the announcement made last week by the hide and leather interests is in point. This showed the formation of the Tanners' Alliance, which may control the imports of hides and skins under the license system. This action was taken wholly on suggestion from the Government authorities that the leather industry should co-operate with the Administration in enforcing the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy act.

It was explained that the Tanners' Alliance would be responsible to the Government for exports as well as imports and that by this arrangement the necessity for obtaining import licenses from the British Government had been obviated.

Now that the leather interests have led off in the movement to assume responsibility for import and export shipments, similar action in other lines is expected to follow almost immediately. The import industries next to assume control of their respective raw products imported from abroad include those handling wool, copper, tin, rubber and a long list of other commodities.

Up to last week the National Association of Tanners had been co-operating with the British consular service in securing licenses for hide imports, a similar service being performed by the Rubber Association of America in behalf of users of rubber. On the other hand, the Textile Alliance, Inc., charged with the supervision of wool imports from British territory, has had from the start of the licensing system a working arrangement with the British Embassy in Washington, while other industries, dependent upon supplies from British possessions, have, as in the cases of hides and rubber, had recourse to the British Consuls in applying for licenses.

This procedure, it was predicted yesterday, will give way to exclusively American control. The Textile Alliance, for example, is expected very soon to drop its connection with the British Embassy and form a direct working agreement with the American Government. While the general understanding among the officials of the alliance was said yesterday to be that the Washington Administration was about to relieve the British Embassy of the task of passing upon applications for licenses for wool from Australia and other British possessions, no definite information had been received as to when the new plan would be put into operation.

Probably about the time the Textile Alliance takes over full American control of wool licenses in conjunction with the Government, a like shift will be made in the case of the Rubber Association, which has been handling a big import business in crude rubber. The other lines of imports now being licensed by the British Consuls will, it was said, be transferred to American control with the least possible delay.

THIS WEEK'S FUR AUCTION.

It Has the Best Lot of Pelts Ever Offered at a Fall Sale.

Dealers from all over the United States and Canada will be here this week to attend the annual Fall sale of furs that begins in the Masonic Hall tomorrow at 10 A. M. The sale will open with a speech by Mayor Mitchel in behalf of the Liberty Loan, following which the Liberty Bond Committee of the fur industry will receive subscriptions to the loan.

The feature of tomorrow's selling will be the offerings of foxes, which are now in great vogue and extremely scarce. In this group 646 blue fox skins will be put up for sale, as well as 787 cross, 635 Japanese, 6,684 red, and 1,888 white foxes. Other pelts to be sold during the day include fisher, otter, and sea otter.

Tuesday's sessions will bring out nearly 14,000 kolinskys, 326 silver fox, and about 5,000 gray fox. With these will be offered Australian fox, wolverine, nutria, (more than 40,000,) bear, badger, Japanese marten, stone marten, and marten.

From a numerical point of view Wednesday will be the biggest day of all. Then Auctioneer J. Gordon Noakes of the New York Fur Auction Sales Corporation will put nearly 800,000 skins under the hammer. These will include more than 600,000 muskrat, about 70,000 mole, and close to 45,000 mink. The other furs to be sold that day are Japanese mink, sundries, Chinese civit, leopard cat, pahmi, Chinese weasel, and leopard.

Offerings of the "royal furs," Russian sable and ermine, will mark Thursday's selling. Of the former the collection totals 199, the quality running high according to executives of the corporation. The same thing is said to be true of the ermine, of which 43,000 skins will be sold. Civet cat, hare, American and Australian opossum, ringtail opossum, kangaroo, marmot, beaver, wildcat, ringtail, raccoon, chinchilla, and lynx are included in the remainder of the Thursday's goods.

Wolves, which are very much in demand as a result of the scarcity of foxes and skunk will mark the selling on the closing day, Friday. The skunk collection includes about 90,000 skins, and there are about 17,000 wolf pelts. Squirrel, fitch, and house cat will also be auctioned on that day.

Executives of the corporation say that the furs to be sold, as a whole, are the best that have ever been offered at a Fall sale. It is further said that there is every indication of a record attendance. These factors, combined with the scarcity of the most popular furs of the season, are expected to result in excellent prices all around.

Women Like Men's Wear Serge.

Men's wear serge is becoming more popular as the season progresses as a fabric for women's suits, according to reports from the local trade. Smart tailored models in this material, of decidedly mannish cut, are said to be moving very well in the larger cities of the country. "The step from the men's wear serge suit of mannish effect to severe military styles is not a great one," said a man in the trade, "and I would not be surprised to see it take place any time."

To Have New Commerce Chamber.

American residents and firms in Mexico are considering the establishment of an American Chamber of Commerce in Mexico City, according to Consul George A. Chamberlain, who is stationed there. A committee appointed for the purpose has submitted a prospectus in which the aims of the organization are set forth. The chief of these is to foster trade relations between this country and Mexico. The membership will be limited to Americans, and only active members will be permitted to have a voice in the affairs of the chamber.

PLAN FOR SELLING CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Another Way Suggested of Moving the Higher-Priced Novelties of a Store.

"Nearly time to think about selling Christmas gifts," said a member of the executive staff of a department store of moderate size. "I'm going to try a new angle on an old scheme this time, and I don't mind showing my hand in advance, as the scheme is not my own and couldn't hurt me if our nearest rival were to try it, as it is merely a good plan to move the higher priced and more exclusive novelties carried by almost any department store with a clientele which has money in quantity and doesn't object to spending it.

"Instead of a regulation 'house beautiful' idea, or an absolutely distinct department given over to household goods, both of which schemes are now as common as flies in August," the department store official continued, "I am going to make an intensive drive on my patrons' pocketbooks by building in the centre of the store's main floor a small house decorated in the most approved modern way. To sell furniture and so on, you think? Not by any means; that is, not just for that purpose, although we won't scare away any patron who may be pleased at such furniture as he may admire there. I shall make the interior of that little house as attractive as possible and it will be lighted appropriately as to its various rooms and halls with electric lights, each lamp and fixture bearing the price in plain figures and they won't be cheap. The walls I probably shall have covered with framed pictures of different sorts, each also marked with its price. The chairs standing about, covered with gayly colored cushions, will bear prices, as also will the cushions and the mirrors, ornamental tables with fancy gifts thereon and the player-piano, victrola and so on, each will bear its price, plain to the passer-by. The idea will be not so much to show how a house should be furnished as to display high-priced gifts, yet following the 'unities' as to house furnishing. It will not be an advertisement, merely as such, but a practical attempt to sell goods on sight. And the staff of clerks that will hover about will be the cleverest from each department that can be spared to answer questions about the stock and bring out the gifts' good selling points.

"Unlike the usual 'house beautiful' idea, just as much effort will be made to sell the toilet articles displayed on the chiffoniers and dressing tables as the furniture. Jewelry in jewel boxes, books rarely bound, and perfume in holiday holders and bottles will be prominent. Gifts for men—especially for the soldier and sailor from well-to-do families—will be featured in one part of the house and ought to bring a ready response. Comfort kits, athletic outfits, good for men at the cantonments, and various articles of appeal to the defenders of the country will not be kept in the background, and I think that tobacco and smoking utensils of various kinds, if one may call them that, will appear up in front of this department.

"The psychological effect on customers of the segregation of novelties has often been observed, and it is my belief that segregating them in this particular way, as they will appear amid their natural surroundings, without especially seeming to do so, will have its particular response. Curiosity makes the customer stop; the look-in fascinates the customer is impelled to investigate and the clever clerk with the ready answer helps to clinch the sale. Most especially shall I make an effort to keep the green, the uninformed and slow salesman and saleswoman away from this plan. The superintendent as well as the department heads will help me select the right clerks.

"In short, the most attractive things in the whole store will be featured in my first floor house scheme, and each class will be arranged in such a way, by experts—department heads as well as display managers—as to put forward its greatest advantages."

"This idea," continued the department store man, growing rosy with enthusiasm, "I believe could be carried out in a much smaller way with correspondingly good results. For instance, one might try segregating a certain number of the higher priced goods that are particularly attractive as Christmas gifts. Arrange them in an unusual way and make the lighting scheme somewhat extraordinary, as lighting has a most pronounced beneficial value to the articles shown, and place in charge experienced clerks able to offer suggestions unobtrusively, and you may be able to induce customers to buy many times what they would have purchased without such special effort."

CO-OPERATION IN RESEARCH.

British Way of Bringing About Progress in Industries.

Realizing that many industrial firms are barred from the benefits of scientific research into their particular lines of activity by the great cost, reports Consul Franklin D. Hale, Huddersfield, Eng., the Committee of the Privy Council for Scientific and Industrial Research proposes the introduction of the co-operative idea. In this way a firm that is unable to bear the entire expense of research could contribute to the cost and share in the benefits accruing to an industry as a whole. It is planned to establish trade research associations in England to be formed as needed for each industry or group of industries, and aided by certain funds which the committee has in charge. One association is about to be organized for the cotton industry, and others will be formed as soon as possible for the wool, flax, oil, and photographic industries.

The work that has already been accomplished through the committee's efforts, according to Mr. Hale, includes the discovery of three kinds of optical glass, the investigation of light alloys for use in aircraft, and the production of a new hard porcelain from purely British raw material. Researches into the recovery of tin are expected to save that industry a very large amount each year.

Whiskers May Become Popular.

Whiskers may become popular with many of the male sex if the safety razor makers do not stop adding to the high cost of living by shoving up prices on blades. One well-known concern, for instance, now packs five blades in its packages instead of six, the price remaining the same. The place of the sixth blade is taken by a printed notice to the effect that "increased cost of labor and material compels us to do one of two things—cheapen the quality or reduce the quantity. We have decided that you are entitled to the very best blades it is possible to produce, and that you would rather have five blades that are guaranteed than six that are questionable."

Need of Wool Census.

The details of various lots of wool that are not available for Government use are anxiously awaited by those who do not agree that there is the real shortage of wool that some have claimed exists. It is believed that there is considerable wool on hand that could not be used by the Government, and that the Australian wool recently released for shipment to this country will contain much that can only be used for civilian requirements. The grades of the various stocks that exist are not known, and it is pointed out that only by an exact census can this information be obtained.

SUFFRAGIST'S REPLY TO MRS. WADSWORTH

To the Editor of The New York Times:

IN a recent issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES, Mrs. James W. Wadsworth, Jr., expressed her anti-suffrage views. I agree that the picketing at Washington is most ill-advised, especially at this time when we are at war. Every man and woman should stand behind President Wilson and give him hearty support while he is weighed down with the perplexing problems of this great war. The suffragists generally disapprove of the picketing and the Woman Suffrage Party has, by resolution, condemned it. When, however, a large number of people are working for a cause, there invariably is a refractory group which goes to extremes in the methods it uses to bring about results for which all are working.

The argument that the vote should be withheld from women because they are pacifists is not well founded. If by pacifist is meant non-resistant, there are few women who could be so classed. Woman's natural instinct is to protect her home and children from attack. There are some unenfranchised women just as there are some enfranchised men who believe in non-resistance. It is equally deplorable that there are men as it is that there are women with no wider vision or better sense of our responsibility at this time. The writer, as well as thousands of other women—anti-suffragists and suffragists alike—deplore the fact that La Follette and Jeannette Rankin voted as they did.

The right or privilege to vote, to take part in self-government, cannot successfully be made to depend upon the wisdom or lack of wisdom of the views of certain individuals. If women are to be denied the vote because certain of their number are of a given opinion, men would have to be denied the vote on the same ground. Because several Republicans happened to believe in non-resistance, we certainly would not accuse the whole party of having the same opinion and disenfranchise the party on that ground; and because there are a few suffragists who happen to believe in non-resistance that is no reason why all the rest of us should be classed with them and deprived of the vote!

After Prussian militarism is defeated—and women will do their full share in bringing about its defeat—the conserving power of women all over the world will be of great assistance in bringing about that league of honor to assure an enduring peace, which has been proposed by President Wilson and accepted by the Allies as one of the aims of the war.

In New York, as an organization the suffragists did valuable work in taking the war census. Suffrage leaders hold prominent parts in Red Cross work and other war relief work. Not only are the suffrage leaders prominent in war work, but as would be expected of such brilliant women, they are and have been for years active in civic and educational and social work. In fact, the women who are doing the great and stirring things are almost invariably suffragists. These capable suffrage women should be released from the burden of the suffrage campaigns by victory at the polls, so they may devote the time now required for suffrage in these other fields. Even the organizers and leaders in this great movement, who really should not be expected to do much outside, have given most valuable assistance in the war.

Dr. Anna Howard Shaw is Chairman of the National Women's Council of Defense; Mrs. Florence Kelley is a member of the National Board of Control; Mrs. William L. Willcox has charge of the Red Cross work, as well as being the head of the Suffragist Party on Staten Island; Miss Mary Garrett Hay directed the military census work in New York City.

The fact that some women do not want the vote is not a sound argument against woman suffrage. During the civil war there were slaves who were fortunate enough to have kind masters and mistresses. These slaves were so comfortable that they actually said they did not want to be free. It showed, of course, what a bad effect slavery had on human beings—that when they were comfortable, even though they saw other slaves being separated from their families and unhappy, these more fortunate ones did not want their freedom and were willing to be owned, bought, and sold. The effect of political dependence with no vote and with no responsibility has had a similar effect upon some women. They are protected, comfortably off women who actually have come to the point where they are not only lukewarm on the subject of suffrage, but are even opposed to their own enfranchisement.

To free those slaves who had comfortable homes was, after all, a benefit to their race—every one acknowledges that now—and to give the women their political freedom will be an equal benefit to them. As human beings they will take their part in the life of the State and nation.

CAROLINE R. WADHAMS.

CHILDREN'S BUREAU COMPLETES FIRST YEAR

Problem of Finding Foster Parents for Homeless Little Ones Successfully Met by Department of Charities.

By GARRET SMITH,
Former Executive Secretary of the Babies' Welfare Association.

IT is a year now since Father Knickerbocker began giving systematic personal attention to his foster children. On Oct. 16 the Children's Home Bureau of the Department of Charities will observe its first anniversary. This birthday will be celebrated by a thousand youngsters who have been fortunate enough to come under the bureau's care during the year.

The Home Bureau was opened as an experiment. It was at first supported by private contributions. So thoroughly satisfactory was the experiment, that on July 3 last it was taken over by the Board of Estimate and made a permanent bureau of the Department of Charities. During the coming year Commissioner Kingsbury plans to extend its scope and, before the second anniversary, expects to care for several times as many children as he now has enrolled at the bureau.

Time was when children whose parents were either temporarily or permanently unable to care for them were placed in institutions by the wholesale and left there practically without supervision by the city. Some, "farmed out" to private families, had even less supervision than those left in the institutions. Often they were outrageously exploited.

The curable evils of the child-caring institution have been largely eliminated as the result of the recent charities investigation, the echoes of which have barely died away. The city now really controls these places. But an institution is not the proper place for a child except in extreme cases. Small humans can't be herded successfully. They need the individual care of a good and intelligent woman in a real home.

The Charities Department, however, had no list of such homes that it could vouch for. It had no staff of expert investigators to prepare such a list, no trained visitors to supervise the homes regularly and see that the children got proper care, no doctors and nurses to look out for their health, no office to direct all this and to do the work of collecting and distributing the children among those homes.

These lacks the Children's Home Bureau has supplied. It is the product of the combined ideas and ideals of Mayor Mitchel, Controller Prendergast, and Charities Commissioner Kingsbury. Mr. Mitchel, long before he became Mayor, had given much sympathetic thought to the homeless child. Controller Prendergast had been doing the same thing. This was one of the reasons why, when he became Mayor, Mr. Mitchel picked for his Commissioner of Charities John A. Kingsbury, who had long been making the solution of this problem one of his hobbies. He had a plan for solving it which the Mayor and Controller believed practical, and they backed him to the limit in carrying it out.

On Monday, Oct. 16, 1916, the bureau was opened for cases at 327 Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn. General supervision had been turned over to Deputy Commissioner A. J. Doherty, who was once an institution child himself, and has devoted his life since to making things easier for other foster children. John Daniels, a man with years of experience in work of this sort, was made Director.

Mr. Daniels and his staff of visitors and supervisors had worked for four months before the opening date in compiling a carefully selected list of homes of the proper character. In all, some 4,000 homes were investigated. Out of these 333 were selected as having the proper requirements—the houses themselves clean, airy, and comfortable, the surroundings attractive and healthful, the foster mothers thoroughly vouched for as of good moral and religious character, intelligent and kindly, and good housekeepers. The peculiar qualities of each had been carefully recorded, so that it was possible to pick out just the right home to fit the special needs of each case.

At the headquarters of the bureau the child is first scrubbed, if necessary, then given a thorough physical examination in the clinic there. If dental work, tonsil, or adenoid operations are necessary, or any other special attention, that, too, is given. Every three months the child is brought back to this clinic and reexamined, unless some unusual condition makes a more frequent examination necessary. Complete records of the cases are kept.

After the examination the youngsters get a new outfit of clothes, as far as necessary, from the bureau's storeroom. These are not uniforms, but regular clothes, of all sizes, colors, and designs, carefully fitted to the wearers. After this first outfit the foster parents are expected to keep the children properly clothed.

From the bureau the children go for a few days to a temporary shelter. This gives the bureau workers a chance to study their new charges carefully and note their peculiarities, so that they may the more surely pick out just the right foster parents. This also gives time to make certain that the children are not harboring any infection that might break out afterward in their new homes. This temporary shelter is a big house in an outlying section of Brooklyn, surrounded by a roomy playground. A doctor and a nurse are in attendance and an isolation ward is provided for newcomers.

Once in the new home the child is watched faithfully by the bureau's district visitor, who calls at least every two weeks. This visitor supervises closely the feeding, clothing, recreation, sleeping quarters, and education of the children. Attention is also given to religious instruction. In all cases a child is placed in a home of the same religious faith as his parents, and a home whose church standing is vouched for by the local priest, rabbi, or minister.

The three dollars a week apiece paid these foster parents by the bureau is by no means their chief compensation. That barely covers their actual outlay; in some cases it does not cover it. A visit that I made to some of these homes the other day convinced me that, in every case, the foster parents get their chief reward from the happiness they find in caring for their little charges.

In one home I found a beautiful little boy of 3 who could hardly have received more love from the couple who had him if they had been his own parents. The man, who is a night-worker, was asleep when we called. Nothing would do but that he must dress and come out to take part in the display of "their boy." The wife was particularly proud of the fact that neighbors had told her the boy looked like her. The child's own mother had apparently abandoned him and the father was unknown. So the foster parents are planning eagerly to adopt "their boy."

In another home the foster mother was greatly worried for fear her charges were not gaining in weight rapidly enough. Before we left it was decided that she must buy another quart of milk for them each day and to this she cheerfully agreed.

In all I visited fifteen of these homes. I visited Catholic and Protestant and Jewish homes, the homes of negro Catholics and negro Protestants. Mr. Daniels told me that they had even provided Greek Catholic homes. Every race, color, and religion is considered.

These homes are scattered for the most part through the outlying districts of Long Island, Staten Island, Brooklyn, the Bronx, and Westchester County. About half of these foster parents own their homes. They are, in fact, good average Americans, engaged in the noble task of helping Father Knickerbocker make his less fortunate children into the same sort of Americans.

Of all the thousands cared for only four died during the year, three from pneumonia and one from scarlet fever. The cases of serious illness have been very few. Not a child between the prescribed ages of 2 and 7 years who has applied for admission during the year has been rejected on account of its condition, excepting a few who were positively feeble-minded and needed special institutional care.

Now that the bureau has proved a success, the department is planning to extend its work so as to include infants and their mothers and the placing of children in free homes for adoption. When this is accomplished—Commissioner Kingsbury hopes it will be during the next year—the circle of usefulness of the Children's Home Bureau will be complete.

DR. ELIOT'S ARTICLE ELICITS ANSWERS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

FAR be it from these few words, which follow the article by Dr. Eliot, "Informal Steps Toward Peace," that appeared in THE TIMES on Oct. 7, to make special criticism or rebuttal. Its sequence gives opportunity for two or three general considerations to which the "President Emeritus" himself had given seeming weight in previous papers and which controvert his present position.

Dr. Eliot was certainly prepared, like most reflecting persons, for the tremendous and prolonged nature of the attack upon civilization when he joined in the support of the war, of which the end was the defeat of their attack. Horrible as the task is, the duty to "see it through" is measurably increased, and is not diminished, by the present demand to support our young "crusaders" engaged therein, by sea, by land, and by the air. "Stalmat" is not a well chosen epithet to describe the conditions. It may be ungenerous to dwell upon it, since the author now withdraws the word, but day by day it grows more unfitting. Testimony is not lacking, from both friend and enemy, to the hopeful military outlook.

But danger does lie in the political and social situation. The world weariness of the war gives opportunity—which the pacifists, pure and simple, the hearts whom are wrung with the prolonged agony, do not quite weigh or feel its true import—to the opponents of war as synchronized with all government and law. Unity and concentration, the most vigorous action against enemies at home as well as abroad are required to prevent, here in America and perhaps in England and France, the growth of anarchy, under the guise of socialism, and of "People's Councils," (from which, as from a "Cave of Adullam," many good men have withdrawn,) "democratic control," and so on. Any talk of pause or parley at once stiffens the movements which menace not merely the active prosecution of the war but all civil order. The "Bolsheviki" in Russia is not merely a warning; it is to a degree an actual fruition of American propaganda. Laboring long with the Socialists of the United States in the hope of some international help for the great cause of democracy, the writer became convinced that its working majority is really "red" in this country, co-operating in effect with German socialism by producing chaotic conditions among the Allies, while in the Entente it is a Kaiser tool.

Every negotiation between warring nations inevitably leads to some sort of suspension of military activities, which adds its increment to that constant pressure to end a terrible contest which goes along side by side with its inertia and impetus. This fact must be faced. It has been well said in this connection that any such suspension, were it followed, as it is at least conceivable, by an active resumption of war through its entire failure, (where is the least sign of the necessary complete reparation and restitution by Germany?) would give the Kaiser a considerable military advantage. The language of The Spectator (Aug. 25) is:

> He can whip in his pack again, when he chooses, wherever the allied packs have, as it were, to sit down and talk over the situation before they can again agree upon any combined action. If ever we play into German hands in this matter we shall commit the greatest breach of trust and deal the hardest blow to the hopes of peace that any responsible nation could conceivably be guilty of.

In regard to the contention that such a crushing victory of German military prestige and power, with which the "visible evidence" indicates the whole people to be obsessed, would not cause them to "stay conquered" and to cease to be a general cause of dread and anxiety, let us learn a lesson from our recent history. In the first place, such a throw down of the idol would open the eyes in the only way possible with a besotted nation. Our President, in his fine growth into the situation, has passed beyond that sanguine hope for a peace—a lasting peace—without victory. What have been hitherto the results of compromises, conferences, and diplomatic arrangements? Dissensions, revolutions, and subsequent wars, too often.

The learned President of the United States and the Emeritus of Harvard are familiar with the beneficent effects of the great victories of the ages, with defeats which saved and redeemed the world. But how long was it before France forgot "perfide Albion" after Waterloo and came to recognize the justice of the allied powers of the day in their great "purpose of obtaining some security for their own independence and for the reconquest of that peace and permanent tranquillity for which the world has so long panted." (Lord Clancarty to Lord Castlereagh, May 6, 1815.)

And have not we, as Americans, to recognize the birth of our nation and its rebirth into a "more perfect union," North and South, one in fact, and allied with England now in deed—through the victory, with unconditioned surrender, over Cornwallis and Lee!

Recognizing the victors' large and beneficent scope, influenced greatly by the United States, its justice and righteousness, to the real advantage of the German people, it would not be long before they could be admitted to the "League of Peace" now existing (Esto perpetua!) among the Allies.

FOR A FINISH FIGHT.

Hudson Maxim Argues for a Complete German Defeat.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read yesterday in the Magazine Section of THE SUNDAY TIMES the article by Dr. Charles W. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard, in which he has attempted to explain and excuse an indits who by this war and in this war have violated all treaties, broken all understandings, ignored all dictates of conscience and humanity, and have seized the world by the throat in an attempt to strangle freedom out of it.

Like the century plant that for a long period of years stores up nourishment for the supreme effort of its fruiting, so did the German military autocracy prepare itself for the supreme effort which was sprung in 1914. Spies masquerading as pacifists were sent from the Wilhelmstrasse to create a public opinion in other countries opposed to militarism, while at the same time an exactly opposite propaganda was continuously worked among the German people.

Public opinion is a created thing. It is not a creator. Nine persons out of ten hold the religious opinion that they have been taught to hold, and nine-tenths of a population of any country hold that public opinion which they have been taught to hold.

Knowing this, the German military ring, just as they prepared soldiers for the field by training them, prepared the public mind for the approval of whatever the military ring might do. Military training is the greatest school of patriotism in the world. This truth was appreciated and utilized in Germany.

Dr. Eliot refers to the manifest patriotism of the Germans and to the fact that they stand with their Government and for their Government. That attitude of mind of the German people was made that way by the German military ring.

This fact, however, is not opposed to the truth of President Wilson's pertinent statement that we are not at war with the German people but with German military autocracy. As a matter of fact, we and our allies, while we are fighting for our lives and freedom, are likewise fighting to enable all other nations to enjoy free institutions, and are actually fighting for the German people themselves just as we are fighting for ourselves. Just as the North in the great civil war, in fighting to free the great civil war, in fighting to free Southern people from the abominable institution of slavery, we, today, in fighting Germany, are fighting to free the German people from the thralldom of the greatest militaristic abomination in the history of this world.

Until German militaristic autocracy shall have been put out of action by such measures as shall insure its being kept out of action, any pacifist palaver is not only pernicious but also so dishonorable and cowardly as to revolt the sense of every normal-minded American. Until that end shall have been accomplished the only peace talk that can be held with Germany must be heliographed with cannon fire, and all gestures must be made with a sword in the hand.

HUDSON MAXIM.

Maxim Park, N. J., Oct. 8, 1917.

THE PLAN ACCEPTED

Considered the Best Suggestion for Ending the War.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Dr. Eliot's proposition is the most sane of anything that has lately been published. The war has got to be settled by reason, and not by might. Reason has not been reasonably tried. Why not try it? The German mind is very dense and requires a far different handling than the American mind. There would be nothing to lose in a conference. There might be years of loss prevented in men, money, and civilization.

It may be that the Kaiser is not open to reason; but it has not been proved that he is not. America has got to lay down the law and firmly stand by its application; but it is mere assumption to conclude that the war has got to be finished by rendering Germany helpless through war. If she is specifically given to understand that she must be willing to, along with every other peoples, be rendered powerless, and if the other peoples guarantee that they likewise will submit to a like condition, the war will stop. So long as Germany feels that she alone is to be deprived of power, she will fight to the death, as we or any other self-respecting people will and should do.

The United States would not lose by doing what is right and just. The most difficult thing we have got to learn is that all the virtue of the world is not outside of Germany, and that to treat a set of pig-headed, perverse, and misled human beings as criminals is not sensible. I have had enough experience to know that more can be done by patience in conciliation than by the club.

Our Right to Propose Peace.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Perhaps Dr. Eliot thinks we never should have come into this war to take a part—our end and aim but to "bluff it out."

What has our country accomplished in this war that we should have the right to breathe the word peace? Oh, the shame for us, should we harbor such a thought, and still pretend to turn an honest face toward our heroic allies, whose young men lie dead by thousands on the battlefields! What have we done? Paid a few bills that cost us no pains.

If the war ends today Germany has won.

SEVENTEEN NATIONS NOW FACE GERMANY

SEVENTEEN nations are at war with Germany.

Nine others have severed relations with the German Government.

Since the United States entered the war, on April 6, fifteen nations have either declared war against the Imperial German Government or have broken diplomatic relations. Of the twenty-one American republics, three are at war with Germany, ten others have severed relations, another has announced that it will not officially receive the German Minister, still another has dismissed the German Minister from office and placed him under arrest, and has voted for a break, although the last-named action was not ratified by the executive; and there are rumors of strong anti-German feeling in some of the other Latin-American countries.

The history of the declarations of war up to the day of our own entrance into the conflict is generally familiar. Not every one knows all the dates; almost every one could name the ten allied nations (nearly, if not quite) in the order of their participation, from the time when Austria-Hungary's declaration of war against Serbia was so quickly followed by German invasion of Belgium. But the nations that have followed our example, that have either actually declared war or have severed relations, offer a somewhat confusing list to most of us. It is probable that not many people realize that there are fifteen of them! And it is quite as likely that many Americans do not realize that the list does not include Argentina!

Cuba, China, Brazil, Argentina, are names that would be almost sure to come to any one's mind with the suggestion of international complications since April 6. And it is quite probable that many people think of the situation in those four countries as being very much alike with regard to the Central empires. As a matter of fact, the four nations named represent four different international situations.

China is at war with Germany and Austria-Hungary.

Cuba is at war with Germany alone.

Brazil has broken relations with Germany, but is not at war.

Argentina has not severed relations, although both her Senate and Chamber of Deputies voted for a break.

In addition to Cuba and China, four other nations have entered upon actual hostilities since April 6, and Brazil is one of nine countries which have severed relations. In Argentina, a break has been urged ever since we entered the war, anti-German demonstrations have been made again and again, negotiations between the republic and Germany have seemed close to a severance of relations, and, after the Luxburg exposé, a break was much discussed and generally expected. But in spite of the action of the Congress, relations are officially unchanged.

The action of the United States in declaring war against the Imperial Government of Germany was immediately followed by like declarations from Cuba and Panama. Before the war resolution actually passed our Congress, the Government in Havana had officially announced that it would stand by the United States. The resolution of April 7, therefore, was a formal, and altogether expected, declaration of war. It read as follows:

> Article 1. Resolved, that from today a state of war is formally declared between the Republic of Cuba and the Imperial Government of Germany, and the President of the republic is authorized and directed by this resolution to employ all the forces of the nation and the resources of our Government to make war against the Imperial German Government with the object of maintaining our rights, guarding our territory, and providing for our security, prevent any acts which may be attempted against us, and defend the navigation of the seas, the liberty of commerce, and the rights of neutrals and international justice.
> Article 2. The President of the Republic is hereby authorized to use all the land and naval forces in the form he may deem necessary, using existing forces, reorganizing them, or creating new ones, and to dispose of the economic forces of the nation in any way he may deem necessary.
> Article 3. The President will give account to Congress of the measures adopted in fulfillment of this law, which will be in operation from the moment of its publication in the official gazette.

The action of Panama, however, was somewhat different. The proclamation signed by President Valdez on April 7 committed the republic to the specific assistance of the United States in the defense of the Panama Canal. President Valdez sent a message to President Wilson indorsing the action of this country in declaring war, "after the United States had given unequivocal proofs of its love of peace and had made efforts to save Western civilization from the horrors of war, and had borne with patience a long series of provocations as irritating as they have been unjustifiable." He then signed the following proclamation:

> Our indisputable duty in this tremendous hour of history is of a common ally, whose interests and existence as well are linked indissolubly with the United States. As the situation creates dangers for our country, it is the duty of the Panaman people to co-operate with all the energies and resources they can command for the protection of the canal and to safeguard national territory.

The attitude of the people was foreseen and interpreted faithfully in a resolution unanimously approved by the National Assembly on Feb. 24, and confirmed by later laws, and the moment has arrived for the Executive to act in accordance with the declarations of the supreme body. I therefore declare that the Panaman Nation will lend emphatic co-operation to the United States against enemies who execute or attempt to execute hostile acts against the territory of the canal, or in any manner affect or tend to affect the common interests.

The Government will adopt adequate measures in accordance with the circumstances. I consider it the patriotic duty of all Panaman citizens to facilitate the military operations which the forces of the United States undertake within the limits of our country. Foreigners, resident or transient, will be obliged to submit to the conditions of this declaration.

It was reported on the same day that Brazil was about to sever relations, and the break was formally decided upon by the Cabinet Council of that country on April 10. The official announcement was made next day, and the German Minister departed from a country where, according to current reports, the Pan German party had worked hard and hoped much.

The next move came from Costa Rica, herself in the throes of an internal political "situation." It was not the severance of relations. It was a message to the United States, officially placing Costa Rican harbors and waters completely at the service of this country. The note stated that Costa Rica regretted that, because of its lack of material strength, it could not in this crisis "tender to the United States a more substantial co-operation," but declared that it would be cause for the greatest satisfaction to the little Central American country if the United States would accept the use of her ports. On the 22d of June a dispatch stated that when Costa Rica replied to the Brazilian announcement of revocation of neutrality in the war, she declared that her attitude conformed to that of Brazil. On Sept. 21 Costa Rica formally severed relations with Germany.

On April 13 Bolivia broke with Germany, and on April 28 Guatemala followed suit.

Then, on the 9th of May, something of a surprise came to the American public when it was announced that Liberia, the negro republic in Africa, had severed relations with Germany. This action was of more value than might at first be supposed, for the wireless and cable facilities of Liberia were thereby removed from German control.

On Aug. 7 formal announcement was made of Liberia's declaration of war against Germany, and German merchants and others accused of unneutral activities in the negro republic were interned.

Quickly following the example of Guatemala, two other Central American republics severed relations with Germany—Honduras on May 18 and Nicaragua the next day. A month later, on June 19, Haiti's break with Germany was announced. Haiti's National Assembly had, early in May, unanimously adopted a report authorizing the Executive to demand guarantees of Germany, and, if necessary, to sever relations. The guarantees were not given and the break followed at once.

By June, though so many South and Central American nations had severed relations, and the anti-German feeling was strong in many parts of the world, no other country had actually entered the war since Cuba and Panama followed the example of the United States. On the 28th of June a question was settled that had perplexed the world for almost three years—Greece entered the war on the side of the Entente Allies.

The dispatch from Athens of that date stated that Greece had broken diplomatic relations with Germany, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey, and added that, although war was not formally declared, the severance of relations was "considered by the Government" at Athens as tantamount to the announcement of a state of war. For some days the exact status of Greece in the war was uncertain in the mind of the rest of the world; but on July 16 official information was received in Washington to the effect that Greece was undoubtedly in "a state of war" with all four Central Powers. The Greek Minister in Paris, it was explained, had notified the French Government that Greece considered herself a full belligerent and would act accordingly, but that a formal declaration was not deemed necessary, inasmuch as the Government felt itself bound by the declarations previously issued at Saloniki by Venizelos, "who took with him to Athens all the responsibilities and commitments of the temporary Saloniki Government." It will be remembered that the abdication of King Constantine on June 12 in favor of his second son, Alexander, had been followed by the recall of Venizelos as Premier. And the active alignment of Greece with the Entente Allies was expected.

Only a few weeks after Greece entered the war news was received in London that Siam had ranged herself on the side of the Allies. This was on July 22.

China declared war upon Germany and Austria-Hungary on Aug. 14. This action had been expected for months. China severed diplomatic relations with Germany on March 14, having first protested against the extension of submarine warfare, with no result. In April China's entrance into the war was spoken of almost as an accomplished fact, and articles were written under titles such as "Why China Joins the Conflict." The Government, it was stated then, had "decided to join the Entente at an early date." Political complications in China made such action impossible then, and in May it was again spoken of as sure to take place soon. But divisions in China were so sharp and party feeling so strong and so mutually hostile that it was not until the readjustment and peace that followed the rebellion of June that affairs "settled down" enough to make a declaration of war possible.

China was the seventeenth—and, so far, is the last—nation to enter upon actual hostilities against Germany. But there are eighteen countries really "in the war" against one or more of the Central Powers.

On June 8, 1915, San Marino, whose area is thirty-eight square miles, and whose population numbers 10,635, joined Italy, by whose territory she is surrounded—in the announcement of a state of war with Austria-Hungary. The dual monarchy is therefore unable to use her territory as a base. In point of area San Marino wrests from Andorra the proud title of "the smallest republic in the world," but she has a few thousand more inhabitants than her rival in the Pyrenees. San Marino is the oldest State in Europe.

Peru severed relations with Germany on Oct. 5 and Uruguay on Oct. 7. On Oct. 8 the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of Ecuador announced that the German Minister to Peru and Ecuador, dismissed from Peru, where he had his official residence at Lima, would not be officially received by the Ecuadorian Government if he came to Ecuador. Although this was not an actual "break," it was officially indicative of the position of the country.

Argentina has been involved in complications with Germany that have brought her very near a break more than once, and the anti-German feeling in the country has broken out several times in "demonstrations" that were accompanied by actual violence. Almost immediately after our declaration of war, the Argentine Government announced that it supported the United States on the submarine issue, and, in addition, a note was delivered by the Ambassador indorsing our action in declaring war. There followed German sinkings of Argentine ships, the forced closing of German newspaper offices in Buenos Aires, a mob attack on these offices and on the German Legation and Consulate, and the passage of resolutions supporting the United States, the Entente Allies, Brazil, the Russian Revolution, and protesting against German violation of international rights. Meanwhile negotiations with Germany over the matter of the ships continued. On the 2d of May it was announced that the German Imperial Government had "expressed regret" and "offered reparation" in the case of the Argentine vessel Monte Protegido, and that the "imperial squadron" would "salute the Argentine flag at the earliest opportunity." But there were other ships reported sunk by U-boats, too, and probably demonstrations continued. With the Luxburg exposé every one is familiar. On Sept. 19 the Argentine Senate voted, 23 to 1, to sever relations with Germany. After some delay the Chamber of Deputies concurred in the decision, by a vote of 53 to 18. But President Irigoyen has not ratified the action of the Congress, and the official place of Argentina remains among the absolute neutrals.

Chile and Paraguay to the south, and Colombia and Venezuela to the north, also maintain official relations with Germany. It is not expected that Colombia will ally herself with the United States, for there is still resentment there over the matter of Panama. In Venezuela strong German interests and activities are believed to be influential enough to keep the country neutral. In Chile the anti-German feeling is said to be growing. Feeling in Mexico has been repeatedly said to be friendly toward the United States and the Entente Allies, but an authoritative statement was made in Washington in July to the effect that, if Mexico broke with Germany it would not be upon advice of the United States Government.

YOUR NEW LIBERTY BONDS.

Terms and Advantages of Government's Four Per Cent. War Loan Concisely Explained.

They pay 4 per cent. interest.

Interest is payable twice a year, May 15 and Nov. 15.

They are exempt from all taxes except estate or inheritance taxes, and super-taxes and excess profits and war profit taxes imposed by the United States.

But the interest on all bonds not exceeding $5,000 owned by any individual, partnership, or corporation is exempt from the super-tax, excess profit, and war profit tax.

They come in denominations of $50, $100, and multiples thereof. And you can apply for them at any bank, trust company, bond house, and Liberty Loan Committee booth or office. No fee is charged anywhere for applications or for advice.

The Government requires the banks to pay 2 per cent. with application—18 per cent. Nov. 15, 1917; 40 per cent. Dec. 15, 1917; 40 per cent. Jan. 15, 1918. You can subscribe through any bank on these terms; or you may make arrangements with the bank for easier payments.

It will be to the best advantage of the nation's business if you subscribe through a bank on the partial-payment plan, paying a small percentage down and making a loan from the bank for the balance.

If the Government issues any bonds at a higher rate of interest during the war you can exchange these bonds for those of the higher rate, but maturing at the same time as these. But you must take advantage of this privilege within six months of the new issue or lose the right of exchange.

If you hold bonds of the first Liberty Loan, at 3½ per cent., you can convert them into the new bonds at 4 per cent. if you make your application for exchange within six months—that is, before May 15, 1918.

The bonds will be paid off on Nov. 15, 1942. But the Government has the privilege of paying off the issue, in whole or in part, at par and accrued interest, on and after Nov. 15, 1927.

You can sell a Liberty bond at any time, anywhere. Any bank will sell it for you.

Subscriptions to the 4 per cent. Liberty Loan close on Saturday, Oct. 27, 1917, at noon.

Nathan Hale said —

"My only regret is that I have but one life to give for my country."

What have you given for your country?

What are you willing to give?

These are the questions that every American must ask himself today.

There can be no dodging, no evasion.

You must answer.

Before you answer, ask yourself—

What is it worth to me to live in a free country?

What is it worth to me to know that my loved ones have the protection of a flag and a government that stand for humanity, justice and democracy?

What will it be worth to me when right has triumphed, and civilization has been saved from destruction, to know that I had my part in the battle?

What will it be worth to me to think that I, in the hour when every man was tested, did not shrink back from the thing that was mine to do?

Then answer.

Can there be any possible reply save that you stand ready to serve in whatever way you can?

A way is open, today and at the moment you read these lines, for every man and woman in this land to show patriotism and loyalty.

Not as Nathan Hale did, by going bravely to execution.

Not as a million of your fellow-countrymen are doing, as they leave homes and families to take their places with the others who are battling for human liberty on the shell-raked wastes of France and Flanders.

You, indeed, are not called upon now to GIVE anything.

Only to put the fighting power of your dollars back of the guns and the men that Uncle Sam is sending across the ocean.

INVESTMENT is all that is asked of you—investment in the safest security your money could buy, in time of war or peace—a United States Bond.

The second Liberty Loan issue, of $3,000,000,000, is open to subscription. The United States is in this war to win it. It has the men, and the money.

Some of that money is yours. The promptness of your response to your country's call is the measure of your loyalty.

United States Government Bonds of the Second Liberty Loan are issued in denominations of $50 and multiples of that sum.

They bear interest at 4%—payable semi-annually.

You can buy Liberty Bonds at any bank and on the partial payment plan if you wish—Buy all you can.

FURS BLOSSOM FORTH FOR AUTUMN WEAR

More Sumptuous Than Ever This Season—How a Stylish Hat Helped Sell Liberty Bonds—Many Velvet Afternoon Gowns—Skirts Lower Than Before.

THE first Fall days bring out the first Fall suits and gowns in a multitude. One wonders how they all happened to be ready and waiting when the bugle of cold weather sounded. But, crisp and fresh and new, there they are, filling the restaurants and the shops and gracing the motor cars that pass up and down Fifth Avenue. Of course, we all knew about the new Paris creations, but we couldn't really tell whether or not they would "take," as the saying is, until we had actually seen them parading.

Bustles have taken quite a decided hold, if first appearances are to be trusted at all, and the tight-fitting basque, patronized by our mothers in an older day, has become really a thing of the moment. It buttons tightly down the front and fits snugly to the figure, and it is at its best when the skirt is made in bustle fashion, poking pertly out behind.

Furs are the most noticeable appurtenances that have blossomed forth in the last week or two. It may be that they are particularly radiant, because they have been absent for the Summer, but that is not true after all, for they have been present through every season for some years past. However, this season they are much more sumptuous and rich looking than before. They are worn with a decided tendency to wrap about the figure. The furs are generally made in long straight pieces, either narrow or wide as the case may be, and then they are twined about the person—over the right shoulder, across to the left side of the waistline, around the waist and up over the left shoulder. This is done most effectively with a scarf of pointed fox about three yards in length, and finished with the regulation tail at either end. The kolinsky and sable capes have long stole ends in front. These are thrown gracefully over the other shoulder and, in some cases, held around the waist. In any case one must envelop one's self in one's furs, it seems, in order to attain the maximum of smartness.

Fur capes reach the waist. No more cunning little shoulder effects, but those that completely cover the bodice are most acceptable. Sealskin is the pet fur for capes, but it usually is adorned with another sort and another color of fur for trimming, either squirrel or nutria or kolinsky or some other short-haired colored fur. A cape of sealskin slides into sleeves from the rear, and is held by a narrow belt close to the figure in front, making a sort of a semicape coat. It is trimmed with skunk on the cuffs and on the rolled collar. Another one has two stole ends in front finished with spacious pockets of squirrel, which can serve the purpose of the usual muff by keeping the tightly gloved hands protected from the Winter winds.

At luncheon in one of the big hotels the other day many plain blue and black suits were seen. But they were tremendously enlivened by the things called accessories, which play such an important part in the finished costume of a well-gowned woman. A dark blue twill suit, cut as no one but a Parisian or a Parisian understudy can cut it, was accompanied by everything in tan—a soft crush hat of tan gloveskin cloth, brown shoes with tan buckskin tops, tan gauntlet dress gloves, a tan leather-handled umbrella, and even a soft-looking animal scarf of tannish, brownish fox. The tout ensemble was a finished thing of beauty. Another irresistibly feminine creature was gowned in blue with gray fixings carried out in much the same plan, the gray hat being a tiny turban of stiff gray feathers with a gray bobbing, dotted veil attached to it.

An all-blue frock had ever so small a collar and cuffs of Irish crochet laid over the darkness of the blue, the better to exhibit the fineness of its weave and pattern. One could not help noticing that a simple string of pearls and a beautiful finger ring were handsomely set off by this outline of gorgeous lace.

Biscuit color was the keynote of a suit and hat done all in the same tone. Then, for accent, the lady wore a shoulder cape of shiny black sealskin, which was the only dark spot on her outfit.

Crush crowns are certainly the distinguishing feature of all the new hats. They appear on small hats and large hats, on brimless hats, and on regulation turbans, and they are graceful and picturesque in whatever outline they may choose to assume for the moment. They are so good looking that seldom are they overburdened with trimming—just a note of color or a line of gold is all that is seen in the way of extra trimming. The line is the thing, and one only needs to look at a few of them gathered together to know the reason why.

A bit of fashion psychology was noticed in connection with the serious business of selling Liberty bonds in the lobby of a hotel. All the forenoon not a bond changed hands through the drab-looking person who sat behind the desk. It was evident that her clothes were good and well cut, but somehow they lacked the popular "pep." Her relief appeared upon the scene, dressed plainly enough in navy blue, but with a surprising bit of color for a hat, a thing of raspberry red in a modest blocked felt, from the brim of which trailed a fascinating veil. Business picked up at once. The casual passerby felt called upon to help his country in a material way by buying from the raspberry-hatted person. There was not a dot to choose between the good looks of those two women, but it was she of the smart lines that helped her country most. So much for fashion in wartime.

Tea at another hotel disclosed an abundance of velvet afternoon gowns. To be sure, they were simple and plain enough to suit the most rabid wartime economy fiend, but if the truth were told, economy was noticeably among the missing. No signs of any strict deprivation in that quarter—only a distinct change from a tendency to gaudiness as in past years to a tendency toward simplicity or the secret of all acknowledged good taste.

A velvet gown there was—all plain golden brown with a draped skirt and bodice cut somewhat in kimono fashion. It had a little apron only about ten inches long, made of gold beads; a string of woven gold beads finished with heavy tassels fell loosely from the low cut throat, and the only other note of brightness on the costume was shoes and stockings of bronze that looked almost gold. There were cuffs and a collar of skunk—just inconspicuous little things—and the hat was drooping in line with a crushed crown made all of the same brown velvet with a spot of gold over one eye.

Another velvet gown was of brown, too. Be it remembered that brown is the season's chosen color. The effect was of two brown panels—one at back and one at front—held together only by a loose tack on the hem at each side, where the panels met. At the sides full gathered pieces of braid-embroidered chiffon of a dull sand color flopped gracefully as the wearer walked about. The full, flowing sleeves were made of the same chiffon material, as was also the bit of a gathered yoke. The only other diversion on that frock was a little apron of the brown velvet, with a narrow belt above it made of Chinese blue satin.

It was hard to tell whether she chose the khaki officer as a foil for the red gown, or whether the red gown had been selected as a background for the khaki. At any rate it was all done very well, and the red gown was a thing to be seen and admired and remembered. It was perfect as it stood. The peplum of the coat (and the color was a dull mahogany red, by the way) was shorter at the back than it was at the front, and it was made so full and perky that it stuck out behind in much the same attitude that a bustle assumes. The skirt was rather short and conspicuously tight around the ankles. Then there was a red hat—not a shade of difference in color—made poke bonnet shape with a red bow in front. The only divergence in color came in the shape of chocolate brown suede pumps and stockings.

Afternoon Gown of Brown Velvet and Colored Embroidered Chiffon.

At the same teaing place were seen numerous hats made high with curling ostrich feathers meeting in a point far above the crown of the head. There was, too, a preponderance of varnished ribbon bows of black and brown on hats of simple lines. There were knitting bags galore. One was of French blue velvet trimmed with a band of open gold lace to match the French blue velvet gown with which it was carried. Another one was made extravagantly of sable fur to match the sable fur cape that traveled along with it and the knitting. Still another, small of form and bunchy in its black velvet composition, was attached to the top end of a swagger stick and held a partly finished stocking and its accompanying ball of gray yarn. It may have been an accident that the suit of the lady who knitted the sock was of gray Scotch tweed, though one doubts it.

At the Red Cross pageant on Long Island last week all of society was gathered together, and there were many up-to-date creations visible in this atmosphere of charity. Visible on the landscape were many two-part dresses—one part of plaid, one of velvet; one part of gray jersey, one of blue; one part of white broadcloth, one of black, and so on. These gowns in two tones have a decided claim to popularity at present. Generally the hat and the shoes matched the lighter portion of the frock, making a well-thought-out scheme of things.

The hats could be said to be neither one thing nor the other. There were as many large, sweeping shapes as there were small, close fitting turbans. However, they seemed decidedly to be either large or small, with few or none occupying the safe middle distance. Of medium-sized bears there were none at all.

Since a part of the journey to the pageant, if not all of it, had to be accomplished by motor, there were necessarily many motor coats in evidence. They were almost, without exception, made of Burella cloth or duvetyne in shades that appeared to have softened from the bright, glaring tones of last year. That is, there was crushed rose, instead of brilliant American Beauty; there were heliotrope and violet, instead of startling purples; there was a delicate yellow, instead of a giddy lime.

Skirts were, generally speaking, lower than during the previous seasons, and there were noticed on several gowns the three-quarter sleeves, supplemented with three-quarter-length kid gloves, rolling over the wrist and lower arm. Shoes, in spite of the high cost of leather, were as high as they could well be, and more often than not they had lowish, flat heels. Pumps were an exception to this rule, but then pumps are not for cold weather and outdoor entertainments.

On a great many of the new models lately imported from Paris are to be seen sashes in various forms and shapes. This is an innovation. It has been a long time since the sash was a popular bit of wearing apparel. On some of the velvet gowns, for instance, the sash is made of the velvet material in the gown; it extends from the side around to the back, is lined with a contrasting color of satin, and is tied in a knot at the back, the wide heavy ends dropping to the bottom of the skirt.

An evening gown of magenta velvet softly draped around the figure has for its only bit of trimming a flowered ribbon sash with bits of metal brocade running through it. It is tied at a point of vantage around the hips, and its rather irregular bow with long ends is placed at the side, under the arm.

Sometimes on evening gowns these old-fashioned, new-fashioned sashes are tied in regular butterfly bows, and there has never been in fashion history anything more picturesque and quaint. Sometimes the sashes have fringed ends, and sometimes the wide ribbon is drawn together and finished with a heavy tassel, which helps toward the clinging effect so much to be desired in the newest gowns. On one informal evening frock the sash has one end much longer than the other. Indeed, the long end trails upon the ground in a most casual way, seeming to say, "I can be a train if I want to."

A dress of dark blue metal brocade has a sash of cloth of silver tied in a stingy bow with long and generous ends. And the bodice of an afternoon frock, having crossed surplice fashion directly in front, goes on to the rear and ties in a sash at the end of the backbone.

There are still to be seen some girdles, especially with the slip-over tunics that will not say die. In these there is a chance for great latitude and a large display of fancy. They may be beads or chains or wool or woven ribbon.

GERMANY HATES FEMINISM

There is some interest, if not equal importance, in the fact that America, reputed throughout the world as the land of feminism, the land of privileged womanhood, is at war with the country in which the claims of feminism are most universally and violently detested and the claims of masculinism most loudly asserted and generally accepted.

Herr Voechting wrote a book a few years ago on "The American Cult of Woman," in which he congratulated his own Germany on being safe from the danger that was engulfing the United States in ruin and degradation. If we acknowledge the awful impeachment brought against us out of the logic of Kultur, what shall we say on our part of that masculinism which expresses itself among the men of Germany in a horrified and angry outcry against the "treachery" and "unworthiness" of German women in performing little acts of kindness and humanity for the prisoners within the gates?

So dominant is this masculinism in the Kaiser's empire that women themselves are among its stanchest adherents. No other land could ever make a creed of subjecting to constant insult and cruelty the helpless and the wounded. The masculinism of America is of a different sort, despite the gloating assertion of Herr Voechting that we have sunk too low to lay claim to anything of such a title. We prefer our own variety.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

CHURCHES UNITE TO CONSERVE FOOD

Under Plan Indorsed by Hoover They Will Inaugurate System of Weekly Reports on Oct 28.

About three months ago Herbert C. Hoover, wishing to enlist the active support of the churches of America in the cause of food conservation, asked George A. Cullen, Passenger Traffic Manager of the Lackawanna Railroad, to go to Washington and build up an organization by which the churches might bring their influence to bear on the work. Mr. Cullen, who has just returned from Washington, where his services were contributed by the Lackawanna Company, has written the following account of what has been done and is about to be done by the churches:

HOW to enlist the 17,000,000 Catholics, the 3,000,000 Jews, the 10,000,000 Methodists, the 8,000,000 Baptists, the 3,000,000 Presbyterians, the 2,000,000 Episcopalians, the 2,000,000 Congregationalists, the many millions of Disciples, Unitarians, Christian Scientists, Seventh Day Adventists, Lutherans, and others—how to engage, in all, the 55,000,000 or 57,000,000 people who are more or less actively connected with the religious denominations in the United States in the work of food conservation—was the problem which Mr. Hoover was facing.

He recognized that the great moral forces represented by the church organizations would be a mighty power for food saving if only they could be harnessed to do some specific organized work that would go beyond the primary stage of what is known as propaganda which he was already prepared to carry out with the assured aid of the press of the country. Mr. Hoover realized that the church denominations were as a rule thoroughly organized and had as their national leaders men of great ability, enjoying the confidence and commanding to a large degree the support of their respective memberships. He knew the churches were anxious to "do their bit" as organizations, and believed that they only awaited being shown what that bit" was in the matter of food conservation to take up the work with enthusiasm.

To any one who gives the subject a moment's thought it must be strikingly evident how different it is to obtain results of a nation-wide character in support of, say, the Liberty Loan or the Red Cross on the one hand and of food conservation on the other. If you make bandages or knit socks you generally do so in the company of a group of others and turn in your work to a committee, and not only in that way are impressed with the fact that you are actually accomplishing something definite, but are spurred by the knowledge of what others are doing and thus get the important stimulus of team work. The same is true in an even greater degree in campaigning for subscriptions of money to the Red Cross and the Liberty Loan. All the stimulus of joint effort is brought into play, and every one with any knowledge of human nature at all knows what a great factor that is for results.

On the other hand, how are the 25,000,000 separate families of this nation to be reached and, after being reached, kept keyed up to the prosaic work of simply doing without certain articles of their daily diet, like wheat and meat, with no means whatever of knowing whether "their little counts" because of ignorance as to whether others are likewise doing "their little."

It was to solve the problem of how to supply the element of team work and patriotic emulation that, beginning on the 10th of last July, Mr. Hoover invited the leading churchmen of the country—Bishops, clergymen, and laymen of all denominations—to meet with him and the writer in Washington and discuss ways and means. The response was a wonderfully impressive answer to any who might be inclined to skepticism toward the whole-heartedness of the churches of the country in this phase of the war work. Over 90 per cent. of those invited came on Mr. Hoover's call, and came, too, at their own expense, from Denver, from Minneapolis, from Florida, from Maine, (Bishop Lawrence came from Bar Harbor on a few hours' notice,) and, in fact, from any part of the country from which it was thought advisable to call them, and the few who did not come gave—I think in every case—some excellent reason why they could not.

It was thought advisable to confer with each denomination separately, and consequently the meetings extended through the greater part of July and August, each meeting being attended by some twenty to forty of the men best qualified to speak for, act for, and enlist the support of their respective denominations.

At each of these meetings (some twenty-six in all) Mr. Hoover appeared in person and set forth graphically the pressing needs of our allies and the prospective urgent needs of our own soldiers for all staples, such as, primarily, wheat, beef, pork, fats, and sugar, of which there was and promises for the period of the war to be an alarming deficiency in England, France, and Italy. He showed how impossible it was that this deficiency could be overcome except by the self-denial of our own people and the substitution on our part of other cereals and perishables for those staples which we must ship. His words fell upon receptive ears and upon live and earnest consciences, and when it came time for the writer to resolve the meetings into forums for discussion and action and to suggest ways and means it was found that all were ready to go to the fullest extent in setting up any machinery that might be considered practicable and efficient for achieving the necessary result.

In all cases National Commissions on Food Conservation were created and committees appointed in each geographical or ecclesiastical subdivision of each denomination throughout the United States. Also a permanent volunteer representative was appointed to serve in Washington with the Food Administration in perfecting the whole organization.

It goes without saying, of course, that all measures for co-operating in the general propaganda for food saving were indorsed and adopted and plans made to get the clergy of the country to deliver frequent sermons on the subject in each church and to incite the religious press to give prominence to the needs of the situation and to the measures to be recommended by the national officers for specific work—all these measures were perfected and steps taken to see that they were carried out.

But the problem still remained, What was to be done to establish the sense of team work among the members and convert good intentions into deeds? After all, that was the vital question, because no amount of preaching and no amount of printer's ink can feed a hungry soldier or save a starving woman or child. It was evident something must be done in the way of "comparing notes" between the families in the churches so that Mrs. Jones might feel that her "bit" was worth while, knowing that Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. Smith of her church were doing the same thing, and that her effort would really amount to something, multiplied by the corresponding effort of others engaged in the same work.

So after much discussion a plan proposed by the writer and approved by Mr. Hoover was unanimously agreed upon, of getting so far as possible each housewife to turn in at church each Sunday a brief report on a special form, recording just how many meals she had served during the last week without wheat, and how many without meat and how many at which she had conscientiously tried to avoid waste in general. The form of report adopted is shown on this page.

To make this effective, of course, a most thorough organization of every church congregation in America is necessary, and each denomination is now engaged through its committees in each State, district, diocese, Presbytery or other group unit of the national body, in making ready to launch the weekly report system on the date set by Mr. Hoover for its inception, namely Sunday, Oct. 28. This method of reporting has been agreed to for a period of two months, or from Oct. 28 to Dec. 30, and each Sunday during that period each householder in each church will be asked to make a report of the character shown.

In order to do this, it is evident that there must be in every church a committee on food conservation to enlist the activity of each hodsehold in the church and see that all are co-operating. The reports, when received, will be tabulated by the committee and sent direct to the Food Administration at Washington in care of the officer of the church denomination located there and charged with the responsibility of operating his own denomination, receiving the reports and summarizing and publishing their results.

The following volunteers are now located in the offices of the Food Administration in Washington, and either they or their successors will be there for the period of the war to perfect the organization necessary to carry out the above plan, to operate it after it is established, and to devise other methods as time progresses for continued co-operation:

Catholic—Rev. George A. Dougherty, D. D.
Jewish—Rev. Joseph Krauskopf, D. D.
Presbyterian—Rev. James H. Nicol and Rev. William C. Covert.
Episcopal—Monnell Sayre.
Reformed Churches of America—Rev. James H. Nicol.
Churches of Christ, (Disciples)—Rev. Earle Wilfley.
Baptist Church, (North)—Rev. Samuel Zane Batten and Ernest Butler.
Methodist Episcopal Church, (North)—Rev. C. M. McConnell.
Religious Press—Dr. John T. Faris, O. R. Williamson, and Dr. Howard B. Grose.
Sunday Schools of America—Dr. E. B. Chappell.
Seventh Day Adventists—Dr. George H. Heald and L. A. Hansen.
Methodist Episcopal Church, (South)—General Julian S. Carr.
Southern Baptist Churches—Rev. W. J. McGlothlin.
Congregationalists—W. A. Atkinson.
Unitarian—Dr. Henry W. Foote.

These men are all giving their services as volunteers, and in addition are being aided by the frequent visits to Washington of the leading men of their respective denominations. To such an extent has the work grown that with the clerks and stenographers a force varying at different times from 50 to 100 persons, in a building devoted specifically to that purpose, is actively engaged on the work.

The churches of America are rising in a noble fashion to the great opportunity presented to them for definite accomplishment along one of the most difficult lines of endeavor with which the nation has to deal, and it is the opinion of those engaged in the work of the Food Administration that when the results begin to come in and announcements are made of the relative accomplishments of the different denominations, a most helpful and fine emulation will result and contribute toward a real and lasting reduction of the consumption of the great staples, thereby enabling America to ship to her allies and to her own soldiers food absolutely necessary to keep them at their highest point of efficiency while the war lasts.

NEWS AND NOTES OF MUSIC

A New Season for the Orchestras—Daily Recitals on Now—Events Crowd Calendar Before Opera.

NEW YORK'S crowded orchestra season is starting early this Fall, when a double event one week from next Thursday will set the ball rolling for a matter of 200 concerts or so. Rather more of these than has been the case in recent years will take place at Carnegie Hall. Following the Symphony and Philharmonic Societies, both of which give their first programs Oct. 25, in the afternoon and evening respectively, there will come the first of those less frequent visits of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will precede by less than a week the opening of the Metropolitan Opera. The Boston office reports that its waiting list of new subscribers in Gotham is larger this year than ever before.

Patrons of the New York concerts are asked to note a slight irregularity in dates of the Thursday evening series. Owing to complication in the bookings at Carnegie Hall, the December concert will be given on Friday evening, Dec. 7, instead of the usual Thursday night.

Meanwhile the opening concert will take place on Thursday evening, Nov. 8, and the fifth and final visit will be the middle of March.

The Philharmonic Society of New York announces its seventy-sixth year of uninterrupted activity. Among five subscription series there are twelve Thursday evenings, four Saturday evenings, sixteen Friday afternoons, and twelve Sunday afternoons at Carnegie Hall, and five Sunday afternoons at the Brooklyn Academy, besides trips afield to some forty cities.

For the seventh year as conductor Josef Stransky plans to give novelties by foreign and American composers, as well as a Beethoven-Brahms cycle of three concerts, falling in the regular Thursday, Friday and Sunday series. The Thursday and Sunday concerts will include Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Soloists with the Philharmonic include Josef Hofmann, Julia Culp, Jascha Heifetz, Wynne Pyle, Vernon Stiles, Pablo Casals, Guiomar Novaes, Alfred Megerlin, Fritz Kreisler, Helen Stanley, Leo Schulz, Percy Grainger, Alfred Kastner, Marcia Van Dresser, Rudolph Ganz, Rose and Ottilie Sutro, Louis Graveure, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch.

Two members of the Symphony Society of New York have been enrolled in the national army. These are Engelbert Roentgen, first 'cellist, and Robert Brown, fifth horn. Mr. Roentgen, until last year a citizen of Holland, had taken out his first papers as an American citizen. He wrote to Mr. Damrosch: "Uncle Sam has already done so much for me that I am glad to do something in return."

Novelties named by Walter Damrosch in the season's programs are a "Symphonie Francaise," by Dubois; "Tam o' Shanter," a tone poem by G. W. Chadwick, and a symphony in D by Mozart which is believed to be new to New York.

Two revivals will be Raff's symphony "Im Walde," a favorite in the time of Dr. Leopold Damrosch, and Tschaikowsky's Pathetique, of which the original score was sent from Moscow by the composer in 1893 and arrived in New York a week after news of his death had been cabled here.

The Philadelphia Orchestra will again visit New York for one concert this season, the organization's eighteenth year, when a total of fifty matinées and evenings are scheduled in the home series, and nearly as many more on tour. At that, the slumber of concerts outside of Philadelphia has been reduced in order to give time for added rehearsal by the conductor, Leopold Stokowski, and his ninety-four players. So, also, the number of soloists has been reduced slightly, owing to demand for purely orchestral programs.

What the novelty may be that will have joint hearing in New York is not yet told. During a year when the nation is under the strain of war the Philadelphia prospectus deems it wise and necessary that there be a place of solace and relief, and the association offers to its friends the hope that the concerts may be of greater significance than ever before.

Some soloists yet in the Quaker list are Mischa Elman, Jacques Thibaud, Efrem Zimbalist, Sascha Jacobinoff, Thaddeus Rich, Pablo Casals, Hans Kindler, Margaret Matzenauer, Olive Fremstad, Julia Claussen, Nicholas Douty, Arthur Shattuck, Harold Bauer, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Josef Hofmann, Carl Friedberg, and Guiomar Novaes.

Out in Chicago, speaking of the war's effect on music, a Western authority says that the local managers report "an unprecedented interest." At Orchestra Hall all is serene, and the management is receiving commendation on the excellent programs arranged for patrons of the Chicago Orchestra season.

A prospectus of stars mentions eighteen names, but this number will be augmented, for there are twenty-eight pairs of concerts to be given between Oct. 17, 1917, and April 30, 1918. The soloists are Mischa Elman, Mischa Levitski, Schumann-Heink, Grainger, Hofmann, Powis, Prihsh, Julia Claussen, John McCormack, Jascha Heifetz, Efrem Zimbalist, Willem Willeke, Mabel Garrison, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Eddy Brown, Harold Henry, Yolanda Mero, Jacques Thibaud, and Beryl Rubinstein.

American composers have their innings this year, and for this the war is directly responsible. The Chicago Orchestra will introduce an American work "at every concert," including compositions of Edward MacDowell, Edgar Stillman Kelly, Felix Borowski, Adolf Weidig, Eric De Lamarter, Howard Brockway, Henry Hadley, F. G. Converse, Leo Sowerby, John Alden Carpenter, Arne Oldberg and Theodore Otterstrom.

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, of which Emil Oberhoffer is conductor, has made a lasting peace with its neighbors and will be heard this Winter in the twin city of St. Paul for its fourth season of concerts under the auspices of the St. Paul Institute.

Stars of the Western circuit are Helen Stanley, Rudolph Ganz, Cornelius Van Vliet, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Julia Culp, Richard Czerwonky, Louis Graveure, Harold Bauer, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Leopold Godowsky, and Amelita Galli-Curci.

During the intermission at Midwinter, the orchestra will go traveling for a month, making a return visit to other cities of the Far West.

The Wolfsohn Musical Bureau has arranged the first début of a new star this season when Jascha Heifetz, a young Russian violinist of distinction, is to make his appearance in New York on Oct. 27 at Carnegie Hall. A portrait of Heifetz on this page was sketched by one of his fellow-travelers on the Pacific, a young Filipino artist, Francisco Dejay.

Guy Maier and Lee Pattison play tomorrow night at Aeolian Hall some "present-day music for two pianofortes," including Debussy's "To Lieutenant Jacques Charlot, Killed March, 1915," and others "To Igor Stravinsky" and "To A. ### BROOKLYN MUSIC.

The opening event of the season in Brooklyn will be a recital by Guiomar Novaes, to be given in the Music Hall of the Academy on Friday evening, Oct. 26. Though the Brazilian pianist is but 21 years old, her tour in this country last season was a brilliant success for an artist of individuality and personal charm.

Preparations are making for a Red Cross benefit on Oct. 27 in the armory of the Forty-seventh Regiment, Brooklyn, with a program by Marcia Van Dresser and the Philharmonic Orchestra.

FREE TO THE PUBLIC.

Samuel A. Baldwin, who has resumed his free organ recitals at the City College, will play there this afternoon Bonnet's "Romance Sans Paroles" and MacDowell's "To a Water Lily" and "A Deserted Farm." On next Wednesday's list are two "Improvisations" of Saint-Saëns.

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

THE ticket brokers and speculators, who have a way of landing on their feet (and the public's no matter what happens, are once more enjoying a quiet laugh on theatre patrons and managers. For the Theatre Tax bill has come out of conference, and it has come out minus the clause which taxed the speculators. The public will be taxed 10 per cent. on the box office value of the tickets, but the speculators may add $4 or $10 to the box office figure and there will be no additional tax. Accordingly, and not without reason, the merriment on the part of the speculators.

The Tax bill already drawn up would probably have put the specs squarely out of business, and it was the realization of that fact in Congress that caused an amendment. The original provision was that any sum charged in excess of the box office rate was to be taxed 50 per cent., and, inasmuch as the purpose of the bill was to provide revenue and not to attempt to sit as judge on the speculators, this figure was later reduced to 30 per cent. At the suggestion of William J. Fallon, head of Tyson's, the first fifty-cent advance was taxed only 5 per cent., a premium of 50 cents having come to be considered a justifiable charge for the service rendered.

In this form the bill passed the Senate, and things had gone so far that Mr. Fallon had been tentatively appointed to superintend the collection of the tax in this district. And then, mysteriously, the bill came out of the House committee conference with the premium tax eliminated, and the substitution of a tax on passes. How it happened no one knows; at least, no one will tell. In that form it passed the Senate, apparently largely because it was the last few hours of the session, and bills were being rushed through.

There will be only two more taxless weeks, for the new régime will get under way on Nov. 1. The purchaser of a pair of $2 seats will then find himself compelled to buy 40 cents worth of Government tickets, and these will be dropped into a receptacle as he enters the theatre. Government Inspectors will make the rounds of the theatres from time to time, of course, to see that there are no evasions of the law. As for the tax on passes, it also will be 10 per cent., but it is doubtful if even that will discourage the pass fiends. If, by the payment of 40 cents, he can get $4 worth of something for nothing, then all is not lost. He probably will continue on the job as of yore.

Those who attended last Sunday's performance at the Hippodrome found a different Vernon Castle from the Vernon whom New York knew in the old days. In the first place, he has taken on weight, although not enough even to begin to make him uncomfortable. But, secondly, and more important, his face is no longer the face of the man who has only dancing on his mind. He is beginning to show the results of many hours at the helm of an airplane. It is permissible to wonder, incidentally, whether he will be content to return to his profession of dancing when it is no longer necessary for him to navigate the air.

Beryl Mercer, whose work in "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals" led some people to think that she was as old as she looked, became a mother something less than two weeks ago. She and her husband, H. E. Herbert, will soon go on tour in the Barrie plays.

J. Hartley Manners has completed arrangements for the publication of his tragi-comedy of the war, "Out There." He is quite convinced that when his record is written it will take its place as the most important of his plays.

"Twenty years from now," he said the other night, "all my other plays, including 'Peg,' will have been forgotten, but I am foolish enough to believe that 'Out There' will be remembered. Authors don't usually judge their own work, but I'm a pretty good critic of myself. I'll never do anything quite as good."

"Madame Sand" has been definitely decided upon as the title for the new Mrs. Fiske play, which will be seen in New York about Thanksgiving time. Philip Moeller, the author, originally determined to call it "George Sand," but it was suggested that there might be many of the more or less benighted native theatregoers who wouldn't be able to understand how a female star could be appearing in a play named after a man. It will be remembered that there are still many people in this fair land who aren't quite sure in their mind whether "Nazimova" was a breakfast food or a patent medicine.

"The Cohan Revue" has come to grief on the Pacific Coast, a circumstance probably due, in equal parts, to a slipshod production and an unfamiliarity on the part of the populace with the plays which were being burlesqued. Richard Carle, accordingly, is now heading a company of "Nobody Home," which Oliver Morosco has installed somewhere on the Coast.

Maurice and Florence Walton, who have been elsewhere all this time, are expected to arrive in New York tomorrow. The couple have been in France, where they have danced a number of times for the edification of the soldiers.

Clare Kummer and High Comedy

By JOHN CORBIN.

If a prophecy may be hazarded, we shall some day look back on the advent of Clare Kummer as the most interesting event in the past decade of the American theatre. Already it is obvious that she is possessed of the rarest of all things, a distinct and original gift in high comedy. What the full extent of her gift may be, and its narrower limitations, we shall not soon know. But the three comedies she has produced in the short space of a year—which have all been on view here during the last week—place beyond the shadow of a doubt its authenticity and its vitality.

The phenomenon has a peculiar interest in view of its background. With the death of Clyde Fitch it seemed that comedy centring in the lives of intelligent and well-mannered people had passed completely. Both our literature and our drama had fallen into the hands of the many. Playhouses doubled and trebled throughout the land; and where the circulation of our periodical press had been numbered by tens and hundreds of thousands, it was now numbered by millions. As the editor of The Saturday Evening Post once expressed it, such an increase means the lowering of the common denominator of intelligence. There was, or seemed to be, small chance for the portrayal of highbred manners, for the delicate shading of character, for the play of intelligent humor, or the development of ideas. In story and stage alike the staple product was farce and melodrama.

In its way, this farce and melodrama was no mean product. It was vigorous and shrewdly observant in the portrayal of the commoner sort of character, racy with indigenous wit, broadly satiric, and dramatically effective in the handling of scene and story. At its best, as in "Seven Keys to Baldpate," it triumphed in the higher realms of atmospheric phantasy. But when it touched upon any of the deeper phases of life and character, as in "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" and "The Miracle Man," its blindness to all finer values was obvious. When it attacked moral and social problems, as in "Within the Law" and "Common Clay," its incompetence was grotesque.

To an enthusiast who once proposed the production of a Greek comedy, Daniel Frohman replied with a twinkle that in New York there are not enough Greeks. In the past decade it has seemed that the absence of high comedy was to be explained on similar grounds. Then Arthur Hopkins discovered Miss Kummer, and gave us "Good Gracious, Annabelle!"

It may seem a very slender play on which to base high hopes, and its two successors are no more substantial. But it is precisely because of their slenderness that they are significant. This thistledown Annabelle, airy, inconsequent, and with the slightest possible relationship to our soil and our substance, has toured the land delighting well-to-do folk of intelligence, as I witnessed myself in Chicago; and it has now returned to delight popular-price audiences in West Ninetieth Street. It is a phenomenon as astonishing as to find that our pampered and overfed populace really enjoys meatless, wheatless, sweetless days.

What is the essence of this new comedy gift? In its well-mannered levity, its mockery of the soberer moral values, it reminds one strongly of Oscar Wilde. At its best it seems quite as amusing and much more spontaneous. But Wilde's most salient qualities it almost wholly lacks—intellectuality and wit. The chief value of Nature, Wilde maintained, is to afford illustrations for the poets. Has Clare Kummer ever delighted in aesthetic paradox? She has not. "Meredith is the prose Browning," Wilde quoted; and he added, "So is Browning." Has Clare Kummer ever sharpened her pen against the poets? As yet she seems not to have discovered them. Even Wilde's humor ran to generalized comment on character. Thus one of the people in "Lady Windermere's Fan" raises the question whether, in London, it is the fogs that make the people or the people that make the fogs—a question that has never been answered. Once in the three plays of Clare Kummer a generalized idea is raised, but with a mockery so fine, a subtlety so elusive as almost to defy analysis.

Subtlety she certainly has. Let us not misconceive the word. In the lingo of our popular criticism subtlety means Shaw. Never was a term so misapplied! Intellectual Shaw is, to the nth degree. There is no social or philosophic question of the time that has escaped his keen scrutiny; scarcely a phase of English or Irish, even of American, character upon which he has not generalized. But, far from being subtle, his intelligence is luminously clear, decisive. His methods are those of the farce of our ancestors, of which he is the keenest of students, the most practiced of imitators. The weapons of his characters, it is true, are ideas; but his strokes are those of the slapstick. Nothing delights him more than to make some one sit plump on his own silk hat—and it does not alter the nature of his method if the properties he employs are not actual toppers, but ideas of propriety and respectability that have seemed to us decorative and luminous.

True subtlety is delicate, tenuous, elusive—artfully revealed and even more artfully hidden beneath the obvious fabric. It slyly invites our scrutiny, and even more cunningly eludes it. It is baffling, mysterious, debatable—superlatively feminine.

Florence Reed, Who Has the Role of the Slave Girl in "Chu Chin Chow," a Spectacular Production from London, Which Will Be Revealed Here Tomorrow at the Manhattan Opera House.

Laura Hope Crews, Who Will Be Arabella in "Romance and Arabella," Opening Wednesday Night at the Harris.

A New Pose of Grace George, Who Began Her Second Repertoire Season at the Playhouse Last Night in a New Drama Entitled "Eve's Daughter."

This quality Miss Kummer has in as high a degree as Wilde has intellectual paradox and Shaw intellectual buffoonery.

The Annabelle play projects a group of metropolitan artist folk, the most stonily broke that ever graced Peacock Alley. Their last, best bet for food is Annabelle. But she, though a creature of sables and orchids, has neither cash nor credit, and is actually ejected from her hotel. Yet luncheon is ordered and the table set, even to the gardenias. Ho for a port in the storm! The port is at hand, in the person of a rough Westerner who has very respectfully taken notice of her. Delicate and high-bred though she is, she scrapes acquaintance with him—in flat parlance, picks him up—invites him to luncheon, and wishes the bill on him. Good gracious, Annabelle! In the end it transpires that she has all along been deeply attracted by him. In fact—though neither is aware of it—he is already her husband. How much of her conduct was sheerly unmoral, irresponsible, and how much the result of deep-hidden intuition and feminine impulse? Nobody knows—least of all, perhaps, the author. It is enough that the situation rouses interest, piques curiosity, and is revealed with whimsical, sly, delicious strokes of character.

In "A Successful Calamity" a financier whose home life has been obliterated by the rush and whirl of metropolitan society, awakes to the true cause of his unhappiness. It is his money, and the social position which it involves. The poor "never get to go anywhere," because they can't afford it. So he informs his family that he is ruined, and they rally around him in loyal affection. What fortune cannot buy, the pretended misfortune showers on him. Is there an idea in ambush, a moral lesson? Not for Miss Kummer. It is enough to develop her characters in a mood of whimsical reality. Our weary financier, having achieved domestic felicity and release from the world without, celebrates his success by himself going forth to a prizefight. He is as much a creature of whim and impulse as Annabelle; as much a stranger to sober reason and conduct. Then it develops that his young wife is addicted to drugs in such doses that, when he takes one by mistake, it acts as knock-out drops. No matter! Having served its comedy purpose, the theme is dropped as lightly as it was introduced. For all Miss Kummer cares, we may, for the time being, suppose that in future the husband is to spend his evenings in Madison Square Garden and his wife hers in a hashish dream. It is all quite true in character, incessantly laughable, and morally inconsequent.

In the minor characters of both plays such levity verges upon vacuity. The young men are void of mentality, the young women void of emotion. Work for the one is a joke and marriage for the other a matter of indifferent calculation. But these young people are least of all things puppets. No less than the leading characters they are acutely individualized, saliently characterized, irresistibly comic. Ideas are ignored, and all the more vital values in living; but there is nowhere a trace of essential falsification. In this world men and women alike are swayed by impulses that are unmoral, unintellectual, and largely unemotional. Yet somewhere, apart and afar, the creative mind in which they take form and being watches over them, sharing our amusement—perhaps also our astonishment and mystification—and apparently more than half aware of their mindlessness and soullessness.

For, as I have said, there is at least once the shadow of an idea. It comes at the ending of "A Successful Calamity"—ostensibly a happy ending. The future is unclouded by any fear of the prizefight dope sheet or the dope bottle of the boudoir. There on the sofa husband and wife are united, each with a fuller sense of the other's needs and affection. "But," she says, "happiness isn't everything." The idea is broached, but it is only to mock at it. He smiles indulgently. "Well, for the present," he says, "we shall have to be content with it." Much the same could be said of these new comedies. Humorous lightness in character and a veiled, bewitching subtlety as to the inner intention are not everything. But in a land hitherto given over so stodgily to the crude meat and wheat and sweets of the drama we may very well, for the present, be content with them.

Good Gracious, Billieburke!

THE RESCUING ANGEL," which Miss Kummer wrote as a vehicle for Billie Burke, has the qualities of the two previous plays, but is less fresh and vigorous in development. It is in fact rather in the nature of a repetition of "Annabelle." This time it is the heroine's family that are stony broke; but the remedy is much the same. Though engaged to "the boy next door," Angela, the angel, blandly announces that she will marry one of two opulent gentlemen. Neither has proposed, and she seems entirely unconcerned as to which it shall be; but it is definitely fixed in her mind that one of them is to be granted the privilege of paying the family debts. Obeying an impulse, she elopes with one of them, only to decide, in a manner equally impulsive, that she has made a mistake. So she flies to the other quite undismayed, though what she has now to propose is marriage plus divorce. In the meantime the poor boy from next door hovers around, baffled and outraged. In the end it appears that all along she had loved the man she married. The first impulse was right—impulses being numerically just one ahead of thoughts.

Whatever the practicability of hitching wagons to stars, it was not an altogether happy idea to hitch Billie Burke to this vehicle. Miss Kummer's comedy postulates a very peculiar kind of acting, in which the inner mood ever precedes and dominates the word and the act. Bodily movement is reduced to the lowest possible terms, and even in facial expression the eyes dominate, opening windows to the inner mind. The art of Lola Fisher and William Gillette is as subtle, as mental, as disembodied, as acting can possibly be. Behind every accent and gesture one is fully aware of the inspiring impulse, mysteriously veiled and baffling though it is. Billie Burke has no resource beyond that high talent of being her own beloved self. And what a mess this is for a wholesomely nice young thing to get herself into! One balks at picturing the consternation of her countless adorers. Good gracious, Billieburke! Even those who delighted wholly in Annabelle may here find their appreciation clouded. Yet the evening was on the whole enjoyable. Perhaps this is the strongest evidence yet of the vitality of Miss Kummer's comedy, that it survives even such miscasting.

The Story of Willard Mack

So far as the New York public is concerned, the name of Willard Mack first flashed across the theatrical horizon in the Fall of 1913, when his melodrama, "Kick In," opened at the Longacre Theatre. Mack's path, as a matter of fact, had crossed Broadway several times before, but one circumstance or another had always prevented his getting a real foothold. When his success finally came it was the sort that playwrights like to dream about. Despite the fact that "Kick In" was the only full-length play of Mack's which had scored a real success here, he quickly found his wares in such demand that one manager signed him to a five years' contract, which pledged him to deliver all his plays to that manager for the stipulated period. This manager was A. H. Woods. Subsequently Mack became so popular that Woods and David Belasco fought for his services in court. An arrangement out of court made possible the present production of Mack's play, "Tiger Rose," under the Belasco direction—a fortunate circumstance for Mack, apparently, since the combination of play and production seems likely to insure Mack his second New York hit.

Willard Mack—he was christened Charles Willard Mack—is Canadian born and 40 years old. His father was, and is, a railroad contractor who was identified with several noteworthy engineering feats in the Middle West, and when Charles Willard was a few years old he accompanied his father from Morrisburg, Ontario, Canada, to Cedar Rapids, Iowa. (It was in later years, accordingly, that Mack absorbed the Canadian background for "Tiger Rose.") He lived in Cedar Rapids until it came time to go to college, whereupon his father dispatched him to Georgetown University in Washington, D. C. The elder Mack had selected Georgetown because of a conversation with a chance acquaintance in Kansas City. The acquaintance had graduated from Georgetown and thought a lot of it, and on the spot he persuaded Mack to send his son to it.

It was, as it happened, a decision which had much to do with the shaping of young Mack's life. He was 17 at the time, and with no particular idea about what he wanted to make of himself. He enrolled for the regular academic course, but it happened that his roommate was a medical student, and he painted a physician's career in such glowing colors that young Mack took on the medical course as a side line. After a year, however, he found that it was not to his liking and dropped it.

For a time he substituted athletics, and then, as do most college boys at one time or another, he began to interest himself in the dramatic society. This society embraced both the university and the preparatory school, and it was customary to borrow a player from the latter when a particularly youthful-looking person was required. Mack was cast for a part in a play called "New Brooms Sweep Clean," which, it happened, had a rôle in it for somebody from the prep school. In the prep school was a youth who, although he had never acted, came from a family of undoubted histrionic ability. The dramatic society promptly drafted him for the part, which explains how it happened that Willard Mack and John Barrymore made their stage débuts simultaneously.

This taste of stage life settled all of young Mack's doubts as to his future. He played in various college efforts during his last year or so in the university, and then evolved an act, made up of imitations, which he played here and there at benefit performances around Washington. At one of these benefits he encountered Channing Pollock, then on The Washington Post, who was acting—yes, acting—in a sketch of his own writing. Pollock heard Mack's imitations and advised him to try vaudeville with them. Mack thought it a good idea, but before he could carry it out he received an offer to join a Spring and Summer stock company playing at the old Grand Opera House, subsequently Chase's. He dropped college instantaneously and accepted.

When the stock season was over he was minus a job, and in this extremity he bethought himself of his imitations and Channing Pollick's advice. He came to New York and exhibited his wares to William Morris, who then operated a chain of vaudeville houses, and Morris promptly routed him. He opened at the Gaiety in Williamsburg, doing a round of imitations which included impersonations of James A. Herne, Kyrle Bellew, William Gillette, and E. H. Sothern. He was billed as Charles W. Mack.

While in vaudeville he met James J. Corbett, who had already deserted pugilism for the drama, and the meeting aroused an old longing in the breast of Mack. He wanted—always had wanted—to be a prizefighter, Corbett, however, painted the denizens of the fighting world in such unattractive colors that Mack hesitated, and while he was hesitating Corbett asked him to write a play for him. What Corbett wanted was a play which would give him a chance to show his pugilistic ability. In the course of his vaudeville wanderings Mack wrote the play—a piece called "A Broadway Indian." Corbett's manager, William A. Brady, read it more in sorrow than in anger, and a long procession of managers did the same. Mack still has the play.

The four years following were spent in cheap répertoire companies in Pennsylvania and Ohio—companies touring the smallest towns and carrying along thirteen or fourteen plays, one of which was generally "East Lynne." These were four years of excellent experience for Mack. He played heavies, but on the side he adapted plays to the needs and abilities of the company, cutting eighteen characters to eleven, piecing together scenes, &c. In this way, naturally, he picked up a sound knowledge of the workmanship of plays.

After four years of that sort of thing he spent a Summer with his father, who had, meanwhile, bought a ranch in Wyoming. One day the elder Mack complained of the infidelity of the average Western play, and told his son that somebody ought to write the real article. Mack, to oblige his father, went back to playwriting and turned out a piece called "Sage Brush." Remembering the reception accorded "A Broadway Indian," however, he stored the script away and showed it to no one.

The following season, while playing a Chicago stock engagement with May Hoamer, a well-known Western stock actress, Mack suddenly found himself with an opportunity to have his play performed. The company was to play "Janice Meredith" the following week, but Wednesday arrived and the script did not. Accordingly, Mack dug "Sage Brush" out of his trunk, and it was produced the next week under the title of "In Wyoming." Its success in stock was considerable, and it subsequently played 104 weeks over the John Cort circuit, a string of low-priced houses taking in a large part of the country.

It was during this engagement with Miss Hosmer, ten years ago, that Mack ceased being Charles W. and became Willard. It was customary in stock companies of the era to offer specialties between the acts, and a large proportion of the dark-skinned soft shoe cloggers who found their way onto the stage were named Mack. Not a few of them, in fact, were Charles Macks. Miss Hosmer, to avoid confusion, suggested that the original Charles W. use his middle name, and forthwith, despite his objections, he figured on the programs as Willard Mack.

After leaving this company Mack organized a traveling stock of his own, the repertoire of which included two of his own plays—"The World and the Woman" and "God's Country." About this time George C. Tyler offered him $100 weekly to play a rôle in "Raffles," with Kyrle Bellew, but Mack was making too much money in the West to consider beginning at the bottom of the ladder in New York. Accordingly, he stayed where he was, and presently drifted into Salt Lake City as John Cort's partner in a high-class stock venture. Here, for the first time, he played with Marjorie Rambeau.

The Salt Lake engagement was a huge success, and Mack stayed there three years, with Miss Rambeau as his leading woman. During this time he wrote "Scandal Alley," "Their Market Value," "Men of Steal," and "So Much for So Much," and produced all of them. The next thing was a dip into vaudeville with Miss Rambeau, playing "The Ace Wins," a sketch of Mack's writing. His father, meanwhile, had moved again, this time to Northern Alberta, and Mack, being prosperous, joined his brother in the purchase of a 2,200-acre tract, 90 miles north and west of Calgary. Here, between seasons, he drank in the atmosphere which led ultimately to "Tiger Rose."

The next immediate step, however, was a stock engagement at the Alcazar, in San Francisco, under the management of Fred Belasco, brother to David. During this engagement he wrote "Kick In" as a vaudeville sketch, and a year later he and Miss Rambeau played it from coast to coast. This was during the season of 1912-13. Eleven weeks of the time were spent in the vaudeville houses of New York, but, although the sketch was an excellent piece of vaudeville property, there was nothing about either it or Mack to cause a stampede of managers in his direction. Accordingly, he and Miss Rambeau returned to San Francisco and the Alcazar and resumed their stock work.

Among other pieces they played Mack's "So Much for So Much," (afterward produced unsuccessfully in New York,) and, as it did not quite fill the evening, the management insisted upon "Kick In" as a curtain raiser. J. J. Rosenthal, now manager of the Bronx Opera House, was at that time Pacific Coast agent for A. H. Woods, and he urged Mack to expand the sketch into a full-length play. Mack objected that no one would produce it, and Rosenthal replied that he thought Woods would produce it. He asked Mack if the piece could be readily expanded, and in answer Mack sketched out several ideas which he had for the play's elaboration.

"Wire that to A. H. Woods just the way you told it to me," said Rosenthal. "Meanwhile, I'll let him know it's coming."

That day Mack sent Woods a five-hundred-word telegram setting forth the story of "Kick In," and a few hours later he got an answer. It read: "It's my play. Shoot." Woods, of course, believed that he was purchasing a finished play; Mack, to make good, wrote the piece in three weeks and came East with it. Singularly enough, the man who played the leading rôle in it was Jack Barrymore, whose illustrious family had given him a short cut to Broadway which was denied to Mack.

"So Much for So Much" was then produced and failed, and since then Mack's "King, Queen, Jack" and "Her Market Value" (a different play from "Their Market Value") were tried out on the road by Woods and there abandoned. "Broadway and Buttermilk," written for Blanche Ring, enjoyed a success on the road which was denied it here—and still Willard Mack had only one New York success to his credit (always excepting, of course, his innumerable vaudeville sketches.)

But there may be better things ahead. His dramatization of John A. Moroso's story, "Alias Santa Claus," revealed unusual possibilities upon the occasion of its performance in Washington in the Spring, and when the war is over (the central character is a German) it would not be surprising to find no less an actor than David Warfield playing it. Then, too, the equal fondness of Maxey, Belasco and Mack for melodrama is certain to lead to a succession of productions of the style and build of the newest of the Mack melodramas, "Tiger Rose."

A PLAY WRITTEN FIFTY-THREE TIMES

THE persistence with which theatrical folk try to impress upon the aspiring playwright the fact that plays are not written, but rewritten, is such that it has become a truism which, by reason of its very repetition, is beginning to lose force. Would-be dramatists may be pardoned for suppressing a smile as this well-worn adage is paraded before them once again, as though it were quite new, and they may even be excused for thinking it part of a conspiracy to discourage them. And yet, in the face of these things, the appalling fact remains that "Here Comes the Bride," the farce at the Cohan by Max Marcin, Roy Atwell, and numerous unadvertised others, was written no less than fifty-three times before its first New York performance, and is being gone over even today.

In its original incarnation "Here Comes the Bride" was a magazine story by Max Marcin, called "Are You My Wife?" That was about six or seven or eight years ago. Fred Zimmerman, Jr., believed that the story contained a dramatic idea, but, being unable to handle it alone, took it up with George Cohan. Cohan & Harris obtained an option on the dramatic rights, and looked around for a man to dramatize it. Considerably at liberty at the time was Roy Atwell, who had more or less flair for writing, and let himself go at it between engagements in musical comedies. Zimmerman set Atwell to work on the dramatization and paid him $25 weekly while he was doing it.

At this stage the play followed the story strictly, and concerned a youth who married a veiled woman and then spent the rest of the play trying to find out whom he had married. The entanglements were the result of a South American will, and the piece was peopled with many women and South Americans, who dashed on and off. It turned out at the end of the play that the hero had married a handsome and dashing South American señorita. The mother of the señorita was an important character in the play.

Neither Zimmerman nor Cohan was satisfied with the piece when Atwell finished it, and they allowed their option to lapse. Time passed, and eventually Atwell came into a considerable sum of money. Thus fortified, he went to the Shuberts and proposed that they produce the play jointly. They were willing, and rehearsals began under the direction of Julius Steger, who was also given a small interest in the production. The piece, rewritten by Atwell but still called "Are You My Wife?" was produced in Long Branch in the Summer of 1918, with Atwell himself in the leading rôle. The production proved that the piece concealed an idea in it somewhere, but the play, as a whole, was bad. It played the three Long Branch performances and went no further.

The Shuberts and Steger dropped it, and Zimmerman, who had seen one of the Long Branch performances, repurchased an interest in it. It is also on record that Willie Eddinger bought an interest in it at the same time, probably with some idea of playing the part. At all events, Edgar McGregor, one of the present producers, entered the plot soon afterward. Maynard Waite, a Shubert agent, called the piece to McGregor's attention in the course of a casual conversation, saying that he believed something could be done with it by the right man. Meanwhile, the time had come when Zimmerman had either to let matters drop or pay for another option, and McGregor had no difficulty in buying his interest for $500. Eddinger, it appears, dropped out of matters at the same time.

McGregor renewed the option for another six months, on condition, however, that Atwell was not to play the part when the piece was produced in New York. He then called in Max Marcin as the original author of the story, and the two began to build a new play. What the piece needed, McGregor thought, was the upbuilding of the love interest, and they concentrated their attention on that point. When they had finished, McGregor took the piece to Klaw & Erlanger, and arrangements were made for an out-of-town production. This was something more than a year ago.

Meanwhile, the central idea had been so hacked that the old title no longer was apt, and the name was changed to "Here Comes the Bride." It was produced for the second time in Schenectady in the early Fall of last year, with a cast which included Will Deming, in the part now played by Otto Kruger; Leo Donnelly, in the Franklyn Ardell role, Oza Waldrop (Mrs. McGregor) in Francine Larrimore's part, Walter Jones as the father, Maude Eburne and George Walsh, both of whom are in the present cast. George Walsh, as now, was the judge, but Miss Eburne was playing the South American mother, her present rôle being at that time not in the play.

The first performance demonstrated that the love story inserted by McGregor and Marcin was satisfactory, but that the South American angle (the original play, in other words) was out of place. The last eighteen minutes of the second act were devoted to the South American story, and then and there the play died. Between Schenectady and Rochester McGregor and Marcin cut the eighteen South American minutes down to four, but the first Rochester performance indicated that the change had not improved matters. The piece was booked to play three days in Rochester and three days in Syracuse, and during that week McGregor eliminated the South American climax entirely, and also took away everything else pertaining to South America which was not directly essential to the love story.

The cast meanwhile rehearsed day and night, and even assisted with the rewriting. Walter Jones contributed a scene which is still in the play, and so did Leo Donnelly. To piece out the second act, from which eighteen minutes had been cut, McGregor appropriated the first twelve minutes of the third act, it so happening that the action of the second and the third was continuous. That left the piece practically without a third act, and Marcin arose to the occasion by writing one in the last two days of the week. The performances in Buffalo were no improvement, however. Marcin's last act was bad, and the rest of the play was not much better. Accordingly it closed.

McGregor then got Marcin's permission to call in Otto Hauerbach, and McGregor, Hauerbach, and Edward Peple tore the piece all apart and put it together once again over the Winter. Marcin had lost faith in the piece; besides which, he was at that time writing "Eyes of Youth" and accordingly busy. By this time, incidentally, there had been thirty or forty scripts of the play typewritten. Over the Winter everything was changed—plot, characters, and all. And changed not once, but a dozen times.

The next production took place in Stamford in August, with the present cast. It opened there on a Friday night, and was announced to open the Cohan Theatre here on the following Tuesday. The piece, of course, had been improved and was gradually taking form, but most of it, and particularly the last act, was still bad. Marcin, who saw the Stamford production, told Arthur Hopkins, at Broadway and Forty-second Street the next afternoon, that it was one of the worst plays he had ever seen and that he was sorry his name was on it.

At any rate, it was fairly obvious after the Stamford performance that the piece was not ready for New York, and the opening here was canceled. Hauerbach spent Saturday and Sunday writing an entirely new third act and fixing up the other two, and the company laid off a week to rehearse. It then went to Boston, where the work of rewriting began all over again. During the weeks in Boston McGregor made three trips a week to that city and took new scenes and sections of acts with him every trip. Hauerbach went twice to Boston and Peple once. It is unlikely if the same piece was played twice during the entire Boston engagement.

The failure of "This Way Out" made the Cohan again available, and "Here Comes the Bride" was once more booked to enter New York. Up to curtain time on the night of the opening Max Marcin, in the grillroom of the Friars, offered to sell his share of the royalties, for all time, for $2,500; but there were no takers. And, on top of all that, "Here Comes the Bride" came into New York and succeeded! Its success, to be sure, is not of the sensational variety; but it is a success. Which is proof positive that plays rewritten fifty-three times, and apparently hopeless, sometimes succeed on Broadway.

The fifty-three scripts, incidentally, are now in the possession of Mr. McGregor and are divided about equally between his office and his home.

THE WEEK'S NEW OFFERINGS.

THE week in the theatres promises to be an important one. Chief among the events are a celebrated spectacular play from London, the return of the greatest of musical comedy favorites, and a new extravaganza at the Winter Garden.

CHU CHIN CHOW—Tomorrow night at the Manhattan Opera House.

Melodrama, tragedy, comedy, pageant, musical comedy and even grand opera, "Chu Chin Chow" comes to New York with a record of an unfinished run of more than a year at His Majesty's, London. The piece is a tale of the Orient, written by Oscar Asche and set to music by Frederick Norton. Comstock, Elliott and Gest, the American producers, have not only brought over a complete production from England, but they have also imported Lyall Swete, who staged the piece in London, to perform a similar service here. The piece is in fourteen scenes, the locale being Bagdad about a thousand years ago.

Tyrone Power will return to the stage to play the title rôle, a robber chieftain and Florence Reed and Henry E. Dixey will also be in the cast. There will be a ballet of ninety, led by Katherine Galanta.

The death of Dave Montgomery launches Fred Stone alone on the musical comedy stage. Stone, of course, is a whole show in himself, and the wide swath cut by "Jack o' Lantern" in Philadelphia during the past few weeks is proof positive that he requires no assistance. Report has it that he does most of the things under the sun in the new piece, and tops it all off by a skating exhibition. Despite his undoubted versatility and virtuosity, however, the star is assisted by a company of more than one hundred, among them being Charles T. Aldrich, the rapid-change artist; Allene Crater, (Mrs. Stone,) Douglas Stevenson, Helen Falconer, the Brown Brothers, and Violet Zell, all of whom are recognisable as members of the original "Chin-Chin" cast.

Anne Caldwell and R. H. Burnside have written the book and lyrics of the new piece, and the music is by Ivan Carryl.

ROMANCE AND ARABELLA—Wednesday night at the Harris.

William Hurlbut, whose "Saturday to Monday" is now on view at the Bijou, is the author of this new piece, described as a whimsical comedy. The producer is Joseph Riter, late of Corey Riter, and the piece has been staged by George Foster Platt. Laura Hope Crews reaches the estate of the featured in the production, and among others in the company will be Alice Augarde Butler, Alice Putnam, Felix Krembs, and Harry Ashford.

DOING OUR BIT—Thursday night at the Winter Garden.

The Fall production at the Winter Garden is generally the most pretentious of the year, and the list of talent recruited for "Doing Our Bit" indicates that custom will be followed in this respect. Among those in the new extravaganza will be Frank Tinney, James J. Corbett, Ed. Wynn, Henry Lewis, Herman Timberg, Charles Judels, Frank Carter, Sam Ash, Roma June, the Cansinos, Ada Lewis, Sylvia Jason, Virginia Fissinger, Leah Nora, Vera Roehm, and Dorothy Godfrey. And, of course, the chorus and the runway.

THE WISCONSIN PLAYERS—Saturday night at the Neighborhood Playhouse.

The Wisconsin Players, an organization which originated in Wisconsin University and thence carried the little theatre idea to Milwaukee, will begin a two weeks' engagement at the Neighborhood on Saturday. They will present one long play and a repertoire of short pieces, all the latter being the work of Wisconsin playwrights.

The opening of "The Barton Mystery" at the Comedy, originally scheduled for tomorrow evening, was advanced to last night. It will be reviewed in THE TIMES tomorrow.

"Das Dreimaederlhaus," with music by Franz Schubert, will be the program all week at the German Irving Place Theatre.

Lieutenant John Philip Sousa's farewell (for the present) concert will be given at the Hippodrome tonight. He will have the assistance of a band of 280 enlisted musicians.

A performance tonight at the Neighborhood Playhouse, on Grand Street, for the benefit of the Suffrage Party, will include Roshanara in several dances and the Neighborhood Players in a new pantomime and a revival of "A Sunny Morning."

Another of Adolf Philipp's long succession of musical pieces, "New York," was revived by the author last night at the German Yorkville Theatre, on Eighty-sixth Street.

Arthur Guy Empey, soldier and author of "Over the Top," will talk on the war at Carnegie Hall tonight.

WRITTEN ON THE SCREEN

LYRIC.—Theda Bara in "Cleopatra."

STRAND.—Billie Burke in "Arms and the Girl."

BROADWAY.—Elaine Hammerstein in "The Co-respondent."

RIALTO.—Charles Ray in "A Son of His Father."

PARK.—Alice Brady in "A Maid of Belgium."

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET.—Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine."

A WAY in which American films can be of great aid in war work on the other side was suggested by President Wilson at a recent conference at the White House with a committee of picture men, and steps are now being taken to carry out the President's idea. The chief purpose of the plan is to combat the German propagandists on the Russian front, and to this end films showing America preparing will be shown in shacks along the front. One of the chief activities of German agents in Russia has been the dissemination of false news concerning America, and, as most of the Russian soldiers are unable to read, it is purposed to bring before them concrete evidence that America is indeed preparing to come to their aid. Something of the same sort will be undertaken on the Italian and French fronts, although, of course, there is not the same ignorance to combat in those sections. The war films will be interspersed with other American pictures intended solely for entertainment, and a double purpose thus served.

To accomplish this work William A. Brady has called for volunteers, and a number of men high up in the industry have offered their services. Jules Brulatour of Paragon Films will be head of the commission, and P. A. Powers of Universal will take charge of the work in France. Arthur Irwin of Vitagraph will go to Russia, and P. A. Berst of Pathé probably will go to Italy.

At the Lyric Theatre tonight Mr. Fox's Theda Bara will add one more Cleopatra to a list which already includes some of the most famous names of the stage. Miss Bara's Cleopatra will be a screen creation, but that makes it no less a Cleopatra. In so doing she is following in the footsteps of Mrs. Siddons, who was a Cleopatra to John Kemble's Antony early in the nineteenth century; Fanny Davenport, Sarah Bernhardt, Gertrude Elliott, and Constance Collier among others. All hail Theda Bara!

For the first time in the history of West Point the entire academy turned out recently to pose in a motion picture story. The person who worked this miracle was Olga Petrova, now "on her own" as a motion picture producer.

Another week will see the release of the first of the two pictures made by Geraldine Farrar during the last Summer, "The Woman God Forgot." Miss Farrar's previous films have been brought into their own New York houses with considerable blowing of trumpets, but the fact that this one is to be released as a part of a regular program indicates that the wonder attending Miss Farrar's film début has abated, and that she must now rest upon her laurels as a performer. Her new film deals with the conquest of Montezuma and his Aztecs by Cortes.

The producers of Billie Burke's latest picture have cannily chosen the psychological moment for its release, that moment being the week after Miss Burke's appearance here in a new comedy. The film, which will be shown at the Strand this week, is "Arms and the Girl," the play that brought Fay Bainter to town last year.

Injunction proceedings will prevent the exhibition of the new William S. Hart picture at the Rialto this week, but nothing kept Mr. Hart from commemorating the death of his dog upon a recent occasion. A single verse proves Mr. Hart's ability as a delineator of Western types on the screen:

You'll roll no more stones, Rag,
No more revel in the mud;
You'll steal no more bones, Rags,
No more dodge the cookie's club.

Miss Ferguson's second picture, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," is nearing completion. The film will give Miss Ferguson the opportunity to show what she can do as a street waif.

Marshall Neilan, one of Mary Pickford's directors, has been drafted. Miss Pickford is now being photographed in a Frances Hodgson Burnett story, "The Little Princess," under Mr. Neilan's direction, and he has been granted a brief extension in which to finish the picture.

The appearance of a new series of O. Henry stories in four-reel form has served to arouse the greatest interest in the rich mine of motion picture material in O. Henry's twelve volumes. To date nearly thirty of O. Henry's stories have been released as two and four reel films, and the results have been surprising to those who believed that O. Henry's stories could not stand being filmed. To date five of his stories have been made into four-reelers, these being "The Defeat of the City," "The Duplicity of Hargraves," "The Indian Summer of Dry Valley Johnson," "A Blind Man's Holiday," and "A Night in New Arabia."

George Ade's fables, concerning the adaptability of which to the screen there also was some question, are also enjoying a renaissance on the screen. The original fables were issued in one reel, but a series of twelve of the newer fables are now being put out in two.

There is material for at least a smile in the following blurb about Olive Thomas, emanating from the film company under whose direction Miss Thomas is now working:

"Coupled with her intense love for excitement (she is a most vivacious little lady) is a true feminine affection for children and a broad devotion to all that breathes of the great outdoors. A brunette with gray eyes and golden brown hair that photographs unusually well, she reaps in abundance the admiration which every normal good-looking woman craves. Yet, despite all the attention that has been showered on her, she is as artless and charming in manner as though she had never tasted the sweets of success."

The first direct results of the numerous mergers and new releasing arrangements in the motion-picture industry a few months ago are just beginning to bear fruit in the current releases of Paramount. The first of the Thomas H. Ince dramas has now been announced by Paramount, the first of the Mack Sennett comedies is now being placed before the public, and definite arrangements have been made for the releasing of the first of the J. Stuart Blackton adaptations of the Sir Gilbert Parker novels.

Charles Ray in "The Son of His Father" is the first of the Ince pictures to be released through Paramount. This is followed by Dorothy Dalton in "The Price Mark," both productions being presented during the month of October. "The Judgment House," which is the first of the Parker novels and in which Violet Heming and Conway Tearle play important rôles, will be released in the early part of November.

The first of the Mack Sennett comedies to be shown on the screen under the new arrangement is "A Bedroom Blunder," in which Mary Thurman is featured. Meanwhile, the regular productions which form the foundation of Paramount are continuing as heretofore. Vivian Martin is scheduled to appear in two productions, "The Trouble Buster" and "Molly Entangled"; Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star, is to appear in "The Call of the East"; Ann Pennington reappears upon the screen in "The Antics of Ann"; Pauline Frederick stars in an adaptation of David Graham Phillips's "The Hungry Heart," and Marguerite Clark is busy upon the series of adaptations of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Sub-Deb" stories.

Mary Garden motored to the Goldwyn plant a week ago yesterday and began work on "Thais," her first motion picture. Upon arriving at the studio Miss Garden was welcomed by Samuel Goldfish, Edgar Selwyn, Margaret Mayo, and the heads of the studio organization, reading from left to right, so it is assumed that not a great deal was accomplished on her first day.

Herbert Brenon has fully recovered from his recent operation and returned to his Hudson Heights studio during the last week. He is at present engaged in putting the finishing touches on the picturisation of Rupert Hughes's novel, "Empty Pockets."

Edwin Milton Royle is going daily to the studio to assist in the filming of his play, "The Struggle Everlasting," thereby, according to Margaret Mayo, filling a long felt want. At the first showing of "Polly of the Circus" at the Strand Theatre a month ago, Miss Mayo sat in the back row and talked about authors and pictures. She attributed the low estate of the latter to the negligence of the former, claiming that the author of a play thinks no more about it once he has disposed of the film rights to his work. If it is being produced as a play he attends all rehearsals and sits up nights to rewrite scenes, but the disposal of the picture rights he regards as merely a quick business deal and a bit of easy money, and he never goes near the studio to see what is being done with his story.

Miss Mayo, to assist in the remedying of these conditions, has given up playwriting entirely, and will devote herself to the films. Such a step, of course, is possible in the case of Miss Mayo, who, being an official of Goldwyn, finds her words listened to with respect. Edwin Milton Royle also is an established author, but the average writer of a script, were he to go to a studio and endeavor to make himself heard as he would at the rehearsals of a play, would draw down upon his head such a volume of directorial wrath that he would be justified in never entering a studio nor writing a scenario again.

SAYS WISCONSIN BACKS LA FOLLETTE

Senator J. Hamilton Lewis Figures That Only Small Minority in State Wants Him Expelled

ONLY a small handful of United States Senators have formally expressed themselves in open debate as to what action should be taken on the demands for the expulsion of La Follette of Wisconsin, but the privately expressed opinion of many of them is that the Wisconsin man will not be expelled. This opinion is based chiefly on the supposition that La Follette fairly represents a large part of his State in his opposition to the war, and that the State has a right to be so represented, no matter how disloyal it may seem to the rest of the country.

The discussion of that phase of the question, according to Senator J. Hamilton Lewis of Illinois, will be one of the vital features of the La Follette debate when it comes off at the next session of Congress. Senator Lewis, who is bitterly opposed to La Follette and all the other anti-war obstructionists, nevertheless asserts that the Senate, in arriving at its conclusion in the La Follette case, will have to take into consideration the fact that the population of Wisconsin is one-third German and one-third Scandinavian, and that their Senator is only voicing their opinions.

"I do not at this time sit in judgment upon any of the things which are now before the Senate in the La Follette controversy, nor in any wise upon Senator La Follette," said Senator Lewis when asked about the Wisconsin case. "His attitude upon public questions, or his expressions in public speech, are to come before me as Senator. They then will be before me as judge, and as one of the judges I shall reserve any judgment until the full case is heard, that I may do no injustice by previously expressed views. But I believe that it is proper at this time to call public attention to the dual relation of any Senator to the Senate and to the country.

"For seven days the Constitutional Convention which framed our Constitution and created the office of United States Senator more than 100 years ago, battled between adopting the Roman idea of a Senator representing all of the realm and the Grecian idea of a Senator representing a mere locality. Rome and Greece had their conflicts upon the same question. They took their examples from the dispute which had arisen in Israel and in Judea, and this, it is well remembered, divided upon the doctrine taught by Moses on one hand, and Joshua on the other. From where these two scholars of government absorbed their theory is now but speculation. However, the whole problem now resolves itself to the point, Does a United States Senator represent the United States as a first representation, or does he represent primarily his State?

"The Constitutional Convention, after wavering from side to side, declined the Roman doctrine advocated by Mr. Hamilton—and, indeed, by Washington—and adopted the theory that was born of New England and of her Puritan town government, which was but the Grecian system, finally receiving the sanction of the Southern States, whose statesmen were scholars of the Governments of the ancient lands. Since, therefore, we adopted the plan of a State being represented by its Senators, the Senator so chosen has two positions:

"First, a representative of the particular interests, particular views, and particular welfare that his own State has expressed in choosing him. This is to dominate him first and control him as the representative. Otherwise there would be no wisdom in the selection from the States of Senators. They could be elected at large, as is the President of the United States. His second relation is that of the representative of his country at large, in which position he ever is confronted with the question as to whether he will subordinate his representative capacity as voice of his State to that of what he feels is the general welfare of the nation.

"It is familiar history that three well-known Senators—George of Mississippi, a Democrat, upon the silver question; Lafayette Young of Iowa, upon the question of corporate control, and Spooner of Wisconsin—assumed to express what they felt to be the welfare of their country, as opposed to what were the expressions of their States. George of Mississippi was returned to the Senate. The other two were defeated—Young by Kenyon of Iowa and Spooner by La Follette. There are various other instances of the same sort in the recent political history of the country.

"Now, let us contemplate the actual situation in Wisconsin. Senator La Follette in his fight for election made an issue in his State against war, against our entering into the conflict, and against the positions then proposed by the Republicans, as stated by Colonel Roosevelt and Mr. Hughes, and against the Democratic attitude as voiced by President Wilson and his supporters, such as myself, in the Senate, as demanding for an American the right to travel on any ship of any kind in any sea, whether the country was in war or at peace.

"Senator La Follette was opposed in his own party primary. He was successful upon his issue, overwhelmingly defeating his rival for the nomination. The Democrats named an opponent against him; and in the State of Wisconsin, where the normal majority was 35,000 Republican under the calmest situation of political times, Senator La Follette received the stupendous majority over his Democratic opponent of 180,000. Here we note the psychology of Wisconsin, testing it by political equation. One-third of the citizens of Wisconsin easily are Germans or German offspring. They were against war. They were openly asserting that the attitude of the United States was equivalent to sympathy and aid to Britain against Germany. These all professed devotion to the United States as against Germany in the event of any dispute, but were against the United States lending itself, as was charged, to Britain against their Fatherland—Germany. This was the first atmosphere of favor to Senator La Follette in his controversy.

"Second—One-third of Wisconsin can be said to be Scandinavian and of Scandinavian offspring. The Scandinavians were not with the Allies; with the exception of a certain part of Denmark, the Scandinavian people had grievances against Russia. Swedep had her grievances for the taking of Finland, and Russia was charged with harboring intentions of moving upon Stockholm. Norway remembered troubles she had had in preserving her existence against the advances under two different rulers of Russia. Germany, in the meantime, had cultivated the friendship of these countries in matters of trade and diplomacy. Germany had intermarried into the royal houses. The people of the Scandinavian countries in Wisconsin—as is true of most of the Middle Western States—were opposed to our aid in anything that aided Russia, and even now, however gratified the Scandinavian people may be that the Czar has been overthrown and the people of Russia come into their own, they still fear that the people of Russia are anxious to attach to Russia the lands of Scandinavia which the Czar of Russia desired.

"At the outbreak of the European war we asked that our people be neutral. We asked the Scandinavian people in America to be neutral. Their countries remained neutral—that is, declined to enter the war. The United States has been compelled to put an embargo upon the Scandinavian countries. The Scandinavian citizen of the United States is saying to himself and having others say to him: 'The United States asked your countries to be neutral; they obeyed, and now it starves your country as a punishment for its neutrality, and now it is charging your country with violating its honor in sending American goods into Germany!' These Scandinavian people are having it whispered in their ears that this action of America is an insult to all the Scandinavian people in the United States. This is not without its effect.

"So another third of the Wisconsin population—that is, the Scandinavian third—must now be considered to be in sympathy with the views of Senator La Follette, in so far as opposition to the war is concerned, and when Senator La Follette strongly and constantly asserts that the United States should again set forth specifically the objects of the war in Europe he is only voicing the Scandinavian demands to know whether we are going to espouse Russia's attempt or even her willingness to take any part of Scandinavia; or do we espouse Scandinavia's demand that at the close of this war that which was Scandinavia's land shall be returned to her, as we are demanding that that which was French territory shall be returned to her and Poland's filched land to her. This is the question of thousands of Scandinavians which Senator La Follette is voicing in their behalf.

"The question is also asked for the German citizen as to whether the United States intends to let the Allies take from Germany the colonies in Africa which were German property, while we are asking Germany to return Rumania and Serbia to the Allies, and asking Austria to return the Italian border to Italy. Therefore, Senator La Follette is constantly voicing in his statement merely the query put to him by two-thirds of his constituents on this question of war.

"The remaining third in Wisconsin we may speak of as non-German and non-Scandinavian—made up largely of the Americans among the latter—and here we have the division between those in the Republican Party who represented the old school of Senator Sawyer and Senator Spooner and those who represent the progressive view voiced by La Follette and his followers. The friends of La Follette insist that the American opposition to him in that State, in the Republican Party, is merely the expression of the old fight between the 'old guard' of the fixed conservatives and the progressives which La Follette is supposed to head. These friends of La Follette contend that the cry of patriotism in the opposition and of treason by his accusers are but pretenses to continue the political fight. Therefore, one-half of the remaining one-third—the distinctive Americans—so far as the Republicans are concerned, will be seen to be with Senator La Follette.

"From this analysis it is noted that it is but a minority in Wisconsin who can be said absolutely to be opposed to the views of Senator La Follette, either as expressed during his campaign or after his election, in his continued opposition to war.

"Now the question arises, which is the first duty of Senator La Follette—to continue to express the sentiment and views of his State when they run counter to the majority of his nation—or to express the views of his nation which run counter to his State? For myself, I differ from Senator La Follette. A number of my speeches in the Senate indicate the conflict between us in expressions that I fear now, in calm review, show lack of dignity and the presence of considerable temper. I represent with the grace of the people of Illinois that State in conjunction with my colleague, Senator Sherman. I opposed the views of Senator La Follette—regarded them as wrong and hurtful. For years before the war I have been speaking to my country and particularly to my own people, of the necessity of preparation for conflict, which I felt was sure to come upon us. In these attitudes I could not get support from those who now see that the men who then feared these conflicts as I had feared them were justified.

"But regardless of these differences, the question to be considered is, how far can the United States Senate assume to review the judgment of the sovereign State of Wisconsin as expressed by the majority of its people and to decline to allow these views to be expressed by its chosen spokesman? How far can the Senate—even if every man in the Senate disagrees with La Follette—assume to prevent his expression in behalf of Wisconsin, if Wisconsin has directed him to give voice to these views as her expressions?

"Charles Sumner was accurate in using the expression, which I note is from the debates of the Constitutional Convention, that no seat is the seat of the Senator. It is the seat which has been apportioned by the Government to the State. It is the seat of the State in the councils of the Senate as the assemblage of the United States. For anything less than treason to the Government, for anything less than actual crime, how far can the Senate take the seat from the State because its majority may disagree as to the propriety and rightfulness, the justice, or the patriotism of the expressions of the member who represents that State?

"There is reserved in the Senate the right to remove any Senator for any cause. Literally it can object to his complexion, his religion, his manner of dress. The Senate in unseating a Senator or in withdrawing that seat, is governed by no established reason or stated grounds, but it has never been assumed that it would exercise this privilege merely because it had the right. The privilege is reserved that it may have the right if any Senator from any State should ever conduct himself in such a way that two-thirds of the Senate felt was injurious to the common cause, whatever that cause was in which the Government was engaged.

"But we must always keep in mind the dual relation of each Senator. First, there is the relation he bears as the representative of the particular State, which State has a right to have its views, whatever they may be, expressed. Otherwise, there was no reason to have Senators from separate States to represent these separate interests. Second, there is the attitude that the Senator must take as an officer of the whole United States Government.

"All of these questions will be brought up for discussion and for conclusion in December and for the first time laid down under a crisis the like of which our Government never before confronted. We must establish out of this case an absolute precedent for the future."

"BABY NESTS" FOR SOLDIERS' CHILDREN

They Flourish Throughout Italy, Under Public Auspices or Through the Generosity of Individuals

WHEN the war began, Italy as a nation soon realized that the very moderate subsidy paid by the Government to the wives and children of soldiers—whose salary, it must be stated, is merely nominal—would not be sufficient to keep the men from worrying and their families out of need. It was obvious that private good-will would have to fill the gaps, especially as women would have to be released from the care of children for the constantly increasing ammunition, factory, and other war work.

Thus it was that the idea of collecting the children in day nurseries "just naturally growed" and spread all over the country. A name being wanted to substitute for the henceforth impossible Teutonic "Kindergarten," which had forfeited its right of admittance into the Latin world, "nests" (nil) was suggested. The name has stuck. Every "nido" has a personal name or qualification besides; many have asked and obtained the privilege of being named after one or the other of the royal children.

Today Italy is fairly studded with these nests. Every city of importance has at least one of them in each popular residence district. Most of the small towns and villages have one for the community, and in each country district, where some wealthy or charitable landowner takes the matter in hand, children often walk quite a distance to spend the day in the attractive environment and get the full benefit of the wholesome meals and intelligent care. In the cities the teachers, or rather attendants, are almost entirely volunteers, while in the country, nuns from various convents often form a small community of three or more, residing in the premises and contenting themselves with the bare necessaries of life while they give excellent lovework to their wards, and are naturally steadier in it than the great majority of even the best-intentioned volunteers. Their charitable activity has made the institution of "nests" possible under conditions otherwise unfavorable, and they deserve full credit for this emergency phase of the life of religious communities.

The nests are all planned and run on a simple scale and with the least possible attendant red tape. A managing committee, sometimes self-appointed and then sanctioned by the municipal or provincial authorities, in other instances called upon by said authority to serve (without discussion as well as without compensation,) is responsible for the institution, which is supported by private offerings pledged for the duration of the war. When the thing is well started and gives fair evidences of vitality the Commonwealth, or the State, or some big local concern grants a single or periodical subsidy to make up deficiencies or to provide for emergencies. Special gifts, volunteered or solicited by friends of the institution and their friends, allow for specials and extras at Christmas time and other festive occasions; and, needless to say, the children of the better classes are put to work and prove helpful in the raising of such extra funds.

It has been found that while the mothers are grateful for being relieved of the children during working hours, they much prefer to have them sleep at home, and so do the fathers, who from war zone or garrison follow with great interest the doings of the children in their day homes. Of course this simplifies much the housing problem, and a suitable day home even for a hundred children, the average number, is easily found and furnished, either by using and refitting municipal premises, or by settling in some privately owned building (in some instances a country house or villa) with or without gardens and playgrounds. In other cases—in one particularly in which the writer of the present notes was directly interested—a combination of both has proved satisfactory.

The children meet in municipal quarters, where they spend the morning and get their lunch; in the afternoon, weather permitting, they are taken out to the grounds of a private villa, where they entertain themselves freely and are served with their afternoon bite al fresco. Toward sunset they file back to headquarters and thence disperse homeward with their mothers and relatives returning from work, or more frequently under the wing of elder children and in groups.

All the children, both in town and country, are generally provided, at the managing committee's care and expense, with pink and white and blue and white checkered aprons, banded with Tricolors on the sleeve, of which distinction they are particularly proud. Coats and caps, shoes or clogs and stockings are also among the articles too expensive for the average soldier's wife to provide, and they come along with the child's admittance to the nido, which is, of course, subordinate to the ascertained condition of the home. Trades people are appealed to for bargains in stock and cutting of prices, and generally the response is very fair, and a substantial saving is effected.

It is a quaint and charming sight, the children filing along the streets of cities or villages to the playgrounds, or even to the movies. The movie managers have agreed almost everywhere to give special free performances for the children of the nidi. Teachers, volunteer assistants, Boy Scouts, &c., convoy and place the audiences; street car companies, properly approached, have granted free transportation to the shows once a week, and the enjoyment of the children is unbounded.

All medical, dispensary, and hospital facilities are provided free for mothers and children; prospective mothers are taken care of, and some cities have "milk-nests," where war babies are bottle-fed and nurtured into health and buoyancy. Generally, the regular discipline of play and work, the wholesome food at stated intervals, the general hygienic arrangement of the children's life in the "nest" has done wonders for them physically not less than morally and educationally; and the corresponding relief in the mothers' minds has worked just as well on them and on the general trend of the household.

The age of the children being approximately from 3 to 7 years, no real schoolroom work is attempted, especially as children who are of school age (6 to 7) are required to attend school at the proper hours and come to the next only "in between," especially for lunch and "merenda." Songs, games, manual work are featured, also knitting and wool crocheting for quiet little girls and unruly little boys; since a rather amusing coincidence, it works best with these two types of apprentices. "Star performances" are frequent, to the great delight and interest of the audience, as well as of the performer, and are always a feature of the rejoicings held when a soldier-father on furlough pays a visit to the "nido" that shelters his offspring; the hereditary and subconsciously artistic Latin temperament being obviously responsible for the really good and quaint rendering of songs and little dramatic pieces, also for the easy memorizing and reciting of poems of the simplest kind that interests the children and reaches the heart of the grown-ups.

There are so many charming and amusing touches to the daily life of a baby-nest that anecdotal selection is rather hard to achieve. The sight of the roomful of chirping youngsters, when, in the presence of the customary attendants only, they are totally natural and unconscious, is an unending source of interest. All the blue and pink aprons are upon arrival, buttoned on the children; buttoned on the back, because they would come too easily pulled off on the front, but the littlest baby has been taught to go to the older one for assistance; and often long rows operate on the sliding scale principle, four-years-of-age buttoning up three and being in turn fixed by five, who is assisted by six, whom seven polishes up meanwhile, according to regulations. This principle of co-operation extends to the dining-board, as willing experts are always ready to lick the plate of less widely receptive individuals, while elder girls play mother to their own or alien younger brethren, scolding and pulling, alas, impartially, sure that in their absence the work will be efficiently attended to by other hands. Talking of hands, since the principle of clean face, clean hands, clean knees, is strictly enforced, the culprits have learned to come along with meek faces and wet towels, and submit to the sacrifice with much the expression that a trained fox terrier wears when he brings the muzzle to his master as the fundamental condition of being taken out on a romp.

"Will the war last always, always?" one child inquired.

"Hope to goodness not, child, but why do you ask?"

"Oh, because I want to come here always, always."

They had told me that the end of the war would bring the end of the nest to this appreciative little bird. Truly, their "nest days" will remain as a bright spot in the childhood of many little men and little women of Italy at war. And, from a broader standpoint, thus it is that the baby nests of Italy prove interesting not only in themselves as a form of social service, but also as an example of the good-will that brings together all the nation in one stand back of the fighting men; and of the spirit with which Italy, being comparatively a poor country, unable to command outright considerable provisions or draw upon enormous resources for civic welfare, and unprepared to meet the emergencies thrust upon her by the war, has found it possible to meet them satisfactorily under the pressure of events, and to make civic co-operation a real factor of the victory which her men are so valiantly proceeding to win for the common cause of the Allies, as well as for the legitimate cause of the Italian nationality.

MR. CHURCHILL'S STORY OF SOCIAL UNREST

"The Dwelling Place of Light" Takes Up an Interesting Phase of American Life—Latest Works of Fiction by Mrs. Gerould, A. E. W. Mason, R. B. C. Graham and Others

THE DWELLING PLACE OF LIGHT. By Winston Churchill. Frontispiece by Arthur I. Keller. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.60.

THE third of Mr. Churchill's novels to deal with one or another phase of modern conditions in America, "The Dwelling Place of Light," is concerned with social and industrial unrest. "The Inside of the Cup" had for its theme the dissatisfaction of earnest souls with formal religion, their rebellion against the commercialized church and their search after a vital and practical expression of human love and sympathy for fellow-humans. "The Far Country" told the story of the rise of a selfish and dominant capitalism, as dramatized in the career of its hero and its final glimpsing, still in his person, of its responsibility to humanity and of finer and better relations between human beings than those based solely on self-centred desires. In this new novel, whose title indicates not so much a pointing out by the story of where "the dwelling place of light" can be found as an inquiry, a searching for it, a desire to turn the fact in its direction, Mr. Churchill takes up the problem of the industrial unrest of recent years and its relation to the social strata of the country, and shows the America of old customs and beliefs and traditions breaking up in the crucible of that unrest and a new America in the process of formation.

The place of the story is in and near a New England manufacturing city, and its most prominent character, the one in whom the author seems to personify his theme of a changing America, is Janet Bumpus, the descendant of many generations of New Englanders whose long line of upright, capable, and energetic families has gone to seed in her father. He is a hollow shell, a sort of simulacrum of his ancestors, still wearing the facial mask of dignity and refinement, but lacking will, purpose, energy, ambition. As gatekeeper to the huge Chippering Mills he crawls through his daily routine, his chief interest in life afforded by his incessant study of the pedigree of the Bumpus family and commonplace, futile correspondence with other Bumpuses whom he has never seen. His wife, Hannah, submerged in the daily tasks of housekeeping in their ugly, threadbare flat, is a joyless, subacrid person, who accepts without complaint the dun, ceaseless treadmill of her life.

But tragedy is born into the very souls of their two daughters, in whom flames personified the spirit of twentieth century revolt, of groping for readjustment, of clamorous demand for life. In Lise, the younger one, who is a "saleslady" in a department store, the revolt is wholly material. She wants the cushions and the roses and the perfumes of life. In her has survived none of the old New England moral austerities, none of its ability to live by and for the spirit. But Janet, the older one, who is a stenographer in the Chippering Mills, is offended by her sister's coarser fibre and sordid soul. She, too, yearns fiercely for something in life that would mean beauty and light and sweetness, and is hurt to the depths of her being by the barren, dingy, ugly environment in which their poverty forces them to live. But her intellectual endowment is better and her needs more spiritualized.

When the spirit of revolt is aflame within her it lights up, unconsciously to her, a face and personality not usually striking to vividness that challenges attention. Claude Ditmar, manager of the Chippering Mills, a personage of consequence in the business world, forceful, accustomed to dominate, happens to see her at one of these vivid moments. She rouses his interest, he advances her, presently makes her his private secretary, and little by little surrenders himself to a devouring passion for her.

The central thread of the story is furnished by Ditmar's virile and masterful desire for Janet and her response to his passion. Very soberly and sincerely Mr. Churchill sets himself to the task of studying and understanding and making clear to his readers the working upon their two natures of this elemental force and its influence upon their lives. He seeks only the truth and its meanings, and he is relentless in his probing as he dives deep into their hearts and lays bare their inmost motives and emotions. He has never hitherto depicted a woman character with quite so much insight, skill, and surety as he portrays Janet Bumpus. It is true that he psychologizes her rather too much in the early chapters, before she has come to even a little understanding of herself, while the desires, yearnings, revolts within her are still no more than blind and dumb forces, thereby giving to the reader an image of her that is more sophisticated, more developed than, presently, she is realized as being. But, barring this flaw, it is a vivid, notable portrayal of a type true to the time. Hardly, however, can it be said of her, as Mr. Churchill makes one of his characters say, that her father had been the means of passing on to her the New England inheritance which had missed him. Except in her intellectual curiosity and eagerness, Janet is not a New Englander. She would have been as exotic a creature in the New England of a hundred or two hundred years ago as in the environment in which she appears.

Opposite her stands Claude Ditmar, successful business man, a wonderfully realistic figure, true in every line of him, bold, aggressive, and vital, as alive as if he had been transferred bodily to the pages of the novel. Many of the minor characters are presented, if more briefly, with an equally skillful and life-giving touch. Brooks Insall, quizzically humorous, large-hearted, loving all things, both great and small, is a figure that demands to be remembered. Rolfe, the I. W. W. organizer, is particularly vivid. Johnny Tiernan, dealer in hardware, one really seems to have known, if one has ever lived in a New England town. Mrs. Brocklehurst, though she appears but once, and that for only a few moments, is as clearly realized as an etching, and is a faithful embodiment of the inquiring, altruistic spirit trying to express itself in the life of a woman of wealth. Janet's sister, Lise, who rapidly toboggans down into degradation, and their parents are all graphic, strongly drawn figures of lifelike fidelity. And the appalling lack of parental supervision over the two girls is an indictment of American parentage that is all the more terrible because it is so widely true.

As a story the novel is rather less interesting than former books by Mr. Churchill. He has been concerned less with telling a story than with picturing the life of a New England mill town filled with men, women, and children of a dozen races of Europe and Asia. His Hampton is a melting pot in which the metals have not fused. But they boil up and over when the great strike takes place and the leaders and organizers of the I. W. W. appear among them. The many pages that deal with this strike are, both as story and as account of industrial unrest, particularly interesting, perhaps the best in the book. And, finally, one senses that apparently Mr. Churchill meant to suggest to the reader that "the way to the dwelling place of light" is by means of the kind of life of which Janet finally has experience, the kind for which she has the native affinity, where there is plain, fine living, human sympathy, love for fellow-beings, the spirit of service. It is a pleasure to bear witness to the finer, truer taste with which Mr. Churchill now writes. Scarcely anywhere in the book does one find any of those occasional lapses which offended so much in his earlier work. But this does not hold true of the ending of the story. Not since the deathbed of Little Eva has there been anything more banal than the last pages of this novel.

MR. GRAHAM'S STORIES

BROUGHT FORWARD; CHARITY; FAITH; HOPE; PROGRESS; SUCCESS. Six volumes of short stories and sketches by R. B. Cunninghame Graham. New York: The Frederick A. Stokes Company. $1.35 each.

OVER a large part of the face of the globe has Mr. Cunninghame Graham wandered, and gathered stories by the way. Few authors have written of South America so fully, or with an understanding so complete. Not many men, indeed, have brought so much of sympathy to their study of human nature, not in one place, but in many. For Cunninghame Graham's interest is by no means confined to Latin America. He writes of the Moors as well, of his own native Scotland, now and then of England, sometimes of a French type or a scene in Paris, often of Spain. His stories are not always, strictly speaking, stories at all; many are mere sketches, pictures, vivid introductions to men and women and horses. All bespeak the writer's own keen interest and his human sympathy.

Of the six volumes which are now being brought out in a uniform edition in this country, one, "Brought Forward," is published for the first time. The other books, although they have been appearing one by one in England since the early years of the century, have never before been issued here. The present edition amounts, therefore, to an introduction, for American readers, to a large part of a well-known British writer's work.

Of the fifteen stories in the new volume, three are Scotch, three English, one a story of the Arabs, one a story of Spain; the others take the reader to scenes past and present in Latin America. The author is best known for his South American sketches, and keen as is the sympathy that marks his pictures of simple folk in England and Scotland, his stories of Latin America are really the most interesting in the book, with the few brief sketches

THE Food bill is a law at last, and Mr. Hoover and his assistants are hard at work. But the individual's food problem is a problem still; Mr. Hoover himself has told us in good round terms that the co-operation of every American housewife is needed in the work of feeding ourselves and our Allies; and the most far-reaching of laws can offer no royal road through the wilderness of war prices to the goal of three meals a day. So it is that the housewife must still reach out eagerly for assistance in the meeting of her individual problem—the problem of feeding her family well when food is very expensive. In spite of our proverbial wastefulness, it is a safe guess that the housewife is willing enough to "save"; the trouble is far more apt to be that she does not altogether know how. And any handbook that sheds light upon her ignorance, that offers practical help, attains thereby a pregnant importance.

"War Food" is, for the most part, a book of recipes for the preservation of perishable foods. And it is a most valuable book. In the tersest and most practical fashion it sets forth the methods of drying, evaporating, canning, salting, and pickling various articles, with special directions for each. And these methods are inexpensive. Is the price of sugar appallingly high? Well, "there is no fruit or vegetable that cannot be dried." Furthermore, adds Miss Handy, "all fruits are good put up without sugar." Is fuel an item? Dry things in the sun! Even the shortage of jars should not, according to the author and her sensible recipes, stand in the way of laying by quantities of food for Winter use.

To the detailed directions for the drying of various fruits, vegetables, and meats, Miss Handy adds information as to the simple method of constructing a frame for sun-drying and an evaporator. She describes also the "water-bath method" of preserving vegetables and fruits. She gives twenty-one recipes for the canning of vegetables, and has a chapter on canning fruit without sugar, followed by one on canning with sugar if the housewife does not find the price too high. To a chapter on jellies and fruit pastes, another on salting, another on pickling, she adds a little collection of "miscellaneous" recipes that will give variety to Winter meals. The little book can scarcely be recommended too highly to the housewife who, out of the Summer's abundance, wishes to provide against the lean Winter months.

The author of "How to Live on Three Meals a Day" takes as his special theme the provision of meals that shall be not only cheaper but more wholesome than the ordinary American diets of pre-war days. "Overeating," says Dr. Alsaker, "is one of our worst habits." He goes on:

> Select good foods, prepare them simply, avoid complex combinations, eat slowly and moderately, and you will not only conserve the food supply, lower the cost of living, and increase your physical health, but your mind will be clear, active, and efficient.

He does not, however, confine himself to such simple generalities. The book contains many practical bits of information, such as this:

> The best way to cook potatoes is either to bake them or steam them in the jacket. * * * The next best way to prepare potatoes is to boil them in the jacket.

And the latter half of the book is taken up with simple, inexpensive, and nourishing menus for children and adults, manual workers, and persons who live sedentary lives, meat eaters and vegetarians.

"Food Preparedness for the United States" is a handbook based largely upon information gleaned by the author in a study of German food conservation in the Autumn of 1916. As he says in his foreword:

> This book is designed to point out to the individual some of the factors involved and the lessons to be learned from the experiences of the European belligerents, particularly Germany, where food control has been most necessitous and most highly developed.

It is not a book of recipes, but of information and general advice. And, though much of the advice has been already followed in the passage of the Food bill and the work of the Food Administration, and some of the information has already been made clear, the volume contains a great deal that is still interesting, practical, and valuable for us all. An appendix containing tables of food values and notes on methods of conservation is also important.

In "Thirty-Cent Bread" Mr. McCann also urges Government control. But his book remains of timely interest in its word to the individual. He has, for instance, a paragraph on "The Soup Kettle":

> The soup kettle must be put back on the kitchen stove on which, in America, it has not stood for years. Into that soup kettle should be placed every bone and every scrap of meat not actually consumed at the table.

He goes on to give directions for the use in the soup kettle of several articles of food that now "find their way into the garbage pail, only for the reason that we have become accustomed to disposing of them in that manner."

His book goes into a number of interesting details on several phases of the "food problem," such as the classification of and speculation in eggs, the conservation of grain, and the preservation of vegetables.

"The Physiology of Food and Economy in Diet" is a rather academic manual which has arisen, Professor Bayliss tells us, from a course of lectures given at University College, London, in November, 1916. The book is more a scientific study, less a practical handbook, than the volumes mentioned above, but it is a scientific study of practical and immensely pertinent things, and as such is of value to the general public and to the housewife. After a brief résumé of the problem as a whole, Professor Bayliss studies the uses of food, the classes of foodstuffs, the question of quantity, accessory factors, digestibility, alcohol, vegetarianism, exercise, the value of cooking, characteristics of certain articles of diet, and possibilities of economy. As a general summary of his directions, he concludes with the aphorism, "Take care of the calories and the protein will take care of itself." The little volume is interesting and good. The American reader will perhaps turn with especial interest to the study of the work of the Commission for Relief in Belgium as an example of good food administration and control.

of Spaniards and Moors following close behind. Yet the whole book is a series of delightful portraits, both of men and of horses. Next to men, we take it, Mr. Cunninghame Graham loves horses. Certainly some of his stories of horses are among the best things that he has done; and he never fails to pay tribute to a good man's love for his horse.

Among the quick pen sketches, for example, here is one from "Brought Forward," chosen almost at random from a large South American gallery:

> Enrique Clerici, from Itapua, tall and sunburnt, stood dressed in riding boots and a broad hat, with his revolver in his belt, beside a pile of empty bottles, which he had always ready to hurl at customers if there should be any attempt either at cheating or to rush his wares. He spoke the curious lingo, half Spanish, half Italian, that so many of his countrymen use in the River Plate; and all his conversation ran upon Garibaldi, with whom he had campaigned in youth, upon Italia Irredenta, and on the time when anarchy should sanctify mankind by blood, as he said, and bring about the reign of universal brotherhood.

One of the other stories in "Brought Forward" is a moving little sketch of the departure of Italian reservists for the war from a South American town. A brief and matter-of-fact bit of barbarism, on the other hand, is "Heredity," a sketch of the age-old antipathy between the people of Spanish and Portuguese descent in the towns along the border between Brazil and Uruguay. There are some scathing reflections on "civilization," although the alternative savagery of a more primitive life is as candidly shown in "El Tango Argentina," which describes the once famous tango as seen both in a smart Paris restaurant and "at home" in South America; the picture of boulevard gayety is revolting; but in the primitive rancho, among simple folk, the evening's amusement ends with a murder, in a frenzied moment of jealousy.

Perhaps the best stories in the book, however, are those about horses—"Los Pingos" and "Bopicua," where the horses gallop in great herds into the story, and "Hippomorphous," which goes back to the days of the conquest of Mexico. "Bopicua" is especially good, and haunting withal. For it is a story of how the ranchowners and gauchos sent out the horses that they loved "to fight the Boches." And one man's farewell stays with the reader:

> "Eat well," he said; "there is no grass like that of La Pileta, to where you go across the sea. The grass in Europe all must smell of blood."

The earlier volumes show the same understanding that marks "Brought Forward." The name of the volume "Charity" is taken from the initial story in the book, but nearly all the tales have charity, sometimes in an odd form, as motif. The first is the story of an Arab, the next of a stern, yet unexpectedly tolerant lady of mingled Scotch and Yorkshire blood. In "Un Autre Monsieur" a woman from the streets of Paris tells her story to show that, after all, men are by no means "all alike." "La Pampa," on the other hand, is not a story at all, but pure description, by a man who loves them, of the South American plains. "Faith" and "Hope" form the keynotes of the volumes of those titles, though sometimes faith and hope show themselves, and play their parts in men's and women's lives, in strange and sad ways. Many of the stories in the series are sad. Some are stingingly ironic. "Progress," a long story in the book of that name, is a horrible record of the putting down of a rebellion in Mexico.

The author is, as writer and traveler, a man of too deep sympathies to write lightly or to fall short, for all his tolerance, of indignation in the face of what is cruel or unjust. His sympathies are always with the simple people, the oppressed, the misunderstood. One suspects that, like that other British author who writes of South America with such deep understanding, W. H. Hudson, Cunninghame Graham is "at home wherever grass grows," and that his heart goes out forever to the country people and to country life. He has less sympathy for towns. And such sketches as "Terror" and "The Evolution of a Village" in the volume "Success" are filled with inherent revolt against the ugliness and brutality of life in great cities. The country calls him, the far lands, people humble, little known, the sweep of the prairies, the winding of a river through a forest wilderness. And he writes with feeling and with vividness.

A CHANGE OF AIR

A CHANGE OF AIR. By Katharine Fullerton Gerould. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25 net.

THE position which Mrs. Gerould has won for herself as a writer of short stories makes the publication of this, her first novel, an event of more than a little interest. The reading of the book, however, confirms one in the belief that its author is essentially a writer of the briefer form of fiction. Not because "A Change of Air" is in any way poor or stupid, but because it is in fact a group of short stories, all connected at the beginning, and some of them drawn together again just before the end. The book opens with a scene in the drawing rooms of Miss Cordelia Wheaton. Miss Wheaton, a rich woman, had a very large number of poor friends, and she had sent for them all to come to her house on a certain day. There they sit at the beginning of the first chapter; "and they waited, unprotesting; for they were all poor." At last, when the rooms are full, Miss Wheaton appears and makes the surprising announcement that she has decided to divide the greater part of her fortune among them at once, instead of doing it in her will. Each is to receive a certain sum—how much no one of the others will ever know. She carries out her plan, and the effect of this "windfall" upon the lives and characters of some few of her beneficiaries, and ultimately upon Miss Wheaton herself, form the theme—or perhaps it would be better to say the themes—of the book.

Of course, only a few of the half a hundred recipients of Cordelia Wheaton's bounty appear after that first scene. The majority of them are dismissed somewhat cavalierly; others have two or three lines devoted to their subsequent experiences. Mrs. Corbet, for instance; "Since her accession of fortune her health left her • • • from the moment that she could afford operations, one after another had been found necessary." But Bessie John, who takes to Chippendale and domesticity, Mrs. Williston, who develops into a household tyrant with a ghoul-like fondness for preying on reputations, and Julie Fort, who, "of the heady cup of the times had drunk only the froth," and once freed from the necessity of working, gayly set forth upon the primrose path, are described with some detail. Bessie is at once the most prominent and the best-drawn character in the book. Her talks with her husband, her ingenious speech of self-defense at the lawyer's office, when the little group is called into consultation and Mrs. Williston fails to give her the expected support—all these are handled with admirable deftness. Mrs. Williston seems rather overdone, but Julie Fort is a well sketched, easily recognized example of one very "dislikable" type of the modern girl. The men have minor parts, with the exception of Walter Leaven, the only person who knew the whole truth of Miss Wheaton's reason for impoverishing herself. He had loved her when they were both young, and to the memory of that love he had remained always faithful. In short, he is an admirable person; but he is neither a very real nor a very interesting one, and the closing pages, which are devoted to him and to Miss Wheaton, are the least successful in the volume. They should be touching; they are written artistically and with restraint; but there is something lacking, and they leave the reader entirely unmoved.

This new book has the subtlety, the sense of irony, the gift for astute and vivid phrasing, which we have learned to expect in all Mrs. Gerould's work. The first scene is altogether admirable in its picture of the diverse, expectant, rather greedy throng. And here and there we have a flash of insight such as this description of the one thing upon which Miss Wheaton's beneficiaries were all agreed:

> Only one decision would they all, as by a single gesture, make; not one of them would ever tell or ask another, "How much?" Imprisoned together in her charity, each would to the end have that little private cell to flee to.

The book is very short, very clever, very cynical. Its characters are most of them real people; but there is not one we would cross the street to meet, and many we would sedulously avoid. The style is epigrammatic, brilliantly so at times, highly polished, often ironic, always more or less self-conscious, more or less mannered; the reader is never without a feeling that the writer has worked very hard indeed. Sophisticated, subtle, with a keen discernment of the ironies of human life and of human character, interesting, if occasionally a bit fragmentary, as hard and glittering as a bit of highly finished marble, "A Change of Air" is an unusually clever book.

MR. MASON'S SHORT STORIES

THE FOUR CORNERS OF THE WORLD. By A. E. W. Mason. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50 net.

FOR some reason or other, perhaps because of a change in the publishers' point of view, perhaps because of a change in the public's demands, volumes of short stories appear rather more frequently now than they did a few years ago. And it must be admitted that the majority of them are at least fairly well done, the average quality higher among them than it is among novels. In this new collection of tales by Mr. Mason all the stories are interesting and well written, even though no one of them is particularly remarkable. As the title indicates, they possess a considerable range of subject. Several of them have to do with the supernatural, and three are ghost stories, each of a different kind. Of these "The House of Terror," in which the presence of the ghost is more than a little doubtful, is the best. It has an admirably shivery atmosphere and is cleverly handled; there are dexterous touches of psychology, and the description of the isolated house on the Outer Hebrides, with the fog swirling in from the sea, is decidedly effective. "The Refuge," which tells of a real and very gentle ghost, has a certain old-fashioned fragrance which is agreeable, while at the close of "Raymond Byatt," in which the ghost is of a distinctly vicious character, there comes a cynical and amusing little twist, a twist somewhat like the one which concludes the very amusing tale of a South American republic called "Green Paint."

With "The Crystal Trench" Mr. Mason takes his readers to the Alps and gives us a new version of the tale about the woman who waited the better part of a lifetime for the glacier to give up the body of her young lover. The account of the accident in this particular tale and of the discovery of the gruesome, grinning thing perched upon the ridge, are especially well done. "The Brown Book" is a doctor's story with a comparatively unfamiliar plot, a story of the days when the kings and kinglets gathered in London to attend the funeral of Queen Victoria, and three anarchists slipped through the carefully spread net of the police. During "The Affair at the Semiramis Hotel" we have the agreeable experience of meeting our two old friends of "At the Villa Rose," Mr. Ricardo and the French detective Hanaud, and find ourselves involved in an ingenious and perplexing web of mystery and crime. Drugs and pearls, a masquerade ball, and a charming, if not entirely admirable, young woman help to complicate an entertaining and colorful story of the years just before the outbreak of the war. Only two of the tales, indeed, are distinctly of the present day, but these two are among the best in the book—"Peiffer" and "One of Them." The first is the story of a typical German spy, who presently got a taste of "his own frightfulness" and did not like it a little bit, while "One of Them" relates how a man whose physical infirmity debarred him from becoming one of those fighting against the Hun in Flanders or in France kept his eyes open and so found a way to help his country and incidentally to win the bit of paper he craved, the bit of paper which made him "One of Them."

Twelve stories and a one-act play make up this new volume by Mr. Mason, and while space does not permit of comment on all of them, they are all entertaining.

CHRISTINE, EL SUPREMO, AND THE HIGH HEART

The New York Times Review of Books:

I HAVE not much time for personal grievances these days, but I must utter a word of protest against being accused of the authorship of that obvious fake, and ingenuous, (if laudable,) bit of anti-German propaganda, "Christine." Whatever my sins, I have never been accused before of putting the skeleton outside the flesh—or of sentimentality, administered in large and frequent overdoses.

The sentimentality, of course, is due to the author's anxiety that some disagreeably acute person might suspect the letters were not really written to a mother; but it would have been a wiser precaution boldly to have dated those mature reflections upon German habits, character, and psychology A. D. 1917. They are precisely the sort of reflections that every one of intelligence is indulging in now, but which no one living would have formulated after a two months' sojourn in Germany prior to August, 1914. There is a curious progression in thought on all vital public matters, owing, no doubt, to the elucidations of the daily press—and the secret of the success of "Mr. Britling" was that it reflected the orderly reactions of the average man to the war from the day it was declared. That book has a real value, whether one cares for it as a story or not. We have there the truth in its place, but as for "Christine," both publisher and author have assumed that the public is a pack of silly children.

Poor Countess Arnim! A writer who bubbles irrepressibly with wit, humor, irony; who, when she chooses, is the most poignantly funny writer living—to be accused of writing a story merely because the scene is laid in Germany and has sad little dabs of humor—as if the writer were oppressed from the first with the necessity of a "bad" ending!

One thing must be said for the author: She really does know something about Germany and her customs—a good deal more than she could have learned in two months, most of which time was spent in a third-rate pension. A hundred touches betray the old-timer, but one will suffice—she does not follow a title with von. It would never occur to her, for instance, to allude to the author of "The Pastor's Wife" as Countess von Arnim. This is a mistake made every day by the tourist or the sojourner in pensions. The French use the de with the title, but the Germans, either with a lofty affectation of democracy or because of the national habit of economy, scorn this particular form of redundancy even in their grandiose moments.

If there is really any one who is deceived by this poor little attempt to do her bit in adding to the overflowing cup of hate which we are all hoping will choke Germany before long, let him read Mme. Waddington's new book, "My War Diary." There is the real thing in letters, so deeply stamped with truth on every page that if published anonymously it would excite no argument whatever. And this is not merely because Mme. Waddington is the most accomplished letter writer of her time, but because these letters possess (aside from the flavor and insistence of truth) a certain irregularity of composition, sequence of facts, and impulses of the mind dependent upon the actual, and often unforeseen, occurrences of life. It is doubtful if even a writer of genius could simulate them.

EL SUPREMO AND LOPEZ

New York Times Review of Books:

ONE of the most notable of recent novels deals with Paraguay under Francia. It would remind us more of current events if some novelist would draw us a portrait of Paraguay under Lopez. I copy from the Encyclopaedia Britannica, article Lopez:

> In 1864, in his self-styled capacity of "protector of the equilibrium of La Plata," he demanded that Brazil should abandon her armed interference in a revolutionary struggle then in progress in Uruguay. No attention being paid to his demand, he seized a Brazilian merchant steamer in the harbor of Asuncion, and threw into prison the Brazilian Governor of the Province of Matto Grosso, who was on board. In the following month (December, 1864) he dispatched a force to invade Matto Grosso, which seized and sacked its capital, Cuyabá, and took possession of the province and its diamond mines. Lopez next sought to send an army to the relief of the Uruguayan President, Aguirre, against the revolutionary aspirant, Flores, who was supported by Brazilian troops. The refusal of the Argentine President, Mitre, to allow this force to cross the intervening province of Corrientes was seized upon by Lopez as an occasion for war with the Argentine Republic. A Congress, hastily summoned, and composed of his own nominees, bestowed upon Lopez the title of Marshal, with extraordinary war powers, and on April 13, 1865, he declared war, at the same time seizing two Argentine war vessels in the Bay of Corrientes, and on the next day occupied the town of Corrientes, instituted a provisional government of his Argentine partisans, and summarily announced the annexation to Paraguay of the provinces of Corrientes and Entre Rios. Meantime the party of Flores had been successful in Uruguay, and that State on April 18 united with the Argentine Republic in a declaration of war on Paraguay. On the first of May Brazil joined these two States in a secret alliance, which stipulated that they should unitedly prosecute the war "until the existing Government of Paraguay should be overthrown," and "until no arms or elements of war should be left to it." This agreement was literally carried out.

It would doubtless be libelous to tell what the Britannica says Lopez did after this. It will be more legitimate to quote from the article "Paraguay" in the same encyclopaedia:

> During this warfare every male Paraguayan capable of bearing arms was forced to fight, whole regiments being formed of boys of from 12 to 15 years of age. Even women were used as beasts of burden to carry ammunition and stores, and when no longer capable of work were left to die by the roadside or murdered to avoid any ill consequences occurring from their capture. When the war broke out the population of Paraguay was 1,337,439; when hostilities ceased it consisted of 28,746 men, 106,254 women above 15 years of age, and 50,079 children. During the retreat of the Paraguayans the dictator ordered every town and village passed through to be razed to the ground and every living animal for which no use could be found to be slaughtered.

The reasons why the world should just now remember Lopez will be apparent without elaborate explanation.

THE HIGH HEART

New York Times Review of Books:

I WAS much impressed by the closing lines of your review of Basil King's new novel, "The High Heart." It seems to me that the spiritual significance of the story is very great, particularly to those who have already suffered. It seems to me that we have been waiting for a Mr. Britling here. But could the casualty lists when they begin to come stimulate any finer statement than Mr. King's?

> Michael and his angels are fighting, and the dragon is fighting and his angels. By that I do not mean that all the good is on one side and all the evil on the other. God forbid! There are good and evil on both sides. On both sides doubtless evil is being purged away and the new, true man is coming to his own.
> If I think most of the spiritualization of France, and the consecration of the British Empire, and the coming of a new manhood to the United States, it is because these are the countries I know best. I should be sorry, I should be hopeless, were I not to believe that, above bloodshed, and cruelty, and hatred, and lust, and suffering, and all that is abominable, the Holy Ghost is breathing on every nation of mankind.
> When it is all over, and we have begun to live again, there will be a great Renaissance. It will be what the word implies—a veritable New Birth. The sword shall be beaten to a plowshare and the spear to a pruning hook. "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

But the hope of the American spirit, I think, is in the very title of the book—"The High Heart."

THE WISHING-RING MAN

THE WISHING-RING MAN. By Margaret Widdemer. Frontispiece in color by Willy Pogany. New York: Henry Holt & Co. $1.20.

Margaret Widdemer has a decided knack for the writing of gay, clever, slight little comedies, and she is quite at her best in this sparkling trifle of a story. In a way, it is a sequel to her previous story, "The Rose Garden Husband," since the central characters of that tale, Phyllis and Allen Harrington, reappear in this new one. But here they are no longer the motive power of the action. They merely help to turn the wheels of the story. The centre of the stage is held now by Joy Havenith and John Hewitt, Allen Harrington's best friend. Joy is the nineteen-year-old granddaughter of famous Alton Havenith, who is a poet and a personage and holds afternoon receptions at which he reads aloud his latest poems. Joy is an important stage property for these occasions because the poems are frequently written to her or about her, and then grandfather likes her to be dressed in harmony with the poem. So she wears her hair in two long braids and dresses in medieval style and does not expect to be treated as if she were grown up. One day she voices a bit of mild rebellion and the two old people think she must be ill, and they carry her off to a Summer colony in Maine, and there she meets Phyllis and Allen Harrington. She has a wonderfully happy time, being young and herself, and not merely a decoration for grandfather's afternoons of poetry. To make it possible for this delightful experience to last a month longer she yields to temptation on the spur of the moment and pretends to be engaged. Out of that situation flow all the complications of the tale, and they land poor Joy in some embarrassing situations. But the man she has chosen for her "trial engagement" stands loyally by her, and there is, of course, a happy ending. It is a charming, slight little tale, written with vivacity and with ever-bubbling humor.

PLANNING DEMOCRACY FOR GERMANY

THE COMING DEMOCRACY. By Hermann Fernau. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.

EVERY now and then there is some reference in European news to the activities of a little group of Germans in Switzerland, who, with headquarters at Berne, are working in the interest of a republic in Germany. They publish a newspaper, the Freie Zeitung; they write articles, pamphlets, and books, and they show much ingenuity and perseverance in trying to get circulation in Germany for their ideas. For anything they write is banned from the German Empire, and in the case of at least one of their productions, Hermann Fernau's previous book, "Because I Am a German," its possession inside Germany is an offense punishable by death. A society has just been organized in the United States to co-operate with them and give them all the help possible from this side of the ocean. For their aims are identical with America's objective in the world war. This present book by Herr Fernau, who is a leader of the group, is as merciless an indictment of the German Government and as ardent an appeal to the German people to achieve their freedom as any American could have written.

The book deserves, therefore, interest and welcome at the hands of all Americans, for Herr Fernau and his group are our allies. They are helping to fight our battles, and the fact that they are Germans, of German birth, who love their home land, gives to their appeal a supreme advantage. Herr Fernau is of Prussian birth, but he sees clearly what the Prussianising of Germany has meant. Most of the time throughout the book he speaks of the German Empire as "Prusso-Germany." The work was first published in Switzerland last Winter in German, before either the Russian revolution or the entrance of America into the war had clarified and directed the aims of the conflict in its world aspect. It is necessary, therefore, in reading the book to keep that fact in mind, as it destroys the significance of much that he says about Russia. All that, however, is of little importance to his general theme and purpose, which is to hammer into the heads of his fellow-Germans an understanding of how sinister is the Government to which they give their loyalty and how much better it would be for them to send that Government packing and set up one which would mean Germany for the Germans, and not for the dynasty.

Herr Fernau uses the word "dynasty" to mean not merely the family of an autocratic, hereditary ruler, but to include also all the powers and influences which gather to its support and by means of which it fastens itself more securely on its throne. It signifies for him a ruler claiming divine right for his rights and surrounded by an aristocratic satellite class of wielders of arbitrary power. So, when the author urges upon the Germans to rid themselves of their dynasty he means not only the Hohenzollerns, but also all the institutions of the country that allow the exercise of power by irresponsible and autocratic classes or individuals. He is under no illusion as to the feelings of the German people on this matter. "There are in Germany," he says, "hardly a hundred, all told, who see the dynasty as it really is. And among those hundred there are scarcely a dozen serious democrats who have fully realized the dynastic side of this world war."

But Herr Fernau finds the wrong to have been inherent in the fact of the dynasty. Carefully and fearlessly he examines the legal, military, political, and intellectual relation of the dynasty to the country and finds it to be all-powerful in every one of these relations, with the people completely dominated by its desires. He tells the German people that they have no "Fatherland," in any honest meaning of that word, but only a dynasty which uses them for its own advantage. He does not mince words in the least as he advances his arguments and his evidence and comes to his conclusions. The German Army is the Emperor's army, made up of and paid for by German citizens who have no voice whatever in deciding what it shall be used for. It is "feudal, not national; dynastic, not democratic." The dynasty controls the universities and the professors. "A century of intellectual drilling," he declares, "has reduced them to such a condition of absolute dependence upon the State that the dynasty can blindly rely upon them." And he thus presents with a mordant pen the intellectual results of German dynastic rule:

> For Emperor and Empire! Between these everlasting blinkers our historians view their documents, the professors their antiquities, the Free Masons their cornerstones, the classical scholars their Pegasus, and the Social Democrats the ark of the covenant of the sacred Marx. German culture in the German Empire? No! A Ptolemaic cosmic system of superstitious theories which circle round the stationary level of their dynasty. * * * The German "champions of culture"? Among a hundred there is hardly one who dares to play the man; slaves who carry their master's whip; pedants who laud as liberty what all the rest of the world has long felt to be serfdom. * * * Learning without character, knowledge without conscience, organization without humanity, discipline without liberty, ideals without dignity—such is the result of a mental development that, commencing with the disappearance of the Weimar Germanism, politically trained by Metternich, Bismarck, and William II. and intellectually by Hegel, Treitschke, and their disciples, could only play its part as a protecting power of the dynasty. * * * I believe that after this catastrophe we require an entirely new generation of men to answer to entirely new conduct this—for Germany—entirely new question, namely, what culture really means.

The author hopes, profoundly, that Germany will be defeated, wholly and entirely, in this war; believes, in fact, that defeat will be her only salvation. And after that he calls upon his fellow-Germans to "join hands with the other civilized nations of the world as peaceable, equally privileged, equally efficient laborers in the field of culture."

"The Coming Democracy" is an astounding book, no unexpected is it to find such clear, keen insight into German conditions, such fearless presentation of facts, such merciless, sardonic, biting humor in statements coming from a German source. It is a masterly presentation of the worldwide indictment of Germany from the mouth of one of her own sons.

RUSSIAN COURT MEMOIRS

RUSSIAN COURT MEMOIRS, 1914-1916. By a Russian. Illustrated. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

IT is with a peculiar sense of irony that we read "Russian Court Memoirs, 1914-1916." The Russian literature that we have received hitherto, inevitably breathed dissatisfaction with the régime before the revolution; the Imperialists did not seem inclined to write books. But our present anonymous author was a loyal supporter of the Czar, and it is from this unusual standpoint that the book is written. In the light of recent events, it seems to tell of things long past, and when the devotion of the people to the Czar is constantly affirmed, we are tempted to, in small boy fashion, say: "Yah! Yah! We know better!"

The unpopularity of the Czarina is consistently dwelt upon. She held herself aloof from the people. She surrounded herself with Germans and the rascally monk, Rasputin, "who is a thorn in everybody's flesh." A plea is made that she be a Russian Empress, and show her Russian feelings to the Russian people. She had an aversion for Court functions, therefore the Court was not the centre of society. In consequence, the so-called social leaders led a much gayer life than would have been tolerated if the Court had exercised its leadership.

The German supremacy in politics and Court life was a severe trial to the loyal Russians.

> In looking back over the last two centuries one notices the growing hatred inspired by the Germans, which, like a red thread, can be traced through all these years. The German is looked upon by the Russians as the foe who has usurped all that is best in this country. The most important positions at Court have been given to Germans; Germans take a prominent part in trade; every profession or industry is filled with Germans. For years the Russians have silently resented this. These long years of repression have at last given vent to an outburst of the most violent antagonism against the hated Teutons. This explains the extreme popularity of the present war among the middle classes and the people, for the "Niemets" (the Russian word for German) is not only the country's enemy, but the private foe of every Russian.

There is a good chapter on Russian women during the war. A touching little story is told of the Grand Duchess Olga Alexandrovna, a sister of the Czar. She takes her work seriously, and does everything that is required of the ordinary hospital nurse. She is known in the hospital as Sister Olga. A wounded warrior was having his wound bathed by a small, unobtrusive-looking nurse. He asked her if it was true that the Czar's sister worked in that hospital. Receiving an affirmative answer, he begged to be allowed to see her.

> "For Heaven's sake, don't excite yourself. I will show you the Czar's sister if you promise to be quiet and go to sleep."
> "I promise."
> "Well then, look at me. I am the Grand Duchess Olga, but here I am called Sister Olga," and her Imperial Highness gave her hand to the wounded man, which he reverently raised to his lips.

The Czarina took training as a Sister of Mercy, but this did not please the Russian people. It was all right for the other members of the Imperial family to engage in hospital work, but not the Empress. The part of a ministering angel who would say consoling words to the wounded soldiers was a conception more agreeable to the popular mind. But shyness, often taken for coldness, debarred her Majesty from this rôle.

Our author claims that the Czar was in no way responsible for the war—that he did everything in his power to avert it. When it was irrevocable the "Czar became a transformed man and revealed an energy and activity hitherto unknown."

> Two sacred sentiments, enshrined in the depths of their hearts, give the keynote to the Russian character: their adoration of God and their veneration for the Czar. Both these sentiments are so closely connected in the simple mind of the Russian peasant that they partake of one religious principle—God is the Almighty Sovereign of the universe, the Czar is the "anointed" emissary of the Lord.

It is stated in these "Memoirs" that Tolstoy did harm to the Russian people in tampering with their faith and depriving them of their sacred beliefs. His power as a novelist and dramatist is conceded, but it is said that he did not live up to the maxims he preached. He did not believe in personal property, but he retained his own land, and his wife was a good business woman in her dealings with publishers. He was against wedlock, but for forty years he had a happily married life. After leaving home, however, his wife was kept by her own daughter from seeing him. Our author concludes that Tolstoy was a great man who overreached himself. He also says that Esprin, Andreyev, Gorky, and Artzibasheff have talent, but lack in good taste.

> Ideals, conscience, sacred sentiments are empty words to the heroes and heroines of Russian fiction. * * * What is to be expected of a girl whose mind whilst it was still unformed was fed on Artzibasheff, Verbitsky, Kuprin, &c.? What kind of wife or mother will she be when her turn comes to enter the holy estate of matrimony? Women novelists are just as bad—they idealize the free woman.

The laxity of morals in Russian society is deplored. The prevalence of divorce makes it a fact that it is easier for a married woman than for a spinster to find a husband. Gossips chatter about impending divorces as of budding engagements. "The consequence is that Petrograd is becoming a veritable Babylon."

Following several comments on the war the book ends with this paragraph:

> Meanwhile we are all agreed to defend Holy Russia, and to expulse the enemy from our native soil. From the Arctic Ocean to the Black Sea, from Vladivostok to the Baltic, the Russian people have but one aim, one wish, one aspiration: to fight for their Czar and their country till the last drop of their blood. They must be victorious!

"Russian Court Memoirs" is not a literary document. It is gossip, gossip that occasionally has a back-stairs flavor. As a journalistic report of a past era it is of intense interest. The book is sincere, faithfully told from the writer's viewpoint—and the novelty of that viewpoint makes it all the more readable. However, even in these memoirs of an avowed Imperialist, symptoms of the revolutionary spirit creep out: criticism of the Empress, resentment of German power at Court, the prevailing immorality among the Court circles, all are infinitesimal pointers to the end which we have seen.

THE COMING DEMOCRACY

By HERMANN FERNAU, Author of "Because I Am a German"

Boston Herald says: "The author marshals his facts with pitiless precision, tracing the course of autocracy and its blight upon the freedom of thought and life of the German people. At every turn it is apparent that Herr Fernau understands not only the real thought of his countrymen, but the specious doctrines on which they have long been fed. His indictment of Germany's political system never descends to shrill vituperation. # ANTI-BRITISH SENTIMENT IN OUR SCHOOLBOOKS

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION IN OUR SCHOOL TEXTBOOKS: An Attempt to Trace the Influence of Early School Education on the Feeling Toward England in the United States. By Charles Altschul. With an introduction by James T. Shotwell, Professor of History at Columbia University. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.

THE effect of the teaching of history upon the thought and feeling of a nation is something of which we have talked much in the matter of Germany. It is perhaps a little strange that we have not given the subject more attention here at home. For it is as true here as anywhere that the man's attitude toward his own and other nations is subconsciously influenced by the way in which his country's history has been presented to the mind of the child! And the average citizen's early study of the outstanding fact in the history of the United States cannot fail to be of importance in his reaction to present-day relations between Great Britain and America. How does this "average citizen" feel toward England? How, as a child in the public schools, has he been taught to feel? What has he actually learned, from his textbooks, about the American Revolution?

These are pertinent questions. They are more; they are pressing. To Charles Altschul, not a historian, but a business man, they came with such force as to demand not merely a "consideration," but a searching answer. Every American looks back with pride to the Revolution, to the revolt of the colonists against oppression, the fine triumph of the love of liberty, the establishment of the free nation of the United States of America. So far so good. But in the attainment of some international understandings, not only breadth of thought but common justice, that is not far enough for the American to go. The colonists fought against oppression from England. But did that oppression represent the fine minds of English statesmanship? Did it even represent the mass of the English people? Whence did it come? What was its cause? What was this "England" against which America fought?

It is easy to understand why from the outbreak of war sympathy in the United States has flamed forth in support of France. It is not on the surface so easy to understand the apparent lack of a similar sympathy for England. In his introduction (written before our entrance into the war) Mr. Altschul says:

> We all understand that the historical origin of our nation is one of the causes which dampens the enthusiasm for England; we remember the political agitation which, years ago, aroused slumbering animosities at every election, and which, even in these days, occasionally fans the flames of prejudice. Besides, we recall minor causes of irritation which have, from time to time, sown mutual distrust between the two nations; and, at the present moment, we must make allowance for the pernicious effect of recent German propaganda.
> But, in spite of the controversies which have at times raged between the two peoples, we speak the same language as the English; our customs have been fashioned after theirs; our legal procedure has been founded upon theirs; their ideas of Government and their conception of liberty are ours as well. In spite of the wars we have fought against them, we have never thought of turning to any other nation as a model for what is most essential in our public and private life. * * * Why, then, have we not rallied in a much greater measure to the moral support of England in this world upheaval? * * *
> It has occurred to me that the explanation of this phenomenon lies in the way in which facts of history, superficially studied without due regard to surrounding circumstances, determine our views in later life; especially if locked in that mysterious storehouse, "the subconscious," during childhood, when the spirit in which instruction is given leaves a more indelible mark than do the facts themselves.

Whereupon Mr. Altschul has studied the contents of the textbooks in use in the three lowest grades of the public schools in which American history is taught, in so far as these cover the Revolutionary period, in sixty-eight American cities, representing every State in the Union. He has examined, first, the books in use twenty years ago, and then the books in use now, being assisted by boards of education, superintendents of public schools, and other well-informed persons. He has confined his study to the facts of the Revolutionary period, as set forth in these textbooks. He is not criticising the work of American research historians. He is making no historical researches himself. He is simply seeing what American children have been, and are being, taught from simple school textbooks about the American Revolution.

The situation, as set forth in the textbooks which he found to contain the most complete information, was represented substantially as follows:

> Up to the time when George III. ascended the throne the colonists greatly valued the connection with the mother country; the various distinct and separate Colonies were at least as much attached to her as to one another; and many colonists remained loyal throughout the Revolutionary War;
> In spite of their grievances, there was no general disposition to separate from the mother country before 1775;
> The greatest, wisest, and fairest-minded of England's statesmen were against the King, and fought on many occasions in Parliament in the interests of the Americans;
> Pitt, Burke, Fox, and others, were, in spirit, the allies of Franklin, Adams, and Washington;
> The responsibility for the American Revolution mainly lies at the door of George III. and the "King's friends";
> Parliament was, at that time, not representative of the great mass of the English people; out of a population of approximately 8,000,000 only about 200,000 had the right to vote; and many of these were influenced by illegitimate, disreputable means, adopted by the King in order to gain control of the legislative body;
> The people of England, as a whole, were not, and under the circumstances could not be, responsible for the American Revolution.

But, with the facts thus set forth in the fullest of our textbooks, how far from these conclusions, asks Mr. Altschul, are the statements from which most of the citizens of this country have drawn their knowledge of the history of the Revolution?

A study of forty textbooks in use twenty years ago brought forth the following facts:

> All deal fully with the grievances of the Colonists; four of the forty give an account of general political conditions in England prior to the American Revolution, and give credit to prominent Englishmen for the services they rendered the Americans; four make some reference to general political conditions in England prior to the American Revolution, and mention some prominent Englishmen who rendered services to the Americans; eleven make no reference to general political conditions in England before the Revolution, but make, at least, favorable mention of several prominent Englishmen; seven make no reference to English political conditions before 1775, but mention, at least, Pitt; fourteen of the forty make no reference whatever to general political conditions in England prior to the American Revolution, nor to any prominent Englishmen who devoted themselves to the cause of the Americans.

Of fifty-three textbooks in use now, six belong to the first-named class, fourteen to the second, thirteen to the third, five to the fourth, and fifteen to the fifth.

But Mr. Altschul's investigation did not stop here. As he says, this numerical comparison taken by itself might be to some extent misleading. So he examined into the distribution of the books, the ones most in use according to the classifications above. And from his investigation entire he has drawn the following conclusions:

> The great majority of history textbooks used in our public schools more than twenty years ago gave a very incomplete picture of general political conditions in England prior to the American Revolution, and either did not refer at all to the great efforts made by prominent Englishmen on behalf of the Colonies, or mentioned them only casually;
> The number of separate history textbooks which gave this incomplete picture was not only much larger than the number of those giving more complete information, but the former circulated in many more communities throughout our country than the latter;
> The public mind must thereby have been prejudiced against England;
> The children now studying American history in the public schools have a far greater number of textbooks available which give relatively complete information on this subject; but the improvement is by no means sufficiently marked to prevent continued growth of unfounded prejudice against England.

The greater part of the book is made up of extracts from the textbooks of all five classes, of both periods. We recommend them, as we heartily recommend this whole book, to the American public for perusal and thoughtful consideration. But in pointing out the significance of such a study as this, we must by no means lose sight of Mr. Altschul's fair-mindedness, his modesty, the complete absence from his book of anything that approaches the dogmatic. Nor should any mistake be permitted as to the object of his criticism; as we have said, he is not criticising American research, but American elementary school textbooks and it is not their accuracy with which he finds fault. He does not quarrel with the truth of their facts, but with their incompleteness—an incompleteness that makes for superficiality and prejudice, and that is responsible for an impression that is inaccurate, however correct the statement of narrow fact may be.

Mr. Altschul's book is introduced with an admirable foreword by Professor Shotwell of Columbia, a foreword which forms, indeed, an essay in three pages on the conditions, tendencies, and hopes of school textbooks in American history. It is a valuable part of an arresting and pertinent book.

THE TURNING POINT

THE TURNING POINT: The Battle of the Somme. By H. Perry Robinson. Illustrated. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

This account of the great battle of the Somme, especially momentous in the world war, is written by the official correspondent of The London Times. In preparing it he has used his dispatches to his paper as a basis, and so has made a consecutive and lucid narrative of the operations of the British troops in that action. He explains that he has made only incidental reference to the co-operation of the French troops because he was not sufficiently familiar with their share of the battle to write about it. His narrative covers the four and a half months from the 1st of July, 1916, to the middle of November, when weather conditions made it advisable to end active operations for the Winter. Of this long struggle Mr. Robinson says that the British Army "won victories enough on the Somme for a score of wars." Although his narrative account is intended for general reading, and does not pretend to be complete in a military way, he has endeavored to make it accurate as far as it goes and as comprehensive as possible. So vast and so complicated was the battle that it will not be possible for any one to write its full story for many years to come, if, indeed, that can ever be done. But, certainly, Mr. Robinson has here told the story of the British part in it as well as it has yet been done, with skill and impressiveness in the writing of the narrative and with an effect so graphic that the reader cannot fail to realize the titanic nature of the struggle in all its terribleness.

A New Book by Amy Lowell

Tendencies in Modern American Poetry

By AMY LOWELL

In this new volume Miss Lowell again turns to criticism. For the first time, the new poetic renaissance is considered critically and given a perspective. Taking six leading poets, each a type of one of the trends of contemporary verse, she has written a short biographical account of the man and a critical summary of his work; relating him to the past, and showing the steps by which he left it to create the present.

"It would be disagreeably obvious to call Miss Lowell's prose 'poetic.' Its style conceals style; its sculptural simplicity has the regnant beauty of line . . . Always she aims at the dominant attitude of each of her poets. . . . She achieves chiselled imagery, the reflection in the mirror of words, of the clear, bright flame of immortal genius."

POETRY

IN the October number of the Atlantic Monthy Mr. O. W. FIRKINS complains that "during the last two centuries a gap has arisen between the poetry that we want and need and the poetry that is supplied by our artists." He goes on to explain that "the true English note in verse is heartiness, lustihood, marrow; the note of our recent poetry has been fineness, rarity, distinction." In other words, the verse of today is too "fine," too "rare" as compared with the "hearty" verse of the past, to furnish what we need from poetry. It is sometimes more difficult to measure what we have than what we have had. This seems to be particularly true in the case of poetry. To many critics the typical contemporary poet will not seem to be particularly lacking either in vitality of subject or homeliness of phrase, which, we take it, are merely other terms for the "heartiness, lustihood, marrow" that Mr. FIRKINS considers "the true English note in verse." In fact, the principal feature—and consciously so—of current poetry is its adoption of everyday life for its theme and the familiar word for its speech. On the other hand, looking back over the past, some of the greatest triumphs in poetry, triumphs that have lasted until the present day, have been made by poets whose art was certainly characterized by "fineness, rarity, distinction" rather than by "heartiness and lustihood." SHAKESPEARE and CHAUCER are the supreme exceptions, but, then, their work is scarcely classifiable since it partakes of all classifications. We must also count BURNS among the great poets of the past whose muse was distinctively "hearty." Outside of these the poets of the past who have won lasting fame seem to have been those whose art was particularly fine, rare, and distinguished. It was so with MILTON, (with whom, according to Mr. FIRKINS, "the evil began",) with SHELLEY, KEATS, COLERIDGE. Neither in language nor theme did these men draw on the everyday, the familiar. WORDSWORTH, who deliberately did do so—whose plea, as Mr. FIRKINS puts it, was "for a poetic diction which should reflect the language of actual men when that language was swayed by emotion"—is certainly not as widely read nor strongly felt, either as a vital or a literary influence, today as the poets just cited.

SOMETHING of the same kind is noticeable in the poetry of the immediate past. As against WALT WHITMAN—whom Mr. FIRKINS, rather illogically, does not like—there are such masters of "fineness, rarity, distinction" in verse as SWINBURNE, the ROSSETTIS, and TENNYSON. Mr. FIRKINS finds that BROWNING achieved far more "for the cause" than did WORDSWORTH, by which we understand him to mean that BROWNING was nearer to that "true English note in verse," characterized by "heartiness, lustihood, marrow." But, he tells us, > the service did not come from the eccentric and acrobatic BROWNING, and it found no sustenance in his crabbedness, his obscurities, his verbosities, and his circumlocutions. It was the sane and normal BROWNING, the BROWNING of "My Last Duchess" and "Andrea Del Sarto," who served us stoutly by the demonstration that poetry, without abandoning its final reserves of elevation and distinction, might be generously inclusive, both in the range of its topic and allusion and the varied graduation of its tone. This was true help, and simplified the problem.

As a matter of fact, without in any sense desiring to depreciate the value of BROWNING'S contribution to English poetry, the appeal of his verse is unquestionably intellectual rather than emotional, and thus it is somewhat strange to find him ranked with the poets of nature as distinguished from the poets of art. Like all great poets BROWNING broke many a literary tradition, and was, according to some standards—like that of POPE, for example—frequently unconventional in theme and diction. But then, as GEORGE MOORE reminds us, "You must have rules in poetry, if it is only for the pleasure of breaking them"—and the man who breaks them generally does so not because he is going to substitute nature for art in his verse but because he has another view of art than that held by his predecessors or even his immediate contemporaries. Poetry without art is, indeed, quite unthinkable. But one is apt to forget, at times, the vast difference that there is between art and artificial—the one has nature for its soul, the other aims to be a sort of negation of nature. Mr. FIRKINS is thoroughly aware of this difference and writes picturesquely of poetry's struggle to free herself from the artificial—

> The Muse, who had grown ladylike with GRAY and COLLINS, in her scamperings over gorse and heather with ROBERT BURNS put on freckles, which her resumption of veil and parasol in the ensuing century never quite removed from her expressive face.

Nature, of course, we always need in our art. But, aside from this, we are inclined to think that our immediate need in poetry is, not so much a formulated striving for "the true English note in verse," but a great original poet, (there was more than one twenty-five years ago,) who will shape his own art so that it will best convey the message that is in him. And we fancy that such a poet will not be lacking in "rarity and distinction."

ONE has learned to expect something worth while from the pen of Mrs. GERQULD, whether it be fiction or critical essay—and one is rarely disappointed. This is not intended to convey the idea that one necessarily agrees with Mrs. GERQULD in what she has to say regarding literary matters. Quite the reverse, indeed. It was not so very long ago, for instance, that Mrs. GERQULD'S theory that O. HENRY'S short stories were really not short stories, but something else—episodes we think she called them—aroused us to some words of protest. And now, in this month's Yale Review, Mrs. GERQULD is shattering—very cleverly, we confess—certain idols among contemporary writers of English fiction, in a way that is bound to cause several twinges to literary nerves. Of Mr. WELLS, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. GALSWORTHY, she has little to say that is not in the way of ridicule; and of HUGH WALPOLE, J. D. BERESFORD, COMPTON MACKENZIE, GILBERT CANNAN, OLIVER ONIONS, and W. L. GEORGE, we are practically told that they are all alike. About these younger English writers, we learn, the "main feeling is one of sheer disappointment." And then, to conclude—

> If this is the best that England can do for us in the way of fiction, we must either encourage our native product or eschew fiction and take to "serious" reading. These men are too dull. The time is ripe, once more, I believe, for a few big picaresque novels: something in the mode of the "Satyricon," and "Gil Blas," and "Huckleberry Finn." For I do not think that people will put up forever with being bored—especially as they are not boring us in the interests of virtue.

LATEST WORKS OF FICTION

must needs descend to the lowest kind of scheming to frustrate his son's purpose. He makes an accomplice of a particularly low criminal, resorts to blackmail, causes the poor working girl to lose her job, and acts precisely like the villain of old-fashioned melodrama. Mr. England's depiction of Back Bay life borders on the ludicrous. One thinks of Colonel Higginson and shudders! Nor does the hero, as an example of Harvard-bred jeunesse dorée, carry more conviction. He is not the sort of youth that inhabits the Gold Coast in Cambridge.

Bradford Vinton falls in love with Sylvia Alden because, besides being beautiful, she awes him by the display of a tremendous and varied energy. For Sylvia Alden holds down four jobs in the daytime and does mission work at night. Mornings she works in a mill loft, sells tickets at a moving picture theatre in the afternoon, and sandwiches other activities between. One is moved to wonder whether it would not be far better for Sylvia, in an age of specialization, to focus her energy on one job instead of on four. But such criticism does not occur to Bradford Vinton. He leaves his father's house and decides to make his own living. But the father's machinations force Sylvia to run away, and Bradford, left alone, starts a mission of his own, "The Little Haven," for the regeneration of derelicts. He is astonishingly lucky in this enterprise. The derelicts who drift into the Little Haven are as uniformly docile as converts at a Billy Sunday meeting. Their lives are changed by mere contact with Bradford's humaneness.

Of course, it is idle to apply the ordinary standards of common sense to a book of this kind. Still, even the wildest melodrama is justified if its mechanism is sufficiently absorbing. Unfortunately, that cannot be said of the "mechanism" of this story.

THE PAINTED WOMAN

THE PAINTED WOMAN. By Frederic Arnold Kummer. Frontispiece in color by George W. Gage. New York: W. J. Watt & Co.

This is a romance of the West Indies in the days when Sir Henry Morgan's buccaneers plied their evil trade along the sunny sea ways and sent ships and souls to Davy Jones's locker for the sake of pieces of eight and jewels and slaves. Two or three years before the story opens Don Francisco de Lara of Seville had been appointed by the Spanish King Governor of Porto Bello and with his daughter Ramona had sailed for his new home. Almost had they reached it when a pirate ship captained by one of Morgan's cruelest and most successful buccaneers, Bull Ormiston, swept down upon them, killed every one on board except the young and lovely Ramona, and carried her and all the booty to Port Royal, Jamaica, which was the headquarters of Morgan's pirate bands. There, in a beautiful house and garden, Ormiston kept Ramona, well guarded, that she might neither escape nor kill herself nor him. To Port Royal came, after two years, a trading ship from New England, and among her officers was John Barton, a young Puritan, goodly to the eye and strong and supple of wrist. His eyes and Ramona's have but to meet and the mischief is done. Thus the story opens and rapidly afterward do events rush on for the next few weeks. There are street battles and tavern brawls and much intriguing, and there are strenuous, exciting hours in Ramona's house and garden. And a good deal of blood—most of it pirate blood and a good riddance—is spilled before the outcome is assured. Toward the end there is a scene in the slave market of Port Royal, with Ramona on the block, that has much life and color and is infused with tense interest. The story as a whole is written with spirit and is full of action, while the buccaneers who swagger through it are all quite up to the blood-curdling standard by which gentlemen of their trade in fiction must be measured.

THE FIVE BABBITTS

THE FIVE BABBITTS AT BONNYACRES: A Story of Back-to-the-Landers. By Walter A. Dyer. Illustrated by J. O. C. New York: Henry Holt & Co. $1.50.

Take them separately and the Five Babbitts, one and all, are delightful acquaintances. Take them together as a harmonious family bound closely by ties of love and mutual respect and able to plunge enthusiastically into team-work and they are entirely admirable. Mr. Dyer, whose "Pierrot, Dog of Belgium," has been one of the most widely appealing of war books, tells the story of how the Babbitt family went back to the land. At the beginning of the tale there are only four Babbitts, Father and Mother Babbitt and Ethel and Harold, in their middle teens. Father Babbitt has had a long and serious illness and has been ordered to live an outdoor life. A little old New England farm, somewhere in Western Massachusetts, has been in his family for generations, and the Babbitt family moves thither in the early Spring of a recent year. The book tells with careful detail just what they did to make the little eighty-acre farm, a representative bit of New England farm land, yield them a living, joyous experience, and a happy home. The fifth Babbitt is acquired during the early months of their farm life in the form of an orphan waif, a State ward, whom they adopt. He is a charming little toy, and the endeavor of the Babbitts to pierce the mystery of his origin opens up a thrilling and romantic tale which brings some interesting moments to the home at Bonnyacres.

Mr. Dyer evidently means his story to be a practical handbook of how such a farm should be treated in order to make it a moderately paying investment. One guesses that into it have gone the results of Mr. Dyer's own experience with just such a farm. The fictional interest with which he has invested it by means of the Babbitt family makes it an entertaining yarn, for Mr. Dyer writes always with charm and humor and sanity.

THE INDIAN DRUM

THE INDIAN DRUM. By William MacHarg and Edwin Balmer. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $1.40.

Detective stories are all too frequently wrapped in a muddle of irrelevant detail lest the reader guess the solution too soon; or else they are written on the assumption that a thrilling plot precludes a smooth style. It is, therefore, a double pleasure to find a right little, tight little mystery, presented without any unnecessary tangles and solved in a sufficiently plausible manner. The authors of "The Indian Drum" have enjoyed previous successes in this field, and those who have a taste for the kind of excitement they give will find their latest tale a fascinating one.

The drum is the curious booming sound heard on Lake Michigan whenever a man drowns. The mystery centres around the fact that when the steel freighter Miwaka went down with twenty-five souls on board the drum sounded only twenty-four times. Who the survivor was, how his companions met their death, and why he was saved, are all questions for the story to answer. His appearance in Chicago many years later is intimately connected with the disappearance of the half-sane man who is said to be his father, following a quarrel with a business partner. The relation between these three men, and the quickening influence of the attraction which one girl exercises over two of them, are the chief sources of interest. The tale is clearly and pleasantly told, the characters acceptably real, and the solution eminently satisfactory.

THE MASK

THE MASK. By Florence Irwin. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $1.40.

A girl as unselfish as she is unsophisticated, Alison Terry is taken by her husband from the secluded peace of her father's rectory to the worldly restlessness of life in a New York boarding house. There she learns not merely the ugly facts which had never intruded on her serene existence, but that one's safety from choking on such poisonous gases depends on wearing a mask. So Alison herself adopts one, to cover her repugnance to the haunters of cafés and gambling houses whom her weak mate affects, and to hide from her family the irregularities of a life from which she suffers helplessly. Her husband, Phil Howland, is a writer, but he depends on the gaming table for his living, and it is only after she saves him from utter ruin that he renounces his favorite vice. Subsequently their child is born; but by the irony of fate the infant is killed in an accident for which its father is responsible.

It is Alison who again saves Phil's self-respect, and out of their sympathetic agony is born a more intimate and responsive relation. In her misery the woman turns instinctively to writing for relief, and not the least part of their conjugal contentment is due to this mutual interest.

THE LITTLE ANGELS

THE STORY OF THE LITTLE ANGELS. By Laura Spencer Portor. New York: Harper & Brothers. 50 cents.

It has always been pleasant to see the little, rosy cheeked cherubim and seraphim on the Christmas cards. There scarcely seemed justice in the fact that stories existed about Rafael and Michael and the rest of the big, grown-up angels. Here were all the pink and white little bodies with no one to tell their story. In a pretty tale of the Christ's birth, Miss Portor makes the little angels play their part. Told in a simple manner and with an unornate style, this story is primarily intended for the little folks, but may be read with pleasure by older people. There is considerable beauty of thought and of language in "The Story of the Little Angels," which makes a good Christmas story.

KATE—PLUS 10

KATE—PLUS 10. By Edgar Wallace. Small, Maynard Co. Price $1.35.

It is unfair to tell the story of a book in a review and particularly unfair in a detective story. Unless the reader is fond of strenuous and hectic fiction, this book will be treated in a patronizing spirit, but when one reaches the fortieth page, suddenly there is interest in a necklace, affection for Lady Moya Felton, admiration for Michael, and adoration for Kate.

"Kate—Plus 10" is a charming mystery, unique and entertaining. Many superlatives might be sincerely used, real school girl expressions, such as "lovely," "adorable," "fascinating."

James Douglas in The London Observer says: "Some unknown man of genius who calls himself 'Fitzwater Wray' has translated the supreme novel of the war, and here it is in its divine simplicity of truth, undraped and unbedizened. There are some translations which are themselves originals, and this is one of them. I do not hesitate to put it on the shelf beside Urquhart's Rabelais or FitzGerald's Omar, for it is in my mind already a classic. Vainly I grope for a clue to the identity of this creative translator who is at once a man of letters, a master of prose, a specialist in French and English slang, a poet and a prophet more terrible than Tolstoy. Truth of course is the summit of satire, the apex of irony, and this journal of a platoon is the nude truth of war as it is seen by a common soldier who is also an artist and philosopher. But it is a story which is steeped in the beauty of comradeship and it is told with the most flawlessly delicate art. To read this book is to understand. If any book could kill war, this is the book.

WE CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING

¶ Will money buy everything?

¶ The beautiful little woman who became the wife of the millionaire in Mr. Hughes's story thought that it would.

¶ She found that she was wrong. Still she hoped that just around the corner fate was holding in wait for her all that she most desired. To tell whether she was right would be to reveal the fascinating plot of this remarkable story.

¶ Great critics have said that Mr. Hughes is doing for American life of today what Balzac did for the life of his time.

¶ And this new novel is unquestionably his best. $1.50.

bred in the New York streets. For William Grogan had been left an orphan at the early age of nine, and thenceforward been obliged to shift for himself. Now, it chanced that William Grogan worked in a cellar, from the window of which he could see only the feet of those passing by on the street. Among those many, many pairs of feet there was one which particularly interested him; a woman's feet they were, small and shapely, and always sensibly shod. For three years he watched them as they passed his window, which they did every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted, and always at certain hours. From these facts he deduced the theory that their owner was a schoolteacher, and the way they tripped along made him entirely sure that she was young, although—dreadful thought!—she might not be pretty. All this before the book opens, and William, who so far has had none too easy a time of it, begins to experience "The Luck of the Irish."

William was a rainbow chaser, and one of his dreams was a dream of travel. He wanted to see "Europe, Africa, Asia, all those queer places he had read about." But, as it had taken him six years to save up $800, his chances of a trip around the world did not seem ever large. And then the first of a series of extraordinary happenings took place, and to his own unspeakable amazement—and satisfaction—William Grogan found himself on board the good ship Ajax, bound on a six months' Cook's tour of the world. No reader of romances will need to be told that the owner of the enchanting feet was one of his fellow-passengers, and, of course, she was pretty and young and charming. To make her still more alluring, there was a mystery about her, a mystery which, for William at least, grew more and more perplexing as the weeks went by. To take pennies from a blind man is no meaner than to "give away" the plot of a novel, and the meanness is enhanced when the novel is a tale like this one, the interest of which depends almost entirely upon its plot. So we will only say that it is a lively tale, and, though in the climax at Singapore it does seem as if the author might have managed to concoct a more plausible excuse for the delay which enabled William to arrive in the very nick of time, the story as a whole is amusing.

THE TERROR

THE TERROR—A MYSTERY. By Arthur Machen. New York: The Robert M. McBride Company. $1.25 net.

"FROM October, 1914, to July, 1916, a "new and incredible danger" threatens to undermine the morale of the whole English nation, threatens, indeed, to exterminate the race itself. An insidious terror spreads over the countryside and breeds in the cities. Men die in munitions factories so horribly and so mysteriously that their families are not allowed to view their bodies, farmers and children are found dead in remote country places under the most curious and divergent circumstances. Even animals are somehow affected by this terror; they seem suddenly to go mad. Swarms of bees and farm horses and peaceful sheep dogs attack men fiercely and unaccountably. One woman is stung to death by a swarm of bees. Horses trample a sleeping garrison of soldiers. The terror is all-pervasive. It seeks its victims on sea and land and in the air. And there is a strange official silence about it all that points unmistakably to Germany. There is a theory that the Germans have, before the war, undermined the earth and are using some hitherto undiscovered, deadly ray—a "Z-ray"—to wreak destruction on the English. The theory turns out to be incorrect, however.

How the terror came upon England like a plague and how it passed away Mr. Machen tells in this capital mystery story with a forthrightness and a steadily cumulative tensity that will keep the ordinary reader and the proverbial Supreme Court Judge, who is reputed to like this kind of yarn, rooted to their seats till the book is finished. One is not distracted by love stories or subplots; the story runs straight and breathlessly to its conclusion. You are kept on edge for the solution, and the solution doesn't disappoint you. The denouement—when it would be unfair to future readers to disclose—is highly ingenious, as ingenious in its way as H. G. Wells's idea in "The War of the Worlds" for killing off the Martians after the Martians have killed off the Englishmen. In fact, Mr. Machen's solution is rather more than ingenious; it has a philosophic implication quite unexpected in a story of this type.

GOLF STORIES

DORMIE ONE, AND OTHER GOLF STORIES. By Holworthy Hall. New York: The Century Company. $1.35.

ASSUMING that you play golf—not only play it, but love it—then you will be fascinated by this collection of eight well-told golf yarns by one who confesses he has been a devotee for twenty years. Nor need you be necessarily a golfer to appreciate them, for though a golf course is invariably employed as a setting, there is in each story a perspicacious study of human temperaments, together with a literary finish, which gives it a value entirely independent of its eighteen-hole environment. The story that lends a title to the book, "Dormie One," is effective, even though rather lugubrious. It tells of an elderly champion golfer who finds himself paired in the finals for an amateur championship with a boy "too young to vote." The man had failed in business, but he had become a champion on the golf course, and to win games was the wine of his existence. He "knew no multimillionaire in all the world who could undertake to meet him on equal terms; he could concede six strokes and still administer a beating to the finest gentleman and the finest golfer in the Social Register."

His game with the young fellow is described with a technical detail which will be enjoyed by the golfer, while at the same time the older man's agony as he approaches the last hole and finds that he must fight hard to beat the boy—his mental pain increased by noting that the "gallery" is unanimously in sympathy with his opponent—is portrayed so graphically that the reader would never have forgiven the author if the champion had not won. But he did win, going to "the brink of apoplexy" in the operation, and the strain that has held us in a cruel grip since the two players drove from the first tee is lifted. It is a powerful sketch of human emotions. The fact that they are exercised so cruelly on the golf links is only incidental. The racking might have been equally poignant in any other field of human endeavor. "The Luck of the Devil" is one of the most amusing of the sketches, even though not particularly original in its main idea. The girl who allows two men to compete for her favor, and then marries somebody else has often appeared in print. In this case there is a touch of novelty in that the rivals play a round of golf for her, and the young lady marries the man who refereed their match.

The leading story, "Alibi," is laughable enough to put the reader in good humor for all that is to follow. The Warwick Country Club wants to raise half a million dollars to purchase its property, which includes the finest golf course in the State. Unless they can buy it, or get somebody else to do so, who will lease it to the club, the magnificent 200 acres will be cut up into building lots. The President and principal officers inveigle Mr. Cuyler, a short-tempered multimillionaire, who thinks he can play golf well, to take part in a foursome, and they manage it so that he shall achieve what he considers a wonderful game, making the eighteen holes in 83. To insure his doing this they have moved the tees and holes, enlarged the cups on the greens, and done other things to make the course easy for him. Then, by dint of playing poorly themselves and giving him every advantage, without his suspecting it, he gains an easy victory. He is so pleased with himself that he willingly advances the half million dollars all he asks being the signatures of the other players to his card to attest that he really did make the 83.

Each of the other five stories is quite distinct in plot and incident, although, as the author laments in his preface, "golf is comparatively academic" and "fails in romantic variety of situations." He adds that he knows of "only one other sport which offers fewer possibilities for a red-blooded story of nerve and stamina, and that's billiards." Mr. Holworthy Hall's fluent and graceful literary style is well known to most readers of current fiction. Many of them will say he is at his best in this decidedly attractive book. For each story there is a creditable page illustration.

THE GIFT SUPREME

THE GIFT SUPREME. By George Allan England. New York: The George H. Doran Company. $1.35.

There still persists the fixed idea among certain novelists that the synonym for virtue is poverty, and wealth for evil. The poor but honest working girl and the rich man who is invariably a whited sepulchre are puppets engendered of this concept. In "The Way of All Flesh" Samuel Butler beautifully satirizes this undying notion. The impoverished young clergyman who has been nourished on conventional ideas of this kind says to the rich and thoroughly charming Oxonian: "And do you mean to tell me that the poor are not better than the rich?" "No! Good Heavens, no!" replies the nabob, and leaves the poor young preacher gasping as at the utterance of a deadly blasphemy. Later, it will be remembered, as the young clergyman learns more from life, he is forced to discard his original idea as a piece of false intellectual coinage.

It is this very idea that forms the basis of George Allan England's novel of life as it is not lived in Boston, and the banality and faisemess of the idea are what help to vitiate the book. This is the kind of novel, it may be said at the outset, in which the rich young hero, scion of an ancient family, goes on a slumming expedition and meets a beautiful young mission worker in Chapter I. At no time does the book exceed that trite premise. Development is quite according to precedent. The young man falls in love with the girl, and his father is outraged at his thus attempting to sully "the name of Winten." The girl, being poor, is all that is charming and desirable, (according to the author's statement;) the father, being rich,

An Alliance of Anglo-American Poets

ONE of the most interesting literary ventures of recent years has been the grouping together of some of the younger poets of England and America in the publication of an annual anthology of their best work under the title, "Some Imagist Poets."

"These poets," says The Review of Reviews, "penetrate farther upon the unadventured realm of the imagination than most of their contemporaries. On days when the lilt of rhyme and the drone of iambics become unbearable, the Imagist anthology will shake one clear of old mental grooves with its clear, crisp, sculptural interpretations of beauty."

Now, when England and America, joined in alliance, are learning to strip away the artifice and luxury of civilization, it is fitting that there should have arisen a school of Anglo-American poets animated by a desire to strip away the artifice of modern verse and to express with sincerity and directness the emotions of the present age. A movement that has had so profound an influence on the whole trend of present-day verse and which typifies so exactly the friendship and understanding of two great countries cannot be ignored by anyone to whom poetry is a vital and living thing.

SOME IMAGIST POETS, 1917.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

MRS. T. B. G.—Will you give me some information about the Countess von Arnim, author of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden"? My impression is that she was an Englishwoman by birth, and has recently married for the second time—an Englishman being her second husband.

The Countess von Arnim is an Englishwoman, the daughter of H. Herron Beauchamp. Her first husband was Count Henning August von Arnim, by whom she had one son and four daughters. Count von Arnim died in 1910. His widow was married last year to the second Earl Russell, and she is his third wife. Besides "Elizabeth and Her German Garden," the Countess is the author of "The Solitary Summer"; "The April's Baby Book of Tunes"; "The Benefactress"; "The Adventures of Elizabeth in Ruegen"; "The Princess Priscilla's Fortnight"; "Fraulein Schmidt and Mr. Anstruther"; "The Caravaners"; "Princilla Runs Away," and "The Pastor's Wife." She lives in Chichester, England.

Burton's Arabian Nights

H. R.—Please tell me the value of a set of Lady Burton's edition of her husband's "Arabian Nights," leaved uncut. Also the value of Moxon's seven-volume edition of Wordsworth Poems, and the six-volume edition of the same, dated 1836.

Lady Burton's edition of the "Arabian Nights" has brought at auction from $5.25 to $21. Wordsworth's "Poetical Works," London, 1836, is worth about $6. The 1840 edition has fetched from $5.50 to $18 at auction.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

X. HARTFORD—In answer to the query of E. C. Reigel, in your issue of Sept. 16, for the origin of the lines:

Praise me if you can, condemn me if you must, but for God's sake don't let me pass unnoticed.

I would say that they may date back further, but they are occasionally attributed still to the late E. Spicer Cleveland of Hartford, prominent as a politician and at one time Lieutenant Governor of Connecticut. He was Postmaster of Hartford under Lincoln, but at once became an adherent of Andrew Johnson and declared that he would "defy any Administration to change any quicker than I can." He was a quick-witted man, and the story is told of him that his brother-in-law at a family quarrel said to him that he wouldn't attend his funeral if he should die the next day. Cleveland promptly answered that he'd be happy to attend his brother-in-law's funeral whenever the welcome event should occur.

"When She Came Not"

P. E. SIGGERS.—In reply to the query of "T. H. C." I am glad to be able to furnish the poem sought. It is by Shaemas O'Sheel, was printed in The Literary Digest about six years ago, and is entitled "When She Came Not." The poem follows:

I thought I heard her when the wind would pass
Down through the piny trees, the tangled grass;
I thought I heard her exquisitely near
When no sound was;
I thought I heard her little feet
Over the beach-pebbles beat,
And that I need but lift mine eyes
And see her there without surprise,
Knowing that she had come again
To kiss from me her scar of pain.
I thought, alas!
That she was exquisitely near
When no sound was,
And raised my head, and threw my arms apart; but she
Was nowhere 'twixt the forest and the sea.

"Bithus Contra Bacchium"

JAMES CRAIK MORRIS.—In reply to the query of Ruth Hooper in THE BOOK REVIEW of Aug. 26 with reference to "Bithus contra Bacchium," would say that Anthon's Classical Dictionary informs us as follows: "Bacchius and Bithus, two celebrated gladiators of equal age and strength, who, after conquering many competitors, engaged with each other and died of mutual wounds; whence the proverb to express equality, 'Bithus contra Bacchium.' (Horat., Serm., 1, 7, 20.—Porphyrion, Schol. ad Horat., l. c.)"

"Magdalena"

FRANK H. HALLOCK.—Under the heading "Queries and Answers" in the Sept. 16 BOOK REVIEW I notice reference made to the poem "The Lady of Sevilla." The poem will also be found under the title "Magdalena, or The Spanish Duel." In "Choice Readings," a school and college reader edited by Robert McLain Cumnock, formerly Professor of Rhetoric and Elocution in Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill. The author of this poem is given as J. F. Waller. Evidently there is some mistake, as you say it was written by Gratina Chartier.

The Mexican Problem

By

C. W. Barron

Author of "THE AUDACIOUS WAR"

In 1914 Mr. Barron went to Europe, soon after the breaking out of the War, to find its causes and probable duration. His book "The Audacious War" was the first to clearly set forth the Hohenzollern ambitions and the world peace that must ultimately result from their defeat.

When the Allies' fuel oil base in Mexico seemed endangered, Mr. Barron went to Tampico to investigate the oil situation. He found a larger problem and devoted himself to a study of the question of what would redeem Mexico. The result is his book, "The Mexican Problem."

Don't miss the strong poem, the clear foreword and the illuminating introduction of Dr. Talcott Williams. From these you will learn history and the causes of all wars as you never found them set forth elsewhere.

Extracts from a Few of Many Letters of Commendation

"The Mexican Problem is to my thinking worth its weight in gold—of all recent books the best by many degrees."

"Since reading Mr. Barron's book, I am conscious of a larger sympathy with the people in Mexico, and of a conviction that they are more worthy of saving of redemption, than I had supposed. One cannot help feeling glad to know that there is so much more of real good in them than previously supposed."

"The book conveys to the reader a knowledge of Mexico and the needs of its people in a way not heretofore adopted by any others attempting to give information on the subject.

"In fact, the whole book is a compendium of terse, trenchant and sententious wisdom on the Mexican Problem."

Facts and Principles Taken from the Book that are Worth Remembering

"The United States can never take its proper attitude in co-operative democracy toward its sister republic until two popular yet absolutely false impressions of Mexico are removed. These popular fallacies are:—

"First, that the natural wealth of Mexico has furnished a base for contending business interests from the United States to promote Mexican quarrels.

"Second, that the land question is at the bottom of the Mexican troubles."

* * * * * * "That is the need of Mexico today—opportunity to labor, opportunity for the family, opportunity for food, clothing, better shelter, and better social conditions.

"And this is exactly what American and European capital and organization have brought to Tampico, attracted by its underground wealth, and this is what will ultimately redeem Mexico and forward her people by industrial opportunity."

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

trative material in it and all the references adduced as evidence are of conditions and affairs as they were previous to 1914. The book, therefore, is chiefly of historical interest, since the world war is so changing world ideas and has already sent so irrevocably to the scrap heap many widely held convictions and purposes that the world after the war will need to bring about entirely new adjustments. But the book is interesting and timely for the light it throws on the pre-war Germany and for the illumination it makes of the character of Karl Liebknecht. Only a man of sterling courage and of a remarkable mental freedom could have so divorced himself from the influences of his surroundings and expressed his convictions so clearly and calmly, knowing how they would be viewed by the military masters of his country.

The introduction, signed by "A Personal Friend of Karl Liebknecht," tells the story of the book. It had its beginning in a lecture delivered by Herr Liebknecht eleven years ago on "Militarism" at a conference of young people in Germany. He revised the lecture and published it in book form and afterward made it the basis of this present volume. A few months later the book was confiscated and the author arrested and charged with treason. In October, 1907, Herr Liebknecht was found guilty and sentenced to a year and a half in prison, the Imperial Court declaring that he aimed at the abolition of the standing army and that this army was an integral part of the nation's constitution. So important was the case considered that the Kaiser was kept constantly in touch with the progress of the trial by a special wire.

In his address to the Judges Liebknecht declared the aim of his life to be "the overthrow of monarchy as well as the emancipation of the exploited working class from political and economic bondage." As an answer to his sentence the working people of Berlin elected him, while he was still in prison, to represent them in the Prussian Landtag. There, in the Common Council and in the Reichstag he has continued to fight the principles and purposes of the militaristic system of Germany, while in the Reichstag his voice was heard in favor of a German republic. On the breaking out of the war he told his followers in the council of the Socialist Party that Germany was not entering upon a war of defense, that it was an imperialist war for domination of world markets, that it would tend to destroy the growing labor movement, and that it was their plain duty to vote against the war budget. But other opinions prevailed, and the entire Social Democratic delegation voted for the budget. But Liebknecht voted against it at the second session in December, and in the Reichstag declared that the Germans were the aggressors and that it was an imperialistic war provoked by Germany and Austria. On May 1, 1916, Liebknecht took part in a peace demonstration in Berlin and made an anti-war address for which he was arrested, tried, and sentenced to four years' penal servitude. He wrote two letters to the military court which tried him which, the writer of the introduction says, show him in a true light. In these he said, in part:

> The cry of down with the war is meant to give voice to the fact that I thoroughly condemn and oppose the present war because of its historical nature; because of its general social causes; the particular way in which it was brought about; the manner in which it is conducted and the object for which it is fought.

Herr Liebknecht's argument in his book is against all war, against any making and keeping of armies or any arming of nations, unless, possibly, the army should be one of thoroughly democratic origin and organization. Although he refers now and then to the military systems of other nations his point of view is that of the man in front of whose eyes has loomed largely the German militaristic system. He is obsessed also, as are most Socialists, with the conviction that an army, or any fighting force under the control of a Government, will always be used to forward the interests of capital. One long section of the work is devoted to "Capitalistic Militarism." In another he studies "Means and Effects of Militarism," the point of view being always that of a Socialist in Germany. In the last section, on "Some Cardinal Sins of Militarism," he says, in conclusion:

> As truly as the maintenance of international peace is in the interest of the international proletariat and beyond that in the interest of the civilization of the whole of humanity, as truly is the struggle against militarism—that epitome of national hatreds, that sum and extract of all peace-disturbing tendencies of capitalism; in short, that serious danger of world war—a fight for civilization which the proletariat is proud to wage, which it must wage in its very own interest and which to wage no other class as such (leaving out of account some well-intentioned enthusiasts who only prove the rule) is even remotely so much interested in.

MAN AS HE IS

MAN AS HE IS: Essays in a New Psychology. By Sir Bampfylde Fuller. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $2.50.

SIR BAMPFYLDE FULLER'S investigations [illegible] constructive treatise owes its inception to the practical need of a psychology that will do justice to the impulses at the foundations of our ethics—living energies which, in their elusiveness, have been relegated to the sphere of metaphysical speculation. It attempts the formulation of a series of principles more firmly based on reality, as it is revealed to us by the war, for the construction of a science of human nature enabling us to foretell with a greater degree of accuracy how an individual or group of individuals will respond to the situations of life. The underlying idea is that the force in human activity and conduct is, in fact, a multitude of impulses which are born with us, that the process of choice is impulsive in itself and is guided by considerations which have arisen out of impulses or impulsive susceptibilities. This point is developed with a positive touch, an acute critical incisiveness, that conveys to the reader a forcible impression of certainty. The first chapter, however, is too brief a statement of principles to form a really adequate introduction to the ambitiously planned inquiry. This appears to be especially true of the pages demonstrating the incompleteness of the utilitarian doctrine and of the materialistic theory that denies to life the possession of any energies or impulses of its own.

Taking a rapid survey of human impulses generally, the author proceeds to ascertain and tabulate their influence and character. He begins his examination with the instincts that actuate bodily functions, passing to the instincts which serve the development of the various bodily and mental facilities, the impulses to seek some things and avoid others and their derived impulses or emotions, the impulses appertaining to memory. To these are added feeling, which is sharply distinguished from sensation. The theory of feeling here formulated is that all phases of pleasure and pain are attributable to a single origin—to the action of impulsive tendencies to adopt or to reject. In this light the author examines the factors in choice, thought and consciousness, crystallising his conclusions in brilliant definitions, which are connected together in two remarkably stimulating and suggestive chapters on the determination of conduct.

The new psychology outlined by Sir Bampfylde Fuller draws our attention to the separation of conscious conduct into two classes, according as it is motived by choice or is motived by an unhesitating or unreflective impulse, and is chosen simply as a means of giving effect to this impulse. In the one class our conduct is determined by visions of pleasure and pain; in the other, pleasure and pain are unessential adjuncts. Thus, a new significance is given to the truism that we lead two separate lives. The author figures the life of choice or self-interest as the smooth upper-current of a stream; the life of impulse as an undercurrent of swirls and eddies, which occasionally rise to the surface and disturb its placidity.

TURN ABOUT ELEANOR

TURN ABOUT ELEANOR. By Ethel M. Kelley. Illustrated. The Bobbs-Merrill Company. $1.40 net.

The first dozen chapters of "Turn About Eleanor" are amusing, clever, and contain a number of touches of good-humored satire. Half a dozen young people, three girls and three young men, all of them great friends and all but one pledged never to marry, decide to adopt a child and bring it up on the co-operative plan. A little girl of 10, Eleanor Hamlin, an orphan from Cape Cod, is chosen as the subject of this experiment, and the first twelve chapters tell of her experiences with her six volunteer parents, each of whom lives in a different way and has different ideas from any of the rest. Eleanor spends two months with first one and then another, until she has stayed with all six; they teach her a good deal, and to them she is a liberal education. Beulah, the originator of the scheme, tries Montessori methods on the child; to Eleanor's perplexity and dismay, Jimmie initiates her into studio life on Washington Square, Margaret's "ten Hutchinsons" show her something of the trials of belonging to a large family, and altogether she has quite a lively time of it before she is sent away to boarding school.

All this first part of the book is entertaining; later, when Eleanor grows up, it dwindles into a conventional cluster of romances, with Eleanor's of course at the centre. It is a bright little story, however, and the co-operative parents are nicely sketched.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY has written a new war book which the Putnams will publish this Fall. Its title will be "First Call," and it will tell the soldier boy just what to expect all the way from the training camp to the trench, and will tell his father and mother what their son is doing each day and what they and others can do to help him. Sergeant Empey's former book, "Over the Top," published in the Spring, has gone through fourteen editions, totaling 100,000 copies.

Dr. Henry van Dyke, who resigned his position as Minister to Holland last Winter in order that he might be free to write what he thought this country ought to be told concerning the German conduct of the war, has completed his book, "Fighting for Peace," and it will be ready for issue by the Scribners in the latter part of October. The whole book is said to be not only an indictment of Germany but an appeal to the American people to stand fast.

Franklin P. Adams, better known as "F. P. A.," who will have a new book, to be called "Weights and Measures," published this month by Doubleday, Page & Co., has gone to Washington to engage in work for the war.

In the recently published reminiscences of Henry B. Rankin, who was a law student in Lincoln's office, it is shown that Lincoln was acquainted with Walt Whitman's poetry and greatly admired it as far back as 1867. Mr. Rankin says that Lincoln's enthusiasm was so great that often "other work was discontinued by us all while he read aloud from Whitman's verses," praised their "virility, freshness, and unique form of expression and even risked a prophecy as to the high place the future would assign to them."

The Houghton Mifflin Company announces that it has postponed until Spring the publication of Norman Hall's "High Adventure," the account of his flying experiences in the battle zone in France. The postponement was made necessary by the serious injuries he received several months ago when he was wounded in his machine 15,000 feet in the air and fell just behind the English lines. He fainted during the descent, then roused just long enough to pull the proper lever and right the machine, and then fainted again as he landed. He is now convalescing, but the weeks he had to spend in the hospital delayed the completion of his manuscript.

Clayton Hamilton's "Problems of the Playwright," which the Holts have ready for immediate issue, has a paper on "The Democratic Insurrection in the Theatre" and another on "What's Wrong with the American Drama?"

Ines Haynes Irwin, whose new novel, "The Lady of Kingdoms," has just been published by the Dorans, says that the idea of the story came to her when she was only seventeen, that for many years it grew and took shape in her mind, but that she did not really begin to write it until the Autumn of 1907. She has carried it about with her and worked on it in New York, Massachusetts, and California, in Italy, France, and England. It has been three times to California and twice to Europe, has crossed the Atlantic four times and the English Channel twice. She had the manuscript with her in London when air raids were frequent and she distributed it in three different places so that some of it would be likely to survive dropped bombs. Crossing the Channel and the Atlantic she slept with the manuscript beside her in a waterproof bag so that she could try to save it in case of disaster by submarine or mine.

Herman Whitaker, author of "Over the Border," has just sailed for France, where he will write war correspondence for a newspaper syndicate.

Harpers have ready for immediate publication "Vanguards of the Plains," by Margaret Hill McCarter, a romance dealing with the heroic days of the old Santa Fé Trail.

"What Never Happened," by "Ropshin," which will be published by Alfred A. Knopf at the end of this week, is a novel of the terrorist side of the Russian movement for freedom. The author was himself a figure in that movement and the view he gives is from the inside. The book attracted much attention in Russia.

Judge Gerard, in his book, "My Four Years in Germany," says of Foreign Minister Kühlmann: "Far more wily than Zimmermann, he will continue to strive to embroil us with Japan and Mexico, but he will not get caught. * * * Beware of the wily Kühlmann!"

George W. Jacobs & Co. announce a new edition in gilt binding of Elisabeth McClellan's "Historic Dress in America." It is in two volumes, covers the subject from 1607 to 1870, and contains nearly 500 illustrations.

Ex-Empress Eugenia, who has given up half her home in England to be used as a hospital, has written a warmly appreciative and commendatory letter to Mrs. Helene Rose, author of "Soldiers' Spoken French," in praise of her system for giving a quick and easily learned basis for conversation in French. Its American publishers, E. P. Dutton & Co., have printed a new edition of the little book once every week since its publication in the Summer.

Longmans, Green & Co. have in train for early publication Volume II. of "Russian Poets and Poems, Englished in the Meters of the Originals with Biographical and Critical Introductions," by Mme. Nadine Jarintzov. This volume will deal with the modern Russian poets, as the first did with the classics.

D. Appleton & Co. will publish this week "A New Handbook of Military Signaling," by Captain Howard A. Giddings, a new edition revised to August, 1917, of the author's earlier volume, "Instruction in Military Signaling."

An authoritative edition of the plays of Arthur Wing Pinero is announced for publication about the middle of next month by E. P. Dutton & Co. Clayton Hamilton has done the work of selecting and editing, and has also contributed an introductio..

Ian Hay, otherwise Captain Beith, although he has just been made Major Beith, has sailed for the United States, and is due to arrive here this week. He will start at once on a long lecture tour.

The Open Court Publishing Company announces the publication of "The Three Men of Judea," by Henry S. Stix, a business man of Milwaukee, whose aim in the book is to create a more cordial and understanding spirit between Jew and Gentile.

Pompeian Beauty Powder

Adheres without showing

Loving Rivals

SMALL wonder that they are rivals, though loving rivals, when Pompeian beauty secrets are shared—secrets that enable the younger to enhance and the older to retain her youthful charm.

Tonight it is the secret of Pompeian BEAUTY Powder; the powder that adheres softly and smoothly to face and neck, imparting an exquisite pearly lustre to the skin. At the same time it captivates the senses with its elusive perfume.

Pompeian BEAUTY Powder is in three shades—white, flesh, and brunette. One of these will blend perfectly with your complexion, giving it a natural, fresh tone that is unusually lasting because of the scientifically chosen ingredients. Price 50 cents the box at the stores.

Pompeian DAY Cream

is a delightfully perfumed vanishing cream that is invaluable as a foundation before applying Pompeian BEAUTY Powder. Pompeian DAY Cream also protects the skin, keeping it smooth and soft and supple. 50 cent jars at the stores.

This vanishing cream should be on every woman's dressing-table along with Pompeian NIGHT Cream, which is used upon retiring, and Pompeian MASSAGE Cream, which is used to exercise the facial muscles. Pompeian BLOOM is a safe rouge, in three shades—light, dark, and medium (the popular shade).

IMAGINE a scene like this on your own lawn! A stage dream? Far from it—this is actually a part of the "front yard" of a small suburban home on Long Island, and the sense of the middle of the forest is the result of landscape strategy, the tactics of adepts in the art of tree planting. And you can command this high art to give romantic, restful, refreshing woodland beauty to your own grounds without a penny of cost for the skill—all you pay for is the trees—at ordinary low prices. And we add our unqualified guarantee that the trees will suit in every way, now and for years to come—or replace them free. Nothing that bears the name of Hicks can stay wrong. And remember that you are not asked to wait long weary years for this forest effect—you can have it immediately, as if with Aladdin's magic wand—within a week after you say the word. # The CHENEY SILKS

When you examine a piece of Cheney Silk what is there that you see — and what that you do not see?

Beauty you see at once—style is recognized in its foremost expression—the honest quality of the good, old-fashioned days is apparent if you are a judge of silk.

What you do not see is all that lies back of the style, the quality, and the beauty, and makes them possible.

That is the Cheney spirit, the generations of skill in silk and its making; the atmosphere of natural beauty surrounding the higher-paid workers and the clean, contented lives they lead; the instinct for styles which chooses the worthy and discards the unworthy, which foresees the coming fashion and remembers the past, which originates the novel and disregards what is merely new without being befitting.

All of this is in every yard and every thread of Cheney Silks—put there with the deliberate purpose of making silks worthy of the name Cheney.

Zantine the all-becoming silk

One more Cheney triumph—the leader of all the Fall and Winter silks. Novel—in the best sense; beautiful—in its wonderful colorings and designs; becoming—in its adaptability to any figure, any complexion, any occasion.

May we send you the interesting booklet, "The Miracle Workers"? It tells about silk making the ideal way.

A Menace

City pavements blamed for many ailments

Within the experience of us all, the sidewalk has changed from a soft to a hard one.

Hard pavements have greatly improved our traffic conditions, but they have proved a serious menace to health and efficiency.

The records of the Hospital for the Crippled in New York show that in the year 1890, just before the advent of stony streets, Arch Trouble claimed 2.6 per cent of the new patients treated. In 1906, the percentage had risen to 18.3, and in 1914 to over 30 per cent.

Save your health

You cannot have the streets unpaved, the sidewalks turned to turf—but you can protect yourself from the pounding jars that shatter nerves and break down health.

O'Sullivan's Heels act as easy, springy cushions between your heels and hardwood floors and pavements. O'Sullivanize your step. Put the spring of these little shock-absorbers under your feet, and walk with the vigorous stride that goes with real success.

When you buy your new shoes, buy them O'Sullivanized. Good shoe dealers now sell latest style shoes with O'Sullivan's Heels already attached.

In black, white or tan; for men, women and children. Insist on O'Sullivan's—avoid the disappointment of substitutes.

SAVE the SEVENTH BABY!

ONE out of every seven babies born in this country dies before it is a year old.

The seventh baby dies whether it be the child of rich or poor. It is not necessarily the slum baby, but the cuddlesome healthy babies aired in the park by white capped nurses; lively dancing babies tumbling on the small town lawn; country babies under the widest and freshest of country skies. One out of every seven is doomed to die this year.

Fifty per cent of these deaths are from preventable causes. More than one hundred thousand babies are wantonly sacrificed each year.

Face these appalling facts: One hundred and forty babies out of every thousand born in America do not live to see their first birthday. Seventy of these babies would be alive if it were not for—what?

Who or what killed them? If their deaths were preventable, who was criminally negligent? What could be done about it?

The more The Delineator asked itself these questions and realized what this awful human waste means to America, the greater grew its conviction that it was somebody's business to do something. We have made it our business. The Delineator has arrayed itself to fight ignorance in relation to babyhood all over the United States, and the battle is on for the life of the Seventh Baby. Never has the need of victory been so great. Peace is hard on little babies. War is many times harder.

Forty per cent of our American babies are born under the care of midwives—most of them filthy in their habits and ignorant and superstitious in their practices. Through ignorant midwifery 15,000 of our mothers die each year from avoidable accidents of childbirth. Who is she—this midwife? What does she do to the Seventh Baby? How many births does she attend in your community? The Delineator knows these things and is going to publish them.

We know that pneumonia and other preventable diseases kill thousands of babies every year. We know that heat and flies and dirt and ignorance are responsible for much of the ghastly wreckage of babyhood. We know that less than one-third of American cities have decent standards of purity for milk.

In certain American cities the death rate of babies is ten times higher than in others. Is your community a fit place for a baby to live? Are you sure? Your baby may be swathed in fine linen, but its safety is measured by the health of the poor waif clothed in rags. The safety of the children of both rich and poor is measured by the condition of health of the whole community.

The Delineator is determining what communities in this country give babies a fair chance. If your community does not, we are going to fight with your help to make it wholesome.

In direct charge of the Seventh Baby Campaign is Dr. Charles E. Terry, the sanitarian who became a national figure by his work as health officer in cleaning up Jacksonville, Florida. Back of Dr. Terry stands an advisory committee composed of Dr. Rupert Blue, Surgeon-General of the United States Public Health Service; Mr. Franz Schneider, Jr., Sanitarian of the Russell Sage Foundation; Professor Selskar M. Gunn, Secretary of the American Public Health Association; Miss Ella Phillips Crandall, Executive Secretary of the National Organization for Public Health Nursing.

We are receiving active co-operation from the foremost experts in the country and from local and national health organizations. Tens of thousands of dollars will be spent in working with men and women throughout the nation to make their communities safe for the babies.

How great our success in fighting for the life of the Seventh Baby depends on you individually—you and your community. We want your interest—your active interest and co-operation. We want you to follow this campaign, to which pages are devoted in each issue of The Delineator. We want you to become a part of this movement. You owe it to your children, your community and your country. The Delineator explains the most practical war service you can render.

Never before has America needed that Seventh Baby so much as now. Have we your support?

O. T. 14.

THE MAYOR STATES HIS CASE

Patriotic Americanism the Chief Issue—Record of Democratic Methods Under Competent Department Heads

By JOHN PURROY MITCHEL,
Mayor of New York.

FOUR years ago I entered the campaign for the Mayoralty of New York City determined to make New York a model of democratic government among the cities of the world. For four years, with my colleagues among the officials of the city and with the aid of the rank and file of city workers, I have striven to fulfill this determination. New York today is admittedly the best-governed city in America, and stands in the forefront of all the cities in the world in the progressive character of service rendered its citizenship.

Four years ago the issue was sharply drawn for the decision of the people of the city. There was before them the single question, Shall New York be given back into the hands of men who for generations have unflinchingly betrayed their promises to the people and prostituted the city to selfish and corrupt purposes, or shall it be set forward to win and maintain the first place among the cities of the world? By an overwhelming vote the people repudiated the pretenses of Tammany and commissioned the present City Government to take up the program that men and women devoted to the city's welfare had long and perseveringly supported.

The issue was then democracy against hypocrisy, and democracy triumphed.

For four years we have sought to justify the faith of the people and to build up a City Government for humane and efficient service. And now the time has come for a choice to be made again.

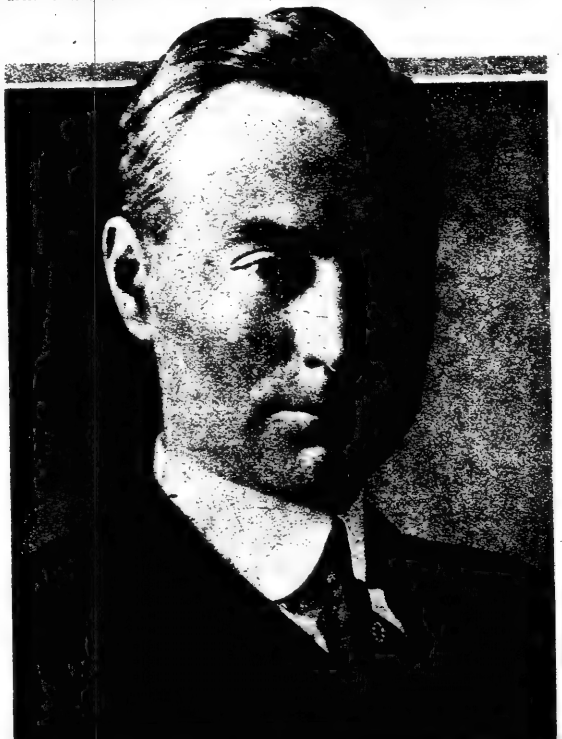
This year the issue is not so simple, but it is doubly crucial. For not only must the voters now decide whether they will uphold the hands of men who have labored in their service for the welfare of the city, but they must decide whether they will maintain New York as the symbol of the democratic spirit of America.

Those opposed to the present administration make no serious challenge of the effectiveness of its work. They attempt to raise false issues by unsupportable charges of wrongdoing on the part of officials, charges which the fire of the campaign will wither to ashes. But in their hearts they are opposed to the City Government because it has responded to the true spirit of New York and registered its voice and vigor on the side of democracy throughout the world.

The insistent importance of the work of city government is not to be obscured by the larger issues in which the nation is now involved. More than ever before is it of vital importance that the public services be maintained on the highest possible plane of efficiency. More than ever is it necessary that the resources of the city be kept safe from the hands of greedy corrupters. More than ever before is it important that every branch and arm of the City Government be fully prepared to respond to the needs of the city, whatever they may be.

But these vital issues, though not obscured by the great issue before the nation today, are caught up and enveloped in it. New York cannot champion, it cannot exemplify, the purposes and character of America unless its Government, in consonance with those purposes and character, is effectively devoted to public welfare. New York's Government cannot be effectively devoted to the welfare of the people of the city unless New York is prepared to play its part in the great work that America has undertaken in the cause of democracy.

This issue cannot be emphasized too strongly. It lies at the very bottom, not merely of the duty of New Yorkers as patriotic citizens of America, but as patriotic citizens of New York. It is idle to build up a city of efficient service in a democracy unless that city is dedicated to democracy. It is fatuous to speak of the needs of democratic life unless the city is unreservedly committed to the cause and principles of democratic life.



The Latest Photograph of Mayor Mitchel. © Brown Bros.

I have entered the campaign for Mayor of New York with no illusions regarding the exacting nature of the work that is heaped upon the Mayor of this city. Personal inclination does not prompt me at all to four years more of this rigorous and difficult responsibility. I am impelled to make the campaign for the continuance of this administration in office because I believe that the forces opposed to it are not only the enemies of efficient city government, but are the enemies of democratic government in New York, in America, and in the world. That is the underlying issue, and that is the basis of the opposition of those who, under the sinister banners of Hearst, Hylan, and the Hohenzollern, are opposed to my re-election.

Let those who are opposed to America's part in the great war vote against the Fusion administration. The Fusion administration, if elected, will bend every effort to make the City Government of the greatest possible service to the nation in every phase of war activity in which the city can effectively and properly function. There must be no mistake regarding this. The record is clear.

From the moment that it became apparent that the freedom of America would be challenged by Germany I, as Mayor of the city, prepared the forces of the city to meet their responsibilities in safeguarding American institutions and the rights of American citizenship. There were threats of riots and disturbances in support of Germany and against American neutrality. There were plottings of evil character on the part of agents of Germany to interfere with the practice and rights of neutrality. There were threats and efforts to promote seditious uprisings to embarrass and obstruct the Government of the United States. There were plots to destroy the city's water supply system, to obstruct communication by the destruction of bridges, and to make the City of New York a shameful place of disloyal and seditious conspiracies.

These were thwarted and suppressed by the vigilance and efficiency of the police, working in co-operation with the Federal authorities, and unhesitatingly responding to the demands of patriotic service without the fear of incurring disfavor which makes the little politicians cringe under the threats and mutterings of the disloyal elements of our population.

A force of twenty thousand citizens was organized by the Police Commissioner to serve as a Home Defense League in the support of the police in emergencies. The Fire Department prepared itself against any contingency of attempted incendiarism inspired by the agents of German intrigue, such as had destroyed property throughout the United States. Encouragement was given to the preparation of men for military srevice, and a number of officials were among the first to submit to training. The

Plenty of Food Saving, But Production Is Short

An Expert in Reclamation Urges That the Government Should Act Now to Increase Next Year's Crops

THE appeal of the Government last Spring that everybody plant, supplemented by the appeal of the present moment that everybody save, still leaves much to be desired in the way of accumulating sufficient food in this country to feed ourselves and our allies.

In spite of widespread response at planting time the harvests of this Fall are less than those of a year ago, and the loyal, enthusiastic efforts of many thousands of amateur gardeners have not produced an aggregate result that can fairly be considered a real economic factor in the solution of the world's food problem. There were late frosts in the Spring and early frosts this Fall, and, for large sections of the country, a dearth of rain in the middle of the growing season when rain was most needed. These weather facts are extenuating circumstances to be set down to the credit of farmers and gardeners.

But there are those who think that the Government can make a better showing next year in the work of inducing food production and that it should begin right now to teach the United States as a conservation of food is no doubt necessary until another harvest. But, in many places in the Southwest, particularly in Arizona and California, Winter crops could be provided on a huge scale. In many sections of that region crop production is hothouse farming out of doors, and food crops can be planted now, on millions of acres, that will mature in the usual time from date of planting; that is, they will mature in the Spring of 1918 instead of in the Fall of 1918. Isn't that worth thinking about and planning for if food is so short the world over, and we must have food to win the war?

"The trouble with the whole situation with reference to food is that billions of dollars are being spent for ships and soldiers, and a tremendous effort is being made to obtain food conservation, without any effort being made, in any large, systematic or organized way, to increase food production in a large way.

"Food production during the coming year can be increased 20 per cent., 40 per cent., 50 per cent.—anything the Government desires to win the war. The Government needs only to decide the proportion of increase it desires and then go at the job with system, money, and an organized plan—which it has not yet done, and so far as known does not contemplate doing.

"The production of food in the United States—measured by its capacity for sustaining human life, labor, and energy—can be doubled within the next twelve months over what it has been in the last twelve months if the Government wishes it done and will go at the job with the same sort of war energy and war expenditure with which it is going at the production of ships and soldiers.

"Ships and soldiers are necessary, but Mr. Hoover tells us over and over again that we cannot win the war without food, and the cry is Save! Save!! Save!!! Why not produce as well as save?

"One of the recent war bills carried $5,355,976,016.93 of direct appropriations and authorized contracts for $2,401,458,393.50 more, a total, in round numbers, of $7,500,000,000. Of this the Ordnance Department of the army gets $695,100,000 for guns and cannon, $225,000,000 more for contract obligations authorized, $663,000,000 cash, and $777,000,000 more for contract obligations authorized for ammunition.

"We are in a war, and a war cannot be fought without guns and cannon and ammunition. But isn't there annarently a forgetfulness on the part of Congress of Mr. Hoover's warning about food? For an expenditure of $1,000,000 within the next six months, beginning right now, the production for 1918 over 1917 can be doubled by utilizing for plant production water that now runs to waste and produces nothing of value.

"Water now wasted is the nation's greatest asset. It is the greatest fertilizer known. One method of doing this is that of Freeman Thorp, about which the Department of Agriculture has published most enthusiastic Government documents. It consists of checking or holding all rainfall on the land by means of a simple system of earth embankments which the farmer can build for himself with his own tools and animals. The conservation of moisture can also be brought about by contour plowing on every farm in the country, big or little, where there is any slope to the land. All this can be done and would be done if the Government would show the farmers the way.

"Then there is irrigation, a device for enriching itself which this country has neglected shamefully. Irrigation makes all the way from one to three hundred dollars difference in the value of an acre's yield. Twenty years ago there were 5,000,000 acres of irrigated land in the West which had been reclaimed solely through small individual effort, or small co-operative effort. The water of every small creek was utilized. These works could all have been constructed by the Government or with Government assistance in a single season.

"Starting this Fall, the land could all have been made available for next Spring's crops. The same thing holds true today as applied to the possibilities of the eastern part of the United States, except that the water supply is a hundred times greater. There is no creek or brook, of the hundreds of thousands from Maine to Florida and from Virginia to Western Missouri, which could not be made to irrigate its bottom lands at an almost nominal cost, and that mostly for teams and labor. Such utilization of this most fertile of our agricultural lands would aggregate millions of acres—many millions. This does not take into account any large projects, and meets the objection that there would be no time to build great dams and canals and supply extensive machinery.

"But how can the farmers be induced to irrigate or plow their slopes so that water will sink into the soil instead of running downhill and going to waste?

"The question is answerable, just as the question How are we going to win the war? is answerable, and with greater certainty. But before any detailed reply could be made one would have to know how much the Government desired an increase in food production, and the amount of each particular food as a part of that increase—wheat, corn, beans, or what not, because the food question is not solved, as a war problem, unless the food is put into condition for shipment anywhere in the world.

"The garden campaign was a splendid thing, but it was not systematized or organized. Food production, ship production, and soldier production, (the latter includes guns and ammunition,) should be treated as of equal importance and systematized and organized with equal thoroughness.

"One thing that ought to be done without fail (and the plan ought to be adopted immediately) is to organize a Farm Service Corps, establish a farm-training correspondence school to teach irrigation farming, both East and West, by mail, and exempt every young farmer from military service who would enlist in this service and carry out detailed plans made by the Food Administration Bureau or Department of Agriculture for whole lessons in intensive farming and in saving moisture. George H. Maxwell, Executive Director of the National Reclamation Association, is one of them. He also thinks that farmers under certain conditions should be exempt from the army draft and that the country should have another draft law enacted between now and Spring to enable the Government to send men not fit for military service into the service of agriculture—to make such service compulsory if necessary.

Wheat Fields Like This Are Numerous on Lands Made Fertile by Irrigation Methods, Which the Government Could Use to Effect Vast Increase in Next Year's Harvest.

"Evidently the strenuous appeals to the farmers made last Spring to plant, plant, and then plant some more," said Mr. Maxwell, "have not produced results—certainly not if, as Mr. Hoover states, the available supplies this harvest year are less than last year.

"Appeals to farmers to plant and produce more cannot be expected to increase production. To expect it is hardly fair to the farmer when exemption is refused to hundreds of thousands of young farmhands, trained soldiers of the soil, and they are being taken from the farms to the military training camps. Their places cannot quickly be filled. It takes years to make skilled farmers and develop their muscles. Again, the farmers, as a class, have for several years been getting high prices for everything they could raise and have crowded production to what each believed to be his limit for that reason.

"And still again, the farmers believe that increased production means lower prices and that when they are asked to increase production they are urged to be patriotic enough to compete with themselves. No other industry is doing that, and the farmer knows it, and acts accordingly.

"As Mr. Hoover says, the most rigid the intensive cultivation of not less than ten acres of land.

"You could enlist two million young farmers in such a service. That would mean 20,000,000 acres of irrigated and intensively cultivated land, its production increased by an average of more than $100 an acre. At $100 an acre its total increased production would be $2,000,000,000 a year—an increase equal to one-fifth of the entire agricultural production of the United States.

"All that such a work would cost the Government would be the expense of an educational propaganda; the expenses of the work of organizing the Farm Service Corps and maintaining the great correspondence school necessary for its operation, to be supplemented by the personal service in the field of one or two farm service experts in every county in the United States. And that is only one of several big and equally practicable plans that can be adopted.

"There are a million acres of land in the San Joaquin Valley, in California, that the Government could take over and pay for with bonds, just as they do in Australia and New Zealand, and plant in beans, with the organized labor of men who have been rejected for military service because their feet were flat or they did not have enough teeth or something was the matter that saved them from risking their lives, but would not unfit them for planting and cultivating beans.

"You would cure those men, make them fit for all the duties of citizenship, and right the wrong now done to men who, as a penalty for having a sound physique, are forced to fight for their country, whether they want to or not, while the unfit are exempted and stay at home to breed and encourage the method of attaining exemption by cultivating physical defects."

The Cheated

By McLandburgh Wilson.

A DIRGE for those who fall
Before they meet the foe,
Who have no chance at all
To deal him blow for blow.

Their crimson sacrifice
Devotion's measure fills,
Yet fate to them denies
Reward of battle thrills.

So weep beside their pall
That death has willed it so;
A dirge for those who fall
Before they meet the foe.

The End of Another World's Series

attempted to bring them back into normal life and under the beneficent influences of home living. The feeble-minded are no longer compelled to live a daily routine of desperate existence, overlooked and neglected, but are under the enlightened treatment and care of skilled specialists, and receive such training as modern, scientific facilities make possible. The whole department is working in a new direction, away from half-effective alleviation of misery and condoling the occasion of it to skilled, humane, scientific helpfulness toward the unfortunate, in an effort to check the increase in the numbers of those requiring institutional care. Commissioner Kingsbury has been beset with every difficulty. He has been obstructed in every conceivable way, criticised, attacked, and thwarted in his efforts, but out of it all he has achieved a magnificent result, which, as the city comes to understand it, apart from the atmosphere of prejudice, misrepresentation, and misguided judgment, will be cherished as one of the surely notable contributions which New York is making to the cause of civilization.

During this administration a State law establishing a widows' pension system has been put into force. Today the City of New York, through a Board of Child Welfare, appointed by the Mayor, is aiding 4,500 widows in keeping their families together, at an annual expenditure of $1,250,000. This work is of incalculable value in preventing misery and building up a sturdy citizenship for the future.

In the Department of Correction at the beginning of my administration there were 5,000 prisoners, living in iniquity, idleness, and breeding out of their own misery and delinquency still greater misery and delinquency. Disease, sloth, immorality, insubordination, these were the outstanding conditions prevailing in the Department of Correction when Commissioner Katharine B. Davis took hold, in 1914. Now the Department of Correction is co-ordinated with a Board of Parole, which deals with each individual prisoner on his merits and accords him, while under the city's control, treatment which will best fit him for discharge back into community life. The creation of this board is a result of the work that Dr. Davis did in the department. The carrying out of her program by the present Commissioner of Correction, Mr. Lewis, has made it possible to maintain the most effective relations between the administration of corrective measures in the Department of Correction and the prescription of treatment by the Board of Parole.

The physical reconstruction of the Department of Correction, which is an incident to its administrative replanning, has only begun, and must be completed without the interference of politicians and the underworld, who, combined, have heretofore had too much influence in the penal institutions of the city. The humane impulses of the people of the City of New York, and their selfish interests as well, make the continuance of the present policy of correction administration an imperative civic obligation.

During my administration, as a result of the work of the Health Department, long perhaps the most efficient department of the City Government, and attributable as well to the general progress of sanitation and hygienic living, the death rate of the city has decreased from 14.2 per 1,000 population in 1913 to 13.89 per 1,000 in 1916. Infant mortality has been lowered from 102 per 1,000 births in 1913 to 93 per 1,000 births in 1916, meaning an annual saving in lives of 1,233 in 1916, as against 1914. A program of decentralized health administration is under way, which aims to provide for every community all the facilities of a complete Health Department, supported and supervised by special expert staffs at headquarters. Standards established under the administration of Commissioner Goldwater during 1914 and 1915 have since guided the department, and will be maintained if Fusion is kept in office.

Emory R. Buckner, Mayor Mitchel's Campaign Manager.

Commissioner Adamson, in the Fire Department, has made a record which entitles him to the united support of the people of the city, who as business men or as property owners appreciate the significance of the work accomplished in the reduction of fire losses, or as workers in factories who have been protected by vigorous enforcement of the safety laws of the Bureau of Fire Prevention.

The total fire loss for the first three years of this administration was $22,721,233; for the three years preceding my term as Mayor the loss was $29,008,383. This is a reduction to our credit of $6,287,150, or 21 per cent., and means a saving to the city in fire losses of an average of more than two million dollars a year. Also there were 1,647 less fires in the first three years of my administration than there were in the three years immediately preceding.

This is not the result of providential dispensation, but has been brought about by educational work and painstaking, persistent enforcement of every provision of the law which looks to the conservation of life and property from destruction by fire.

There is not space nor need for reviewing the work of all departments of the City Government, some more efficient than others, some of more vital consequence to the city. In each of them an effort has been made to achieve practical, constructive results, and in each one of them such results have been in greater or less measure achieved. There have been disappointments, there have been failures, there have been obstacles which could not be surmounted, but a spirit of persistence and skill, sharpened by experience, will enable present officials vastly to increase the progress of their departments in a second term of service.

My own belief in the importance of continuity of service in city government is well supported by the record of my administration. Rarely, if ever before, have so large a group of men held office continuously for four years in the City Government. Having selected heads of departments for reasons of efficiency, I retained them in office wherever it was possible to do so, in order that they might progressively increase their effectiveness through actual wrestling with the problems of administration.

My policy has been to give the fullest authority to department heads once a program of work was laid down and agreed upon. Periodical conferences have enabled me to keep in touch with the progress made. That is what I conceive to be the function of a Chief Executive. The policy that I have pursued in regard to the selection and retention of competent men during these four years will be a fundamental part of my administrative program in the future.

There are aspects of the work of city government which occasion me considerable regret. Progress has not been as easy as I had hoped it would be. But I find encouragement in this fact, that where progress has not been achieved with the rapidity and ease which we had hoped for, it has been due to causes which are easily understood and which are remediable. A chief embarrassment has been the lack of authority to deal with problems of organization and administration.

The city is bound from top to bottom by legislative enactment. The Legislature has in notable instances co-operated effectively in liberating the city for the exercise of new powers, but in other respects efforts to achieve better organization have been obstructed by failure of legislative co-operation. Home rule must come if the city is to be thoroughly well governed in accordance with its changing and growing needs. Until home rule does come, disappointments will confront taxpayers who strive for an efficient and logical ordering of the city's administrative machinery.

As I look over the record of the City Government in the last four years I find most satisfaction in the thought that never before have the energies and resources of the City Government been so fully devoted to the service of the human needs of the people of the city. I have cited instances in the Health, Charities, and Correction Departments. There comes to mind the work of the city in relation to the unemployment question in 1914, resulting in the establishment of an employment bureau. There is the effort, by no means yet successful, but now promising success, for the establishment of a suitable and effective system of food distribution. There is the city's effort to adjust industrial disputes and to prevent the waste and hardships of prolonged industrial strife.

These are but significant promises of what a city government may be able to accomplish in normal times under effective leadership when conducted unreservedly in the interests of the community.

The Curse and the Hope of America's "Holy War"

IS there any spectacle more terrible than that a Christian nation should be proud of the desolation which it has produced, (witness the legend on the ruins of France, "Do not curse; just wonder,") and be morally blind to its own shame and to the abhorrence which it has awakened in the rest of the civilized world? Out of this same national arrogance and selfishness has grown Germany's utter inability to read any other people aright.

But it should be remembered at the same time that the progress of events in this war is bringing out with similar increasing clearness all the inconsistencies of the Allies. Wherever there has been unfair treatment of other races; wherever there has been failure in a true democracy, there the Allies too are forced to face a new challenge. Ireland and India and Persia and Finland and the Balkans and Madagascar, our own treatment of colored races, and unwarranted Italian ambitions, all demand to be faced. It is a day of world judgment. "There is nothing covered up, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known." And such a day of judgment is at the same time a day of hope.

Nor are we to leave out of consideration as a reason for hope the lasting value of the extensive peace propaganda which preceded the war. That has undoubtedly opened the eyes of men, as they have never been opened before, to the barbaric brutality, to the terrible and manifold cost of war, and to the challenge which it brings to all rational civilization and to every ideal interest. At best this war must be felt to be—what some one has declared it—"the savagery of civilization on the march to save the world from the civilization of savagery." However short-sighted some pacifists may be, the great essentials of the peace propaganda were sound, and they ought to help all the nations, and America especially, to hate war, to keep free from war madness, to retain sense of proportion, and to cherish a deep care for a better civilization than the world yet knows. This actual letter of a young English aviator to a German mother brings home to one the awful cross-purposes in which men are involved in war, and steels our souls anew to the determination that war shall cease:

> It's your son. I know you can't forgive me, for I killed him. But I want you to know he didn't suffer. The end came quickly. He was very brave. He must also have been very good. He had your picture in his pocket. I am sending it back, though I should like to keep it. I suppose I am his enemy, yet I don't feel so at all. I'd give my life to have him back. I didn't think of him or you when I shot at his machine. He was an enemy spying out our men. I couldn't let him get back to tell his news. It meant death to our men. • • • My mother died when I was quite a little boy. But I know what she would have felt if I had been killed. War isn't fair to women. God! how I wish it were over. It is a nightmare. • • •
> For the first time, I'm almost glad my mother isn't living. She could not have borne what I have done. My own heart is heavy. I felt it was my duty. Yet now when I see your son lifeless before me and hold your picture in my hand, it seems all wrong. The world is dark. O Mother, be my mother just a little, too, and tell me what to do.—HUGH.

It is quite possible to believe that a nation must take its part in this war, and still to believe that war is an essentially evil thing. It is an English publicist who says:

> I avow myself an extreme pacifist! I do not merely want to end this war. I want to nail down war in its coffin. Modern war is an intolerable thing. • • • It is disaster. It may be a necessary disaster. • • • but for all that I insist it remains waste, disorder, disaster.

To these words a thoughtful American has added:

> It is in hearty accord with the spirit of this statement of Wells that some pacifists enter this war, not exultant, buoyantly shouting for our country's flag, but soberly, consecrated to a magnificent charge, but nevertheless humiliated, because war has come only as an accusation, a great indictment against us all, and America especially, that would-be Republic of Man, because we have not made manifest quickly enough our high destiny among the nations, have not realized to the limit even of today's human capacity the possibilities of our consecrated democracy.

In that speaks a true pacifism that faces the facts on both sides; that sees both the terror of war, and the still greater terror of an ignoble surrender of the fruits of all Christian civilization.

It is also a ground for hope in the present crisis that the issues are seen to be at bottom so thoroughly moral and religious and even Christian. While this fact itself adds to the gravity of the crisis, it at the same time manifestly increases its significance. Here is no mere blind brute struggle. We need not believe "that a majority of civilized mankind is fighting and sacrificing, all without reason and significance for human progress." On the contrary, as we have seen, interests of the highest conceivable order are involved in this war; so involved that it is neither travesty nor exaggeration to call this war on the part of America a truly holy war.

MAYOR MITCHEL STATES HIS CASE

Mayor organized a committee on national defense to study the problems of military preparation and to make the Government and citizenship of New York ready for effective co-operation if the need for war measures should arise.

When war was declared the City Government encouraged the voicing, throughout the schools, of the high character and spirit of America's entrance into the war and the mission that she had set out to accomplish. When conferences with allied representatives took place, the City Government of New York devoted its energies to according a proper welcome and the most cordial hospitality to the distinguished visitors who came to discuss with our National Government a program of co-operation in the prosecution of the war.

By these demonstrations the City Government, co-operating with civic bodies and special committees named by the Mayor, made it clear to the enemy as well as to the allied nations that the metropolis of America had responded with understanding and determination to America's call to arms for the cause of democracy.

The City Government's response to the Liberty Loan appeal, and the organization of committees to provide war relief and to co-operate in other work of preparation, are merely tokens of the part that New York should play in the war, and will continue to play with unflagging vigor if I am re-elected Mayor.

If New York devotes herself unreservedly to the nation's cause in this war, it will help in the consummation of a just peace, the fruits of which will enrich the life and spirit of the city and make possible its further advancement along the paths of civilization. Those who would make a mere tool of the City Government in order to voice their dissent from a policy which is America's policy will not hasten the time of peace, but will give strength to the enemy and add life to this most terrible of wars. I am for peace, but a peace which will perpetuate the principles of democracy and will save untainted and unimpaired the spirit and principles of American life.

Those who seek to capitalize the disloyalty or misunderstanding of any of the citizens of New York for the furtherance of their own political purposes should be overwhelmingly repudiated by the voters of the city, and among those who join in this repudiation should be men whose natural sympathies, by reason of birth or parentage, are in normal times with the Germanic peoples, but whose patriotism and enlightenment now make them truly loyal and devoted citizens of America. These men, substantial in character and fearless believers in the right, will support efficient and progressive city government in New York City as loyally and unhesitatingly as they are supporting the Government and nation to which they owe their allegiance.

A cardinal reason for keeping the present administration in office is that, at this critical time, the great departments of the city may not be taken out of the control of trained and experienced men. Pre-eminently there should be no change in the policy and leadership of the Police Department. Commissioner Woods would not and could not be kept by a Tammany administration, for no Tammany Mayor could live without meddling in police administration. Mr. Woods's four years' record is one of remarkable productiveness in constructive results. His work has been notably free from mistakes. The almost unbelievable and not to be hoped for has been achieved. Never before have four years passed in the city's history without a police scandal of serious proportions.

The spirit of the Police Department is now of such a character as to make scandals practically impossible. The men themselves are the best guardians of the integrity and loyalty of the force. Though there will always, no doubt, be backsliders among so large a body of men there will always, no doubt, be mistakes of judgment and even stupid mistakes of method and execution, as in the Cruger case, but the remarkable thing is that, contrasted with conditions that existed in the past, the administration of New York's Police Department is now completely free from the suspicion of vicious purpose or wrongful intent. This fact is both the cause and the result of the fine work the department has done. The Mayor's office has not interfered with the details of police administration nor permitted any outside molestation of the Commissioner for personal or political reasons.

There has been one task before the Commissioner, one concern for his thought and energies, namely, to organize the force for effective work and to keep it working effectively. The Commissioner has not been asked to give a thought to any problem not strictly related to police work, though the special conditions prevailing practically throughout his administration almost doubled the work of the department. He has not been subjected to the pressure of influence or interference of any character. The men on the force know this and have responded to it. A different view of the problem of the policing of a great city has been developed. It is now understood that careful training must be given to members of the force, in order that they may do their work effectively. The police school has been developed and extended. It has brought under its influence not only the new members of the force, but the older members who had not come into active touch with the new purposes and policy of the department.

The results of all these changes are shown conclusively in the record of the Police Department in the last four years. The city has not forgotten that prior to this administration the newspapers, day after day, contained accounts of the evil exploits of gangs of hoodlums who infested the city. So-called "crime waves" occurred over and over again, with the police apparently powerless to check them. There was no feeling of security in the effectiveness of police work, and there was no assurance that the department was making steady progress against the forces of crime and evil in the city. Prostitution flaunted itself in the streets. The only remedy for the constant confusion and disappointment that prevailed respecting police matters seemed to be repeated changes in the Commissionership, in the hope that each new incumbent might achieve what his predecessor had failed to do.

Practically from the start of this present administration, one man has been in charge of police work. If his leadership has been fruitful during these years, it will bear greater fruit in the years to come if the city is wise enough and aroused enough to prevent a return of the Police Department to a control which has never in its history succeeded in administering the department with honesty and efficiency. Tammany must not recapture the Police Department.

If this administration is supplanted with a Tammany administration, members of the Board of Estimate who have acquired exceptional skill and capacity in the administration of the finances of the city will go out of office. Controller Prendergast and President Pounds of Brooklyn are unquestionably two of the ablest administrators that have ever sat in the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. They have given their special thought and constant effort to the proper business administration of the city.

William A. Prendergast, Fusion Candidate for Re-election as Controller.

Robert Adamson, Fusion Candidate for President of the Board of Aldermen.

Under Controller Prendergast's leadership, an entire reordering of the city's financial business practices has taken place. His complete knowledge of the city's fiscal problems, the range of his experience and observation, his courage, integrity, and analytical capacity have combined to make him an exceptional public servant and unqualifiedly the best Controller that New York City has ever had. In many respects and chiefly with regard to all the complicated problems of city finance, the Controller is the business manager of the city. What an absurd thing for the community even to contemplate dispensing with the service of a man, in the office of Controller, of rare experience and exceptional qualifications! As the campaign progresses, the Controller, however, will speak for himself, and very effectively, too.

The urgent problems of the City Government are the problems of human life and welfare. The city as an institution is a great human enterprise engaged upon promoting the happiness, well-being, and efficiency of its citizens. But the ultimate aims of city government and its immediate, everyday work depend for their successful achievement on the efficiency of the city's organization and the use of its funds. The financial problem, therefore, is of pre-eminent importance in the conduct of city business. It was because of our desire to give to the city the fullest returns for its expenditures and to make possible the enlargement of its social activities without unjust burdening of taxpayers that the Fusion administration made it the first part of its program to set its financial organization in order.

The great, staggering fact with which we were confronted at the beginning of our administration was that there had been heaped up interest and sinking fund charges on the city debt of more than $50,000,000 a year. This stood in the way of expansion of all beneficent activities. More schools mean more funds; better institutional facilities for prisoners and the city's charitable wards mean more funds. To obtain funds money must be raised by taxation or borrowing. The limit of taxation was close upon us, and practically no margin was left of the city's borrowing capacity. We attempted economies, and so far as the structure of the city, prescribed in the laws and regulations which are laid down at Albany, permitted, provable progress has been made.

The facts regarding the business reorganization of the city have been told repeatedly. Budget expenditures were reduced; economies insisted upon. But offsetting all that could be done to effect economies was a peremptory State tax decreed by the Legislature as necessary for the financing of State enterprises. And always there was the inescapable burden of debt charges for all the great physical equipment of the city which had been provided during the last twenty-five years. It was a fortunate circumstance that the emergency financing of the city at the beginning of the war raised sharply the question of the city's improvident fiscal course.

As a result, the "pay-as-you-go" policy was adopted, and now the city, each year, by paying for its improvements and extensions out of current revenues, and reserving its borrowing capacity only for enterprises which produce revenue, is steadily emerging out of the wilderness of debt in which we found it in 1914.

Business administration has not been completely achieved in the City Government. There are numerous opportunities for improvement remaining, but such opportunities can be best capitalized if officials confronted with them are equipped with the purpose and experience to deal with them aggressively. It is true that the city is not merely a great business corporation, as it is often described, but it must conduct its business in the manner of a great corporation, if its human and social services are to be effectively rendered. The record of the present City Government is evidence of a continued effort to implant in city affairs the standards of careful and considerate management that are insisted upon in private business administration. This progress can only be made under the leadership of a Mayor and a Board of Estimate and Apportionment working unitedly with a common purpose and common zeal.

To put an end to Fusion government will mean an overthrow of the policy which has been established in the treatment of the city's delinquents and charitable wards. The progress made in the Departments of Correction and Charities seems to me to be one of the most significant things that have happened in any American city in recent years. We found the Department of Charities conducted as a semi-private institution, in mystery and obscurity. We brought to public attention every problem which the department faced in attempting humane, considerate, and effective service to its wards.

Instead of merely lamenting the existence of a vast army of dependent children, or preening ourselves over the care that they receive in asylums, we have

In the Busiest American Training Camp

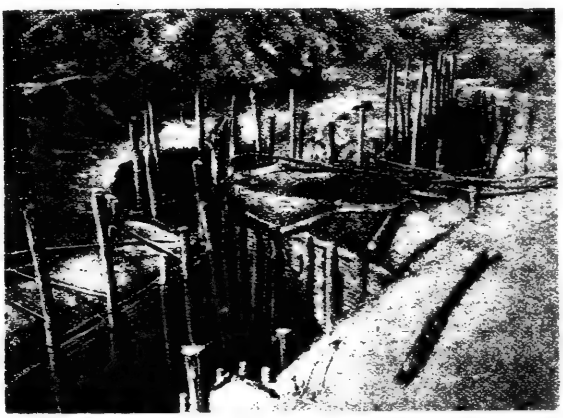
Conditions of the Battle Front Reproduced for 10,000 Marines at Quantico, Va.— They Dig Real Trenches and Bombproof Cellars

A SHORT ride out of Washington, at a little Virginia flag station which for generations has been listed as "Quantico," is situated the busiest war training camp in the United States, where more than 10,000 veterans—there is not a "rookie" in the lot—are training night and day. This is the only advanced war training camp for mobile troops in the United States, where the fighting men of the United States Marines receive final training before the departure overseas for the expert instruction that they will get behind the French battle lines.

A few weeks ago Quantico was a village, with a Post Office, a water tank, half a dozen stores, a church or two, and about 200 inhabitants. And then came the "Soldiers of the Sea," the trim, determined fighters who alone have a right to sing the hymn which tells how in days that are past they have fought:

From the Halls of Montezuma,
To the shores of Tripoli.



The Real Thing in Trenches at Marines' Camp.

Today everything is changed. Quantico is a city of more than 11,000 persons. The United States Marines erected 900 cantonment buildings and proceeded to lay out one of the finest training camps in the world—certainly the finest of its kind in America. Their business in camp is a post-graduate course in the actual work of war.

The United States marines are original in many ways, but wise enough to take a tip from fellows who know more than they. They sent their officers to Europe, and now they are teaching sea-soldiers the up-to-date methods of warfare. Besides, they have a few ideas of their own—a brand-new type of machine gun carriage and movable trenches for practice are inventions to which they point. Their cantonment spreads out and literally absorbs the town. Passengers on the trams get a glimpse of what appears to be a new oil camp, and instinctively look for derricks. In daylight hours one may see no marines about; they are busy elsewhere, in trenches, hiking, manoeuvring on the parade ground, drilling, working, doing something—that is the sea-soldiers' gospel.

It is less than a mile from the cantonment buildings to the trenches. The ground is a maze of trenches, dugouts, and bombproof cellars, patterned closely after the European system. Long tunnels and passages crisscross the main trenches and form communications, planned by an officer who learned the business abroad. Gun emplacements, screened by camouflage, also are a part of the defensive work, together with wire entanglements.

These trenches of course, will never be completed. Every day a regiment digs more dugouts, strings more wire, adds a fresh hundred yards or so of trench to those already completed. The real work of the trenches is digging them, as many a back-weary marine can testify. The work of defending them is another proposition, up to the man behind the gun, whether he be machine gunner, rifleman, or artilleryman.

Brig. Gen. Lejeune of the Marines.

At Quantico they react to the weapon of the moment. Only a few months ago the Mills grenade was the popular weapon—now it's the bayonet. The primitive, two-edged weapon has gained importance rapidly, and all instructors, foreign and American, are developing their fighters into good bayonet men. The marines have four distinct drills with the bayonet. First, the regular bayonet exercise, to which they have added several new thrusts, learned from the English; another in opposition to stuffed dummies, one against animated dummies, and contests against living opponents. The old bayonet exercise has not been discarded, but has been improved by new thrusts. Among these is the upward thrust, delivered from the floor of the trench against the enemy, a downward thrust against a prone object, and a backward pull to dislodge the bayonet.

Probably the nearest approach to actual fighting is developed by the "duel." Each man, padded, masked, and wearing gauntlets, is equipped with a rifle, fitted with a rubber bayonet tipped with a button. The opponents place themselves about forty yards apart and charge. This calls for strength, skill, and aggressiveness, and lively set-tos result. A touch with the button-point on any part of the body is considered a "hit."

To practice grenade throwing, the marines have invented movable trenches. These are in sections, about the width of an ordinary trench, constructed of pine boards, with a high parapet on the forward side over which the grenade must be thrown. A dummy trench is placed seventy-five feet away to represent enemy trenches or shell holes. From inside these stalls, as they are called, grenadiers throw into the opposite trench—at least, that is the objective.

The artillery battalions have caterpillar tractors to haul their three-inch pieces. When they go for practice to a nearby gully the tractors lead the way, with a long string of guns trailing behind. Officers select the objective, make brief computations with the assistance of the range finder, give the gun pointers the calculation, and the marines fire. Shrapnel sends up clouds of dust and the hills echo the noise of battle that can be heard in Fredericksburg, several miles away. The smaller guns are placed on carriages, drawn by two men. There are ten men to a gun crew, and four guns to a platoon. They have actual firing practice, and frequently make hard marches over a rugged countryside.

Every company has its signal squad, and during the day hills are dotted with tiny figures, waving flag messages from point to point. At night the Ardois (flashlight) system of signaling is practiced. In addition, there are field radio and telephone squads.

The officer who directs the work at Quantico is Brig. Gen. John Archer Lejeune, who in the twenty-nine years he has been an officer of the corps has seen the hardest kind of duty in every part of the world. He commanded the marines who were sent ashore during the Panama revolution in 1903, which separated Panama from Colombia and made possible the construction of the great canal. He commanded one of the first marine battalions landed in Cuba during the Spanish war, and participated in the fighting at Vera Cruz in April, 1914. General Lejeune was graduated from Annapolis and the Army War College, is a native of Louisiana, and fifty years of age.

Russians Partial to American and English Books

AMERICAN writers, from Cooper and Irving to Richard Harding Davis and William Dean Howells, are well known to intelligent Russians. Nearly all are read, many are admired, and a few are especially appreciated. Longfellow's "Hiawatha" still retains its great popularity, where neither Bryant nor Whittier ever aroused any particular enthusiasm. "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table" is not unknown to the Russian book lover, while a wide circle of readers has been held spellbound by the wonder tales of Edgar Allan Poe.

Hardly any language can boast of a better complete translation of Poe's works than is available in Russian, asserts David A. Modell in the Russian Review, adding that even more generally read has been the sentimental "Uncle Tom's Cabin," over which floods of tears have been shed in the land of the Slavs.

"That Russians should find both Emerson and Walt Whitman much to their liking," Mr. Modell continues, "is perhaps not very surprising, in view of their noted moral earnestness and intensely democratic spirit. But that such writers as Mark Twain and Jerome K. Jerome should be very popular with them bespeakes a greater degree of optimism and a broader sense of humor than the Russians are generally credited with. Their extreme catholicjty of taste is further demonstrated by a considerable fondness for such diverse works as 'Walden,' 'The Scarlet Letter,' 'The Crisis,' 'The House of Mirth,' 'The Jungle,' and 'The Call of the Wild.' The authors of the last two are particular favorites with Russian readers, while Hawthorne is gradually coming to his own among them."

Every reading Russian is as well acquainted with the best works of Dickens, Thackeray, George Eliot, Stevenson, Thomas Hardy, Du Maurier, and even George Meredith—not to mention Jane Austen, Mrs. Gaskell, and Charlotte Brontë—as the average well-read Englishman, according to the critic. Dickens has been Russia's favorite Victorian novelist. Mr. Modell continues:

"What especially endeared the author of 'David Copperfield' to Slavonic readers—he was most charmingly translated for the Russians and has been accepted by them from the very first as one of their own—was his truly Christian sympathy for the lowly and downtrodden, for the weak and the young. That Dickens should have been overestimated in Russia is not very surprising, in view of other overestimates, English as well as foreign. He has been called 'The English Gogol' there—disparagingly to the Russian, I think—while Tolstoy, with characteristic recklessness, declared him the greatest writer of the nineteenth century.

"Of his great and far-reaching influence on Russian writers, however, there can be no doubt. The great Dostoievsky, for instance, owed quite as much to Dickens as to Gogol, having been foreshadowed quite as clearly by the Russian's 'The Great-Coat' as by the Englishman's 'Little Dorrit' and 'Dombey and Son.' Tolstoy's debt to Dickens was probably as great as Dostoievsky's—possibly greater."

Concluding his study of foreign influence in Russian literature, the writer says:

"Every modern literature has had its foreign masters—has absorbed and assimilated such foreign elements as best promoted its own peculiar development. Absolute independence in literature is as impossible, seemingly, as in the human relations with which it is concerned. Interdependence, in other words, is the rule here as in everything else dealing with the life of man."

Uses of "Moral Passion" in War

Deep Emotions Necessary in Arousing Civilized World Against Prussian Outrages—Difference Between Honest and Ignoble Passions of the Combatants

By George Trumbull Ladd,
Professor Emeritus of Philosophy, Yale University.

IN describing Ulysses as the typically admirable warrior, Homer tells us how he "puts might into his rage" and "lets fierce wrath breathe through his nostrils"; and the ancient Scandinavian warrior boasts: "I have walked with bloody brand and whistling spear."

Such emotions as these are difficult for the man to feel who cowers through the night in his narrow dugout, or stands shivering in the trench knee deep in ice water and mud. But after he has "gone over the top," and he is in hand-to-hand conflict with baynet and bomb, many combatants describe their sensations as a sort of "seeing red" and fighting with a blind fury that is devoid of either pity or fear. On the other hand, during the civil war we read the doubtless authentic story of the Methodist parson who, being a crack shot, always coolly selected his man, but before he pulled the trigger prayed devoutly: "May God have mercy on your soul." And that brave and pious soldier, Major Whittle, told the writer that more than once, when charging across a field from which the enemy had just been driven, he had stooped for an instant over a dying Confederate soldier to whisper words of consolation in his ear, or take a message from his lips.

But such experiences of feeling as these are individual and more or less dependent on occasion, circumstances, and temperament. The same thing is not true of the emotions which arouse the will and support the determination of whole nations in a great conflict like that which is involving the whole civilized, and a large part of the uncivilized, world at the present time.

All peoples, when waging prolonged war, are liable to be subject to recurrent waves of fear and hope, of exultation at success achieved and the prospect of speedy final victory, and of disappointment perhaps sinking down close to the borders of despair. They are also pretty sure to take varying views of the perfect justice of their own cause, and also of the tolerance which ought to be shown to the enemy in case they become able to offer from the standpoint of an admitted superiority, not to say dictate, the terms of peace. So, too, the feelings and resolves of Government, even if it does not become essentially changed during the progress of the war, and of the majority of the people, especially where the people in any real and effective way control the Government, may be very much embarrassed and even greatly modified by a persistent recalcitrant minority.

In these important respects both sides in the present conflict are subject to the same influences from the changing or more permanent character of their emotions. Besides this kind of parity, let it be conceded in addition that, with the exception of the Turks, the greater nations on both sides have hitherto had the fidelity and courage of their soldiers enflamed and supported to a commendable extent, perhaps to a larger extent than in any great war before, by the emotions of patriotism and the intention to do their duty by their country, as they understood that duty.

But after we have made all these admissions, we cannot fail to discern, if we see at all truly, that there are very great differences in the morality of the motives with which the Governments and press of the two sides have fed the passions of their respective peoples. In saying this we do not overlook or minimize the effect which the course of the Teutonic Allies has had upon the Entente Allies in forcing them, in opposition or contravention of their normal and cherished attitudes in such matters, into states of emotional excitement similar to their own.

There is no doubt, however, that Germany has fed her people, and her allies, and the whole world of would-be neutral nations, with the ignoble passions of suspicion, jealousy, greed, hatred, conscienceless and gratuitous and horrid cruelty, by an unbroken system of monstrous lies. None of the peoples who are now her confederated enemies has been guilty of the same criminal motives to anything like the same extent, while the methods of the soldiery of the Teutonic Allies in carrying on the war will not bear comparison with those of the British, French, Italian, and Japanese soldiers in any notable moral aspect whatsoever.

Among the nations who have now entered the war against Germany there is none entitled to claim a clearer and more disinterested conscience, as respects its motives and its spirit, than our own. We have no need and no desire for more territory; we have more than enough to care for well already. We had no active jealousy of the growth of German commerce; we were not notably peeved at the increasing number of things stamped "Made in Germany." We are not even suitably restive under our dependence on Germany for aniline dyes, potash, and various kinds of drugs. We do not, however, intend to let that dependence remain.

The charges that the greed of our ammunition makers drove us into the war, or that we were beguiled and seduced there by our subserviency to English influence, are as absurd as those brought for its seeming indifference to danger, its seeming slowness in comprehending the issue, and in making preparation to meet it. But we have now gone into the war out of motives, and in a spirit, of which we need not be ashamed. Thousands of our best young men have entered the army and the navy and the ambulance and flying corps, with a clear-eyed vision of the reason why, and a solemn sense of duties to be done and hardships to be borne.

But have we met all our needs in doing all these things on the whole so promptly and so well? By no means so. What, then, do we need more as a matter of immediate and pressing need? We need a large accession of moral passion, of the right kind and degree of such passion. And this, not only because it is only this which incites and supports the right good-will to fight, but also because it is this which chiefly justifies and sustains the hope and prospect of the final victory, to be followed by a lasting and satisfactory peace. The nations which hold out in this kind of passion are surest in the end to win. Already the Teutonic allies seem on the eve of internal dissensions; and it is daily becoming more evident that they hate and fear one another. But the Entente Allies, and the more since we have joined them, are constantly becoming more united in the feelings of friendship and in their passionate determination to drive from the face of the earth the abominable system of government which has suffused and transformed the peoples whom it dominates at the present time.

Let us specify particulars. We need a great accession to the intensity, and a marked improvement to the quality, of the moral passion of patriotism. I do not mean patriotism of the "whoop-it-up-for-Old-Glory" fashion, or the sort that warms the heart of the candidate for re-election in his stumping campaign. The moral passion of patriotism is not inconsistent with feelings of shame and contrition for the many failures and blunders and crimes of the nation; on the contrary, it makes these feelings a matter of moral obligation. It may burn fiercely in the heart of the man who, like my missionary friend, returned to his life-work in China, declaring with sadness that America had become "a paradise of fools."

But, indeed, what we have suffered at the hands of the Germans demands and justifies far different sentiments and activities. They have insulted the nation in the person of its Ambassador; they have deliberately planned the invasion of our territory, and their arrogant and ruffianly war lord, and the party of his choosing, have threatened to "deal with us" after their pattern in dealing with Denmark, Austria, France, and little Belgium, when their day of opportunity was ripe and their power grown sufficient; they have placed explosives in our shipping and under our bridges; they have organized strikes in our factories and mines; they have filled the land with rascally spies and organizations intended to corrupt and render disloyal our citizens; they have endeavored to embroil us in secret suspicion and hatred and outbreaking strife with other friendly nations, and they have cruelly murdered hundreds of our people, including women and children. They have conducted these things through their official representatives, while as yet we were at peace with them. And all their apologies and protests of good-will have been characterized, so far as they had Governmental authority, by the spirit of hypocrisy and falsehood.

Now, all these things are intolerable,

The portion of an American flag (above) was found by the Crocker Land Expedition in a cairn on the highest of the three summits at Cape Thomas Hubbard, in the Arctic, and is now on view at the American Museum of Natural History here. In these days, when Americans feel an intenser patriotism at sight of the flag, we can appreciate the thrill that came to the leader of the Crocker Land Expedition when he found the red, white, and blue in the distant north.

The silk flag, (below,) now in the United States National Capital, was made for Admiral Peary by his wife and carried on the expedition which reached the North Pole. Peary cached portions cut from it at different places: Nos. 1 and 2 at Cape Morris Jesup, 3 at Cape Thomas Hubbard, 4 at Cape Columbia, 5 at Peary's "Farthest North" at 87° 6', and 6, the long diagonal strip, on the ice at the North Pole. The portion brought back by the Crocker Land Expedition is No. 3, from the upper middle section; a complete American flag was left in its place.

answer we make to our own secret selves and to our God. It is a solemn task and must be performed as conscientiously as we teach the rules of arithmetic.

It is much that is required of the teacher beyond that which is named in the contract. But, as much as is required, we must constantly remember the sacrifices of those who have had to leave their homes, their business, their ambitions, for a pittance. And, besides, we must remember many are offering their lives.

The teachers, every one of whom has taken the oath of office as a loyal servant of the State, must become the living voice of the Government. In France I saw posted everywhere on the bulletin boards, in city and village, the most recent of the many proclamations and decrees of the central and local Governments of France.

Here were the words of advice, or warning, or appeal, or command. And these proclamations, I was told, were read and expounded to the children and villagers alike by the school teachers. In like manner, teachers are chosen to be the voice of our Government, national and State. The words of the President, the appeals of the Council of National Defense, the needs of the Red Cross, must reach every ear in the Republic, and teachers as no one else can see that directly, or through the children, every home in the community is reached.

The second duty of the schools, as I have said, is action; participation in war work, not only for the sake of the war but for the sake of the schools as well. The accomplishment of this duty depends on the wholehearted co-operation of every man, woman, and child in the State and in the nation. From the Government official to the tiniest child in the kindergarten, each American must do his share. We must act and make our contribution to the various agencies now mobilized in support of our armies in the field. And the schools have an unequaled opportunity to be the voice of the Government reaching into every home.

Much has been done in the schools of New York. Food conservation has been practically demonstrated all over the State; farm cadets have been organized and trained in the work of food production, (nearly 20,000 have already reported as giving such service;) vocational schools have adapted much of their work to the nation's need. Red Cross work has been introduced into the curriculum of many schools; provision has been made for junior membership of school children in the National Red Cross and the organization of a Red Cross Junior Chapter wherever there is a school. The Red Cross officials in Washington have accepted as a working basis for a national committee of the American Red Cross on junior membership and school activities the plan submitted by the New York State Education Department, which was the outgrowth of what we did in this State six weeks before the declaration of war.

In the State of New York, alone, are enrolled in public schools nearly 2,000,000 pupils, of whom 50,000 are girls between 12 and 16, in training under special teachers for sewing and cooking. Rooms were equipped for their instruction in 150 cities and towns under the direction of more than a thousand trained teachers. Additional activities are planned in many schools for the year, such as the serving of luncheons from the school kitchens and the teaching of mothers how best to purchase, plan, and prepare nourishing meals under the restrictions of wartime food supply.

It is essential to realize that the plan which has been tried successfully in the State of New York public schools is one not primarily for production, as such, however desirable this object may be, but for education. Children are in school to learn.

This suggestive beginning thus made in the vocational classes in the State of New York has received high and universal sanction by the President's Junior Red Cross proclamation. It is indicative of a broad and worthy trend in the public schools to allow all children to feel that they are not negligible units in the service of our country, but that they, too, can help in a time of widespread stress and need.

The schools of this State are now giving efficient help in the flotation of the new Liberty bonds. The United States Treasury Department has prepared, in co-operation with the Liberty Loan Committee of the Second Federal Reserve District and the university, a source book of information regarding the loan. This book gives in a compact way instructions and information about Government bonds, as well as information about the resources of the country. A copy of it has been placed in the hands of every teacher in the State.

Girls in a Troy Vocational School Knitting for the Soldiers.

The teachers have been intrusted with an important share in the Second Liberty Loan campaign. They have been asked to serve as information centres and agents for the Treasury Department in the dissemination of accurate knowledge concerning the loan throughout every community where a school exists or where a teacher resides. They have been ordered to arrange for public meetings in the interests of the loan in every school building or district, to follow up a home canvass or reach each home through the pupils. The work is undertaken, not as a plain patriotic duty alone, but also as a most valuable method of teaching the current needs of our country—thrift, sound finance, and patriotism.

A medal of honor has been designed to be awarded for the best essay by the school children of various localities on any subject connected with the Liberty Loan. Teachers have been urging the children to compete for the prize, for it is believed that it will be of inestimable service to the loan to interest the school children in this way.

Higher schools and universities have, of course, made a greater tangible contribution to the common defense. Scientific laboratories have been generally put at the disposal of the Government; some Faculties have been reorganized for essential national service; the training of aviators and officers is in part delegated to certain universities. An exhibit of what has been done by the universities and colleges of the State is to be made at the convocation of the universities of the State of New York, Oct. 18 and 19. Many college Presidents and professors sit on the great advisory boards of the War and Navy Departments. But the higher schools must in the end, like the rest of the nation, depend on the spirit the pupil is imbued with in the primary grades.

The tribute of our European allies to the effort of America is generous beyond our deserts. France was profoundly moved by the pledge of President Wilson of help, even to the last man of our population and the last dollar of our resources. England, expecting only financial and naval aid, was impressed by our prompt and efficient action in the formation of a great army and aviation service, in our practical and prompt measures for increasing food production, and by our mobilization of science and industry.

There can be no doubt that America deserves praise for seeing the immensity of the struggle into which we have been drawn and for planning and undertaking on a scale somewhat commensurate thereto.

The dream of a better America in which all—soldier and civilian alike—are brothers in arms; in which democracy is a religion rather than a quasi-fiction of Government; in which love of country is a supreme passion; in which the duties of citizenship are coequal with the privileges of citizens—all this is not beyond the reach of the imagination. It represents a national transformation that in Belgium and France, at least, has largely become fact, a national spirit that in France has received the christening of the "union sacre," in which individual selfishness, strife, and bitterness have been lost in the supreme devotion to the nation's suffering.

Is such a "sacred union" of all Americans possible? It should be remembered that this is not a merely academic question. It is a practical military question of the greatest moment. It is the question of the morale of the nation which includes our great unorganized reserve and our subsistence and munitions services, on which military success in the end depends.

The military strength of France lies not so much in the marvelous "75's," in the speedy "Nieuports," in trench guns, curtains of fire, or in tanks, as in the moral strength and spiritual unity of the French people. And I speak especially of France, because I have seen France and have not seen England since the first weeks of the war.

The unity is not forced. It is the flower of the French spirit, the product of their innate love of their homeland, fostered and developed by a wise national education. France has been obliged to improvise armies, to improvise munitions; she has not been obliged to improvise spirit. Moral and patriotic instruction has for years formed the heart of national education there. The entire body of studies has been humanized and nationalized in being used as the medium in which the French spirit develops and attains full power and stature. The sacred union was born of the basic moral ideas taught in the schools of the republic. It proved its power in the fellowship of the trenches. It passed again reinforced from the trenches back to the schools through hospitals, through schools for the wounded, through letters from teacher-soldiers, and is now being transmitted in the schools from the army of present defense to the army of future defense.

"Throughout all France," said the Minister of Public Instruction, Albert Sarraut, as nearly as I can paraphrase his utterances, "the school forms the moral centre of the country, and, although age or sex keeps many of them far from the front, our teachers have earned the title of 'soldiers of the interior' by essential service, for which the country owes them a particular gratitude. The day will come when the walls of each school will bear a double citation; on the one side the glorious list of its dead, its wounded, of those who have won promotion or citation on the field of honor; on the other side the list of patriotic and charitable tasks, freely undertaken by the non-mobilized teachers and their pupils. The school is France herself. The truths which the country needs in the great conflict the school makes known everywhere. The immense energy needed to suppress any moment of weakness, the moral instruction and example of the university labors to maintain and develop. More than any other class teachers are responsible for the contagion of their spirit."

We in New York who have been intrusted with the administration of the schools would have every teacher serve the nation as unselfishly as any soldier in the army of present defense. There are approximately as many teachers in the State of New York as there are New York men in the first contingent of the National Army; a teacher in the army of future defense for every soldier in the army of present defense. And what an army this is; this unseen mighty army which is helping to make a democracy worth saving by the other army! We who must remain at our posts of future defense cannot let these momentous days in the world's history pass without doing our part to help bring in our own day that peace which will make the world a safe place hereafter for those whom we teach.

And the places where the soldiers of the Army of Future Defense are to be trained in body, in mind, in spirit, and in the ideals of democracy are the schools, every one of which, I repeat, must become a national centre as well as a community centre.

It is difficult for those who have not seen in the sky the smoke of battle, or heard its thunders, to know that we are at war, but that far horizon which we can see only in our imagination is very real, and it is ours, not only collectively, but individually.

Two Prize Essays Written by Soldiers at Swiss Internment Camp on "The Training of the American Army"

WHILE in Murren, Switzerland, on a visit to the English internment camp a few weeks ago, Charles H. Grasty, correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES, offered two prizes for essays by soldiers on the subject, "Training of the American Army." These prizes have been awarded, the first to R. Newson, rifleman of the Twelfth London Regiment; the second to A. Williams, Second Sergeant of the Royal Irish Regiment.

Rifleman Newson's article is printed below, entitled

Be Prepared.

"By their entry into the world war the Americans have a great task before them in raising a large army from an undisciplined civilian population, and we shall here consider some of the chief things which their new army will have to learn in order to fit itself for active service in Europe.

"The most important thing in training any army is discipline. Without discipline nothing can be achieved, and no army can be kept together. The disasters which have recently befallen the Russians give ample proof of this, but of all the things which the American must learn in the art of modern warfare, probably that of subjecting himself to military discipline will prove the hardest, as the Americans are essentially an easy-going, freedom-loving race; but such matters as field work and shooting, depending more directly on the exercise of common sense and sound judgment, should easily be learned by the Americans, who are, generally speaking, a highly educated race. The maintenance of discipline should not be the crushing of initiative and self-reliance, as heavy casualties among officers require that men should be able to take command and act intelligently if the necessity arises. Men in these days must not fight as machines, but as thinking human beings, and every effort should be made to encourage individual initiative.

"Of course, the proper care and use of arms is an absolutely necessary and vital part of the training curriculum, and each branch of the army must perfect itself in the use of its particular weapons by continuous instruction and persistent practice, and only when this has been done can any unit take its place on the battlefield as an efficient fighting force.

"Officers and ranks in command should mix with their men and inspire confidence, as experience has proved that men will much more readily obey orders when they have confidence in their leaders.

"A great deal of marching and field work is a most important item of training. Field formations and operations should be constantly rehearsed until they become almost second nature to the troops, so that order may be easily kept later on when such movements become necessary under fire.

"While Swedish drill will aid in the keeping fit of the body, very necessary under the trying conditions of a modern campaign, healthy recreation should also be provided and encouraged whenever possible to keep the men in good spirits, as the "morale" of the troops is of the highest importance.

"In addition, the American Army should 'import' a number of allied officers and N. C. O.'s, who have seen service in the war, as instructors. In modern warfare practical experience is always valuable, while experienced soldiers can frequently give tips, outside the ordinary routine of instruction, which will be found of great value when later on the American recruit finds himself in the trenches; while as most of the allied armies have now had three years' experience of modern warfare, there is no reason why the Americans should not have the benefit of this knowledge so dearly acquired."

The author of the essay which won the second prize took the text,

The Measure of Courage Is Intrepidity in Danger.

"What are the important points in the training of a recruit of the new American Army?

"There are three qualities the possession of which are absolutely necessary to an American recruit before he can become an efficient fighting soldier of the present-day armies—physical soundness, discipline, and enthusiasm.

"The first of these is of paramount importance to him, as without it the other two are useless. The American is a business man before everything else, more accustomed to office routine than to outdoor life. The former is a strenuous life, no doubt, but camp life, though calmer and more regular, is more strenuous still, albeit, in a different way, while modern trench warfare, for which camp life is the training, calls for all the best attributes of physical endurance. Without physical soundness a fighting soldier cannot possibly perform those duties which fall to his lot, no matter what other qualities he may possess. Therefore, this quality is indispensable and takes precedence of all others.

"Second in importance is discipline. A soldier has to do many things which, especially on first joining, appear to him incomprehensible. He is naturally inclined to ask the why and the wherefore of the orders he receives. Implicit and unquestioning obedience to the orders of his superiors is his bounden duty. This is the root of all discipline, and without it a regiment becomes 'unstuck' and, from being one compact body, rapidly deteriorates into a number of individuals with no cohesion between them.

"The danger which would accrue from such a state of affairs may be easily imagined by taking as an example a battalion cut off in a dangerous position. Under these circumstances an undisciplined body of men would soon become unnerved and quickly go to pieces, while a well-disciplined body would remain calm, and in all probability stave off attacks until reinforcements arrived. In all dangerous crises a man must have control of himself and be able to retain his nerve and 'morale,' and that is where discipline is necessary, for it often means subordinating the natural emotions and tendencies to the pressing needs of the moment.

"Lastly, enthusiasm. But it may be asked why, if a man possesses physical capability and a perfect sense of discipline, need he be enthusiastic? An automatic piano-player will play an opera with absolute mechanical precision, but a good orchestra playing the same piece of music will imbue it with life. There is the same difference between the unenthusiastic soldier and the soldier who has his cause at heart. The latter will put more into his work and get more out of it. Therefore, teach the American recruit to be enthusiastic. Teach him the causes of the war and the results accomplished up to date and he will go forward cheerfully to the end.

"By these means you will have a soldier who is physically fit, well disciplined, and enthusiastic. An army composed of such men would assuredly put the finishing touch on the common enemy; and who can doubt America, with her usual thoroughness in everything she undertakes, will see to it that her sons possess these qualities when they enter the firing line?"

Duties of Schools When Nation Is at War

New York State Sets Example in Encouraging Teachers to Inform Pupils About America's Aims—Lineup of the Colleges

By John H. Finley,

State Commissioner of Education.

FOR three years I have been urging that we should compel a general mobilization of our youth as well as of our adults for the common defense of our ideals; a universal conscription for training and for service. I have objected, incidentally, to making the schoolboys take the gun end of the proposition except as a final necessity, because I did not want them to carry into a new generation the idea that fighting with a gun was the only form of valor for means of patriotic service. With remarkable unanimity and prevision, the State has risen to the higher conception and definition. Before the enaction of the Federal law of selective draft for service, the State of New York had enacted a law for compulsory training under which every boy between the ages of 16 and 19, whether in school or not, is required to be preparing himself for some vocational service useful to the State, either military in the narrower sense or industrial or agricultural or commercial.

This, in turn, rests upon another law of even wider scope or vaster influence, the law which requires the physical training and help-education of every boy and girl in the State over 8 years of age, whether in public or private school.

These laws, the first and foremost measures of their kind in any State, give intimation of the great democratic basic provision, in addition to the mental and moral training, which the State of New York is making for its future service to the nation. For in this service I am coming to think of every school not only as a community centre but a national centre.

In this day of the nation's war need we must firmly establish and practice this relationship that, in the days of as great peace need, the schools will be ready for a service comparable with that which they are even now rising to give in the promotion of their country's defense.

Proposed Liberty Loan Medal for Essay Contest in the Schools.

It is on this common foundation of training that we are to form the "sacred union" of all Americans, to save and serve America and, through America, the world, for the freedom of which we are now fighting. And what an opportunity and responsibility comes to the teacher. It is so great an opportunity, so grave a responsibility, that one cannot seek to teach in these days from any low motive. I wonder how there can be petty squabbling or personal haggling on their part or that of boards of education in the face of such opportunities and responsibilities. There has come out of the crisis a realization of the supreme importance of the teacher and a recognition which we must rise to meet.

Our schoolmaster President has made a special appeal to the teachers, asking them to aid "a deeper understanding of the meaning and aims of democracy" and the "problems of national life." "These * * * lessons of the war," he says, "must be learned quickly if we are intelligently and successfully to defend our institutions."

There is danger that we shall find our own minds distracted and our long-cherished moral values disturbed by the events of the war, but there is greater danger that we shall fail to take advantage of the new values that are rising, that we shall be blind to opportunities for spiritual enrichment and industrial renovations, that we shall go on living and teaching in a narrow, selfish, horizon when the most momentous days in the world's history are coming to one eternity and going into the other. If we are beyond the age of the draft, we are none of us beyond self-conscription. It is to the teachers after the soldiers and the men who are to feed and equip them that the President has made his first special appeal that we conscript ourselves.

There is a twofold obligation on the teacher. First, it is essential that we defend the intellectual frontiers of our democracy. We must "dig ourselves into" their trenches and hold them. Second, the schools, public and private, teachers and pupils alike, must take an active part in helping the nation in the fight.

With regard to the first obligation: We must teach the truth about the war. Teachers must instill and nourish in their millions of pupils a spirit of unselfish sacrifice, to the end that they shall be united in support of this world cause which President Wilson defined for all of us and for all time when he said:

> The object of this war is to deliver the free peoples of the world from the menace and the actual power of a vast military establishment controlled by irresponsible Government, which, having secretly planned to dominate the world, proceeded to carry the plan out without regard either to the sacred obligations of treaty or the long-established practices and long-cherished principles of international action and honor; which chose its own time for the war; delivered its blow fiercely and suddenly; stopped at no barrier either of law or of mercy; swept a whole continent within the tide of blood—not the blood of soldiers only, but the blood of innocent women and children also, and of the helpless, of the poor—and now stands balked but not defeated, the enemy of four-fifths of the world.

The children who are here gathered from many peoples must know with what high purpose and from compelling motive we have entered this world conflict. Our answer to their questions must be the

Immigration Tide May Turn from West to East

Millions of Our Foreign-Born Citizens Planning to Return to Europe After the War, Says Commissioner Frederic C. Howe

By RICHARD BARRY.

MILLIONS of foreign-born Americans, representing almost every nationality of Europe, are planning to go back to the lands of their birth as soon as peace is declared. They are, as it were, straining at the barrier, waiting for the flag of peace to drop, whereupon will occur such an exodus from these shores as has never occurred before in our history.

So many inquiries about transportation abroad have been pouring into the steamship and railway offices during the past few months that a census was recently taken, unofficially, by these offices, with the resulting revelation that approximately 1,000,000 foreign-born persons now on American soil are planning to return home. Commissioner of Immigration, Frederic C. Howe, says that he is of the opinion that, on a most conservative estimate, at least 2,000,000 people will return to Europe the first year after the war if they can secure accommodation. Other immigration officials have said, privately, that they would not be surprised to see 3,000,000, 4,000,000, or even 5,000,000 go back. As the average emigration out of America for years previous to 1914 was between 300,000 and 400,000, (about one-fourth of the average immigration,) this country has looming before it an astonishing phenomenon.

For centuries the flow of peoples has been westward. The migration of the tribes, from the dawn of our era, has been toward the setting sun. Is the close of the great war to mark the end of his era in history? Has man at last looked his fill on the lands of the West? And is migration now to take its flow, for the first time since the discovery of America, toward the rising sun? And if so, why?

The question was put to Mr. Howe.

"Yes," he said, "we are, it seems to me, on the threshold of a vast change. It is idle to think our immigration problem will continue as it has been. Unless all signs are wrong and our Government, national as well as State, institutes drastic measures, we may see almost a complete reversal of conditions. To put it slangily, we will have to take the 'i' out of immigration and replace it with an 'e.'"

The Commissioner spoke from his well-placed office on Ellis Island. The old atmosphere of the island is gone. The days when the ways swarmed with picturesque alien peasants, babbling in variegated tongues a Babel of elation, confusion and anxiety, all incident to a monumental hegira, are no more. The inclosures are now empty. Ellis Island is marking time.

"But," I remonstrated, "surely there will be a resumption of immigration after the war. Surely millions will flee from war-ridden Europe for asylum in America. I should think the first year after the war would be the greatest year of immigration in our history."

"No," replied Mr. Howe, "I think not. At least the net immigration is not likely to be very large; that is, if you subtract those going from those coming."

"What reasons have you for thinking so many are going back?"

"First, a census taken by railroad and steamship companies, showing that at least 1,000,000 of our foreign-born are planning to go to Europe the moment peace is declared. Second, the reports of a large number of employers in Western cities that there seems to be a concerted movement to induce Hungarians, Austrians, and other Central European peoples to return to their native land. Third, bankers in the coal and industrial regions report that Poles, Italians, and Russians in very large numbers are saving money and making preparations for return. Fourth, my study of European agricultural conditions as contrasted with those in the United States. This last is my basic reason, though the symptoms are well indicated by the others."

"How do you explain this potential exodus?"

"I will catalogue the reasons, beginning with the unimportant. First, the desire to see friends and relatives. We have 15,000,000 foreign-born persons in the United States, and for over three years these 15,000,000 have had little or no communication with their relations on the other side. Had communication been uninterrupted they might have been content to remain, would doubtless have followed the natural law and written back such tidings as would have lured others here. But, lacking communication, they remain restless and dissatisfied, and the imagination always conjures up the worst. This, combined with the conditions they face here, is a compelling motive.

"Second, the quest for family property and possessions. Hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, have lost relatives in the war. Many came to this country because of unsatisfactory division of property in the old countries. Now they will return in the hope of getting what will be to them a more equitable division. Death and change have wiped out many an old score, tightened many a homesick heart.

"Third, there is a general expectation, among the Russians especially, and also among the Poles, Hungarians, and residents of the Balkan States, that land will be cheap in their countries after the war. Russia, of course, has a new deal, and many Russians are eager to get back quickly and profit by the change. Others are planning to profit out of the bankruptcy of feudal proprietors in Poland and Hungary, as well as out of the devastation of the country.

"Fourth, every country in Europe is working out an organized plan to foster this very movement which I am forecasting. In every country, from Ireland to the Black Sea, the days of absentee landlordism and of vast uncultivated estates, no matter who owns them, are probably over. Every European Government is awake to this condition.

"Fifth, many, perhaps a majority, will leave America because of industrial conditions. It has been said that the Texan hates the Slovak and the Northerner hates the 'greaser'; but, to both, it is America who has not welcomed them.

"Sixth, the increasing difficulty, and, in many cases, the practical inability, of the immigrant to acquire permanent homes. The country districts and villages of Central and Southern Europe have supplied the bulk of our immigration for the last decade. These Slavs, Latins, and Teutons are essentially home-loving. They came here after having been told that this was the paradise for the home lover; that in the United States every man could easily acquire a home, which, in a former generation was true, but not now. So they are going back where they think they can get homes."

"Granting that all this is true," I cut in, "won't there be even more millions anxious to flee to America from the impoverished and devastated lands?"

"It is not likely," replied Mr. Howe. "In the first place, European Governments are going to place restrictions on emigration. Every Government will need every able-bodied human being at home. Moreover, it is universally predicted that the end of this war will see a swift rising tide of legislation along socialistic lines. That may mean a distribution of lands.

"Already, in the height of the war, in the shock of the desperate conflict, when it would seem that thought is given to nothing but militarism, commissions are working everywhere on this problem.

"Take England, for instance. A commission has been appointed to investigate ways and means for providing land for invalided soldiers, and this is expected to be the basis for legislation immediately after the war to provide land for returned soldiers.

"What Germany is going to do can only be guessed at. But we may be positive that Germany will not lose a day or a chance. We may have some idea of what that country will do if we remember that her enlightened policies previous to the war were such that the average immigration into Germany for a number of years before 1914 was 800,000 per annum. We do know that already Germany is breaking up her large landed estates, that notice has been served on the titled and landed proprietor.

"Ireland is the bright star in the dark night of Europe. Irish immigration to the United States has been cut in half in the past three years. We got 33,898 from Ireland in 1914, and 17,462 in 1917. I believe that, in the generation that is dawning, Ireland will show Europe and the world the way. Her individual sons have led the world in the past century; in the coming generation they are going to develop the Irish soil. Many thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, of Irish people may return to the mother land directly peace is declared. Once the change in conditions there is known the Irish will flock back in a resistless tide.

"In Scotland the English Government is considering breaking up the great estates into small holdings to be sold to returning soldiers on easy terms of payment. Besides, a whole new scheme of land taxation is being considered with the primary purpose, not of increased revenue, but of ending speculation in land and opening it to use.

"Canada is working on colony projects in the Northwest, while Australia and New Zealand have already outstripped the world in offering inducements to settlers. Recently, in Congress, Senator Sheppard of Texas, who has introduced a bill providing for an investigation of this problem, said that the lead in this sort of legislation for humanity had been taken by New Zealand. There all personalty, live stock, and improvements are exempted from taxation. The mortgagee must pay a tax on his mortgage as if it were land, and is prohibited from charging it to the mortgagor. About six-sevenths of the farm home owners of New Zealand pay no tax at all. Australia, too, has introduced the land tax to break up land speculation and idle land holding.

"All the States of Australia have worked out colonization schemes, with the prime object of breaking up big estates and placing on them many small farmers, not as tenants, but as owners or prospective owners. The State of Victoria, for instance, offers a wonderful inducement to the settler. It builds him a home, places therein furniture and essential working machinery, gives him six head of cattle and a specified amount of live stock besides, and hands all over to him, with enough acreage for one man to work without help, with very little payment down and an easily graduated scheme of partial payments by which he becomes the proprietor in due time, but with provisions made for forfeiture and lapses, so that it is practically impossible for a fairly thrifty man to lose his investment.

"Contrast with this the American scheme which spends large sums—like the $8,000,000 reclamation project on the Yuma desert—but which gives no thought to the essential creature comforts of the man who must work the land."

"How can America meet this foreign competition?"

"There are several ways, some of which have been suggested and some of which are being developed. At the present time I can no more than diagnose the condition and point out the undisputed facts. Take, for instance, the migration recently of hundreds of thousands of negroes from the South to Northern cities. This would not have occurred if better chances existed in the South for negroes to become owners. They are not prohibited, it is true, under the law, and many negroes do own homes, but the crying need is for State encouragement.

"California, which is inclined to lead the nation in remedial legislation of this sort, has recently appropriated $250,000 for the purpose of buying land for subdivision into small holdings. It is a small sum, comparatively, and in the nature of an experiment, but it will point the way. It is in line with the teachings of Ireland and Australia.

"The problem is for all America. Farm labor has had several severe blows. The draft has hurt it. The rising wage market in the cities inevitably hurts it. The immigration shortage has hurt it. Now if we add to that, at the close of the war, an emigration away from the land and back to Europe, conditions here will become unendurable. There will be a serious decay in farming, which means, in a very definite sense, a decay in our national life, too.

"We do not do enough for the farmer here in America. Europe is going to meet us in competition for him and bid him away from us after the war. That is the situation in a nutshell.

"See what they do for the farmer in Australia. Germany began a similar scheme before the war and is said to have almost perfected it during the war. It consists in eliminating the middleman. The Australian farmer, as today the German, has an agent who handles his business and gives him all the returns, less a commission, which is State regu-

Art of the Netherlands at National Arts Club

THE exhibition of the art of the Netherlands that was shown at the Panama-Pacific Exposition is now at the galleries of the National Arts Club, where it will remain during the rest of the month. Thus the mountain keeps coming in small sections to the Mahomets of New York. A number of the pictures have been omitted on account of restrictions of space, but enough have been hung to show the full range of modern Dutch art from the domesticity of Kever to the extreme modernism of the followers of Thorn-Prikker. The note of the collection is, however, conservatism; and not a little of it represents the postcard type of painting, as in the case of Van der Waay's smoothly pretty orphan girls in the picturesque costume of their class. A little group of the paintings of Anton Mauve is hung in an alcove. It is quite possible to find in the "Sheep Shearing" something of the quality that Matthew Maris carried to a higher development in such pictures as his "Feeding Chickens," and the association of Mauve with the Maris brothers seems a natural one in the presence of this particularly engaging example of his work. The other Mauves are much less interesting.

H. A. van Ingen, eight years younger than Mauve, was brought before the public as an "important" man only in 1903. His beautiful version of a cow's head has breadth and authority, and as research into character. If a portrait painter could manage to say as much of his human subject as this artist says of his cow, he would be considered a master of characterization. Van Essen is another animal painter of distinction, although his "Pelicans" is more emphatic and less rich in quality than the work of the older man. Koppenol is more elusive and painter-like in his picture of silvery geese in a gray landscape under a pallid sky, a charming picture unfavorably hung. William van den Berg is one of the most skillful and entertaining of the figure painters. He seems to fulfill the law of inheritance in taking from the great "Little Masters" of the seventeenth century what they had for him in the way of ingenious economical design, pure and pleasant color, and a certain aristocracy of plainness, while adding a modern self-consciousness. There is more of obvious arrangement in his "Boy with Fruit" and his "Girl in Kimono" than Vermeer or de Hooch or Terborch would have permitted, and there is a much too acquiescent liking for static poses. In the largest of his pictures a Persian bowl plays a prominent part, remarkable for the extraordinary fidelity to the original character of color and form. But he is at his worst on a large scale. A little sallow brown picture of an interior with a girl pulling back a curtain is much his finest exhibit, and is not in the catalogue. Painted without sentimentality in a vigorous truth-telling mood curiously belied by the artificial illumination of the figures, Christian Addicks's verson of the mother and child theme is noteworthy. Anna E. Kerling uses a brusque method and a loaded brush. Rembrandt and Hals have both spoken to her. Jacob Zon's "Preparing Fodder" is a dusky reminiscence of a gloom that preceded his generation in art.

"The Carnival," by van Soest, is blonde in color and freely generalized in a way that passes for modern, but lacks the modern passion for clarity of statement in line and mass, however mystic or confused the emotional message. H. M. Krabbe paints typically Dutch children in simple domestic compositions. Herman Heyenbrock has encountered the theme of industrial labor and does Belgian collieries and factories in a matter-of-fact way. Frans Oerder's "Waiting," a couple of peasants in a bare, white room, is a really strong genre, painted with something of Leibl's uncompromising accuracy and hardness, without the German's technical authority. Eugene Löcker paints a blooming apple tree with the gayety of the season in its light and shade and color and the spirit of growth in its well-studied trunk and branches; "Fishermen Knitting Nets," by Hobbe Smith, is a salient figure study, painted to tell at a distance and without distinction of silhouette. It is at the other end of the line, in point of aesthetic quality, from Jan Toorop's small and moving "Distribution of Fish in Katwyk."

C. Vreedenburgh's "Unloading Peat" is one of the clear, clean paintings that seem more brilliant and vigorous against the foggy grays of the prescribed Dutch landscapes. The designs for stained glass by P. H. Testas apparently derive from the much greater artist, Thorn-Prikker, who evokes his moods with color strictly after the fashion of a musical composer, writing the color scheme within the black outline and letting the workman responsible for the making of the window interpret it. The drawings of Testas are too feeble for so radical a departure as he makes from the conventional to impress itself upon the observer as a genuine artistic adventure.

The exhibition considered as a whole has variety of effect and interest for the student of modern tendencies in different countries. The graphic section contains some of the most interesting work in point of technical quality in the collection.

Art at Home and Abroad

"Girl in Kimono" by W. van den Berg.
(In Exhibition of the Art of the Netherlands at National Arts Club.)

Exhibition of American Paintings at the Montross Galleries.

THE first exhibition of the season at the Montross Galleries includes a number of pictures that show a bold spirit and a modern tendency without stepping over the line of conventionalism beyond which the public is not admitted save for purposes of study. There is nothing to startle the most conservative in the clever note of contemporary life caught by Guy Pené du Bois in "The Striped Waist." The bright colors of women's costume; an artifically illuminated car or ferryboat or waiting room, some place where you can turn from a raucous glare within to a dim blue coolness without; faces seen in their natural human ugliness; a picture quite in the mode and painted with joyous indifference to anatomical structure except where the anatomy is so clearly revealed that you cannot well get away from it. The body of the woman looking out of the window is divided into two parts and the upper part is set upon the lower like a portrait bust on a pedestal, turned quite independently of its support. Yet it is a picture that you like because you see it every day in the common streets that hold such rare material for art.

Gifford Beal's "King's Gardens" is a finer performance. The problem of putting figures in landscape has been solved many times in the past, but Mr. Beal solves it in his own way. His background of green trees and grass and architectural features is beautifully seen, and his little figures in translucent shade are charming in character, but the real triumph lies in the fact that you cannot think of either the figures or the landscape as independent of each other. There are three pictures by Glenn Coleman, a landscape in New Hampshire, with the kind of cloud that is seen now and then and that calls for genius in the transposition to canvas; a street scene, "Minetta Lane," with houses that march schematically from purple through orange and yellow to green. One thinks of the lady who never saw a sunset that looked as it did in the painting and of Turner's response: "Madame, don't you wish you could?" The third picture is called "The Tower" for catalogue purposes, and shows the Judson Building, grave in its dark reds, against a beautifully graded deep turquoise sky, with a patch of greenish-brown grassplot in the foreground. It is architecturally impressive, and the artist has made himself intimate with its detail, until he is able to generalize without emptying his subject of all significance. The color is both strong and sensitive. It is by far the best of the three examples representing this greatly gifted and disconcertingly uneven young painter.

A still life by Mr. McFee is red and blue and gray, the pigment has the soft shallow beauty of tempera, and the color is resonant and muffled, like loud marching music heard at a distance. The subject matter, as usual, is quaintly chosen, a table and curtain and glass vase, some peaches and Summer squash of the "patty pan" variety living together in the happy harmony of art which asks only for compatibility of color and form. There is a modernist picture by Ben Benn, and Eugene Higgins shows "The Wayfarers," the ivory and blue of which have been learned perhaps at the feet of Ryder, or perhaps not; what matters is that it is much the best work Mr. Higgins has done since his work first began to be seen in the exhibition rooms.

Constantin Guys.

AT the Modern Gallery the work of Constantin Guys is receiving a late and richly merited attention. In this country Guys has been known chiefly to a very few enlightened amateurs for whom the Second Empire has revealed its riches. Guys was the Second Empire. Its panorama floated across his pages without a moment of halting or uncertainty. The aristocratic equipages with owners as obviously elegant whirl down the broad Allée de Longchamp at a pace that blurs detail without diminishing significance. The coquettes in bouffant skirts and ruffles and impudent slippers, the dandies with waists and canes, the servants of the rich, every kind of passing phase is noted by him, sometimes cruelly, rarely with geniality, always with keen precision.

It is not known when Guys first began to draw, but the first known pages of his work were not remarkable. It was not until he could see his subject and then retire to his austere apartment to record it that he became a master. He was also a hero. He was over seventy when he was picked up from the street where a wagon had knocked him down and carried to a hospital, where for seven years he lay in hopeless suffering, and during all that time he kept his gayety and wit and his highly tempered spirit. Something of this unflinching readiness to meet facts of all kinds, the most hideous and the cheerfulest, is in his pictures that never stoop to sentimentalism or take refuge in vagueness. All the young illustrators who see only what is easy to construe should study the snap of his definite brush-end.

Philadelphia Exhibitions.

THE Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and the Philadelphia Water Color Club announce that under their join management an exhibition of original work in water color, black and white, pastel, or drawing with pencil, crayon, or pen, or illustrations in whatever medium, will be held at the academy, beginning Sunday, Nov. 4, 1917, and ending Sunday, Dec. 9, 1917, both inclusive. Work entered from the City of New York may be sent direct to the academy or be delivered, unpacked, to Messrs. W. S. Budworth & Son, 424 West Fifty-second Street, on or before Tuesday, Oct. 16. A prize of $200, known as the Philadelphia Water Color Prize, is offered this year by friends of water color painting. This prize will be awarded to that American artist or resident foreign artist showing the strongest water color or group of water colors in the exhibition. The Beck Prize of $100 will be awarded to the best work in the exhibition that has been reproduced in color for the purpose of publication. The Jury of Selection and Award are Hilda Belcher, Charlotte Harding Brown, Herbert E. Everett, W. L. Lathrop, W. H. De B. Nelson, and Frederic Nunn, and the Hanging Committee are George Walter Dawson, Blanche Dillaye, and Thornton Oakley.

his ear, and is close to the line. And then what he feels is not fear, but a strange, vacant, lonely feeling, a restlessness and longing, not for home, but to be in the front line with the men who are in danger, because what he feels most is a tremendous pity for them. It is the psychology of the soldier that what he is conscious of then is not any danger for himself, but an intense pity for the men who are on the front line, the sense of their danger and the wish to share it with them.

"But sooner or later he will be under shellfire himself. And the first time that happens to the volunteer he will feel a great regret that he didn't wait for the draft! It will be only momentary, but for the instant he will feel a great desire to run—not at the Germans! He will want to run away, but somehow he doesn't; somehow he can't; and he and all his comrades, all feeling the same way, go on steadily moving—forward!

"It is when he comes to his first ruined village that the awfulness of war will hit him face to face, and he will feel lonely and deserted himself, and very small. He gets used to shellfire very soon, and he comes to think that the German guns are pretty rotten! But when, going into the communication trench, he sees his first wounded being carried out on stretchers—well, you can't describe the feeling it gives him. He is pretty well unnerved at first, and then he is flooded with a tremendous pity for these men. Then his pity changes to admiration, and he begins to feel a kind of envy of them; if he could go through it without suffering all that they are supposed to, he'd like to be one of those wounded men himself; it's like what the drafted man who has been exempted must feel when he sees the regiments marching away.

"In the communication trenches he hears the sharp crack of a bullet over his head and ducks—that sound is like being stung by a bee; it unnerves a man more than shellfire. Then perhaps a bullet hits the front wall of the trench and ricochets to the rear, with a whining, singsong sound. But the young soldier's first fear only lasts a moment," added Gunner Empey, who recalls in "Over the Top" the sane word that an old soldier gave him in his first fighting days, "You never hear the bullet that hits you."

"In his trench the soldier will feel at first strangely lonely," he continued. "That ditch is like one of those 'mystic mazes.' He only sees the sky. Then he feels a sense of security—the Germans can't get at him down here. Then he has another feeling—'Then can't see me, but I can't see them, either! They might be coming in here any minute! What are they doing?' And he has an irresistible desire to stick his head over the top!

"You know," commented the soldier, "the American is going over there looking for trouble. He wouldn't be an American if he weren't. And he'll get some of it, too. If an officer tells an Englishman what he sees outside the trench through the periscope, the Englishman will take it for granted and be contented. But the American will want to stick his head up and see it all for himself! He's got to learn not to! After looking through the periscope, don't stick your head over the top to see what you saw!

"When he first gets into the front-line trenches the individual soldier will feel that every gun, rifle, and machine gun in the German Army is aimed directly at him! As a matter of fact, the Germans don't know he's enlisted. And if he stops to think that the whole City of Paris only occupies a pinpoint on the map and that the Germans have thousands of miles to shoot their shells at, while he occupies an infinitesimal point that you couldn't find without a strong magnifying glass, he'll see that he musn't expect every shell to hit him!

"And when he has been in the trenches a short while the American soldier will begin to feel indignant! He'll figure out that everything about this war has had a lot of camouflage in it right along, and that it isn't so bad as it's cracked up to be. And it isn't!

"And it's up to him to write home often, long letters, and tell the people there how it really is! He mustn't forget that his mother, and his wife or his sweetheart, and his sisters still have the impression that he started out with—that it is just one horror after another. He's got to tell 'em how it is!"

Another piece of advice for the American soldier is concerned with his own Government.

"When the American goes into the army, and when he gets to France," Mr. Empey said, "he wants to forget that 'the Government's rich.' He doesn't want to waste a single thing, food, equipment, anything. The people at home are paying for those things, and he is paying for them himself. And everything he wastes or throws away will help to prolong the war."

Gunner Empey is a sturdy, rather stocky young man with bright eyes and quick movements and gestures. He gesticulates a good deal, and walks about when he talks. There is a jagged red scar on his cheek, but it is not very noticeable; one thinks of it far less as a disfigurement than as evidence of some wonderful surgery. It is not long since Gunner Empey's cheek was crushed to pulp, and it was thought that his face could never look like a man's face again—until a young American surgeon, a Harvard unit man, promised to "see what he could do." Now Gunner Empey simply has a slight scar on one cheek. He talks with a great deal of vigor, of enthusiasm, a contagious zest of soldiering. And his word of encouragement is not confined to the reminder of respites in the actual fighting, or, indeed, to the fighting side of war at all.

"There is some abominable German propaganda," he said, striding down his room in the hotel, "to the effect that when the American soldier gets to France he is thrown into evil associations. Nothing," he declared with the utmost emphasis, "could be further from the truth. In no place is there drawn a stricter line for good conduct than in France. Soldiers in French villages are not allowed to roam about at will. The questionable civilian population, what is more, is segregated in strictly patrolled quarters. And any man, no matter what his rank, who is found in the vicinity of these districts without a written permit detailing him to some specific duty there is arrested and severely dealt with.

"I'd like to tell every mother in America," he added, "that, no matter what her boy is when he goes into the war, he'll be a manlier man when he comes out of it. He will be more self-reliant, more courageous; a great quality of justice and fair play will have been instilled into him. And the army is a great leveler; the highbrow, the roughneck, the wise and the otherwise are all on the same plane, fighting for the same cause, and all fighting for you. The coal heaver's son and the millionaire's son, marching side by side, sharing the same life, are in just the same danger together; a German bullet is no respecter of social position.

"Then," he went on, with a change of tone, and with admiration in his voice that showed how he felt before he had got to the end of his sentence, "there is the Y. M. C. A. You people in America ought to do every thing you can to help the Y. M. C. A. It is the real home of the American soldier in France. It can't give him his loved ones, but it gives him the comforts and interests and pleasures of home. It brings home to him there in the mud of the trenches. And those Y. M. C. A. men aren't drawing any wonderful salaries, either; they are volunteers, and they are in the midst of the mud and the firing, as the soldiers are, to make the soldier comfortable and help him maintain the religion and the manliness that he had when he went into the war. The Y. M. C. A. doesn't make any distinction in any way—Protestant, Catholic, Jew, atheist, every one is welcome.

"Show me the soldier who makes a disparaging remark about the Y. M. C. A. or its work," he said, "and I'll show you a soldier who is a detriment to the army, who is constantly in trouble, and who has lost the respect of officers and mates. It's up to you people here at home to help the Y. M. C. A.

"And help the Red Cross. Everything you do for the Red Cross helps us in this war. Every bandage and sock helps. And every Liberty bond, no matter how small, is not only a good investment, but may directly benefit your own son or sweetheart or brother in the front-line trench. With every dollar you put in Liberty bonds, you also go over the top against Germany."

Empey at the American Women's War Hospital, Near Paignton, England, Where His Face Was Practically Made Over After Being Torn by an Explosive Bullet.

The soldier was talking directly to the people at home now. But he hadn't finished his advice to them. He had something to say about letters.

"When you people at home write to your soldiers in the trenches," he said, "forget your own petty troubles; don't tell them that some one is ailing and the weather is bad. Nothing disgusts a man more than to read whining letters from home, when he's sitting on the fire-step of the trench, in the mud! But, on the other hand, don't tell him what a good dinner you had on Sunday, and how John Doe took his best girl to the movies yesterday. Like as not he'll tear open your letter with a hand that he cut trying to open a bully beef tin! And as for John Doe, the soldier is likely to ask why he isn't over there, too, instead of taking girls to movies back in America! And don't have the sewing circle write him letters about obeying the Golden Rule and being good to the German prisoners! It'll be a long time before he so much as sees a German, you know! And don't ask him to ask General Pershing for his autograph!

"And don't ask him questions about personal family affairs that he must answer. The soldier's letters are censored by his platoon officers, or officers in his own command; and it will be embarrassing for him if he has to write home in too personal a tone. The thing to do when you write to your boys in the trenches is to slap them on the back! As for presents—don't send them a lot of useless junk. If you are in doubt, send money, and let them buy what they want themselves."

Cheerfully as he looks upon the soldier's prospects on the whole, Mr. Empey has no hope of an early end to the fighting.

"I can't see any sign of peace for three years," he said. "It will be a long war, and every one will be needed. About 40 per cent. of the work will be done by the men in the trenches. The rest must be done at home by the women, by those too old for service, and by those physically unfit for fighting. The sooner we realize this the better. And we must realize, too, that we are not just fighting Prussianism and militarism; we are fighting Germany and everything that has to do with Germany. The American soldier in the trenches fights German soldiers; it isn't the Kaiser, it's a German soldier, who is aiming a bullet at him."

On the other hand, the soldier has the most complete confidence in the American troops and the work that they will do. He went on:

"The fighters on the other side are absolutely wonderful. But my firm belief after thirteen years of service in the United States Army is that the American soldiers are going to make the world sit up and take notice. They are fresh, and that means a lot. They'll have a hard time at first, but there's no cause for discouragement in that; that's what they're going for; they are not in it for parade purposes!

"The spirit of the draft camps is wonderful! And the men I've talked with aren't thinking of avoiding service; they are asking, 'What outfit can I get into that will get me over there before the rest?' And it's no disgrace to be drafted."

Mr. Empey refuses even to call the draft conscription. It isn't that, he says. With a quick, imaginative visualization he pictures Uncle Sam tired out by the wrangles of politicians, fallen asleep among them all, wakened by the newspapers to the immediate fact of war, and quickly throwing an order to all young men in the country to come "over the top for justice and liberty—and self-preservation. Come on," the order added, "we're all going. There isn't time to argue. Just get into your uniform."

"And that," Gunner Empey added, "was what they called the Conscription bill!"

latad. Speculation is practically eliminated. Middleman profits are eliminated. We give our farmers free seeds; Australia gives them free homes. We abandon ours to the transportation wolves; Germany handles the farmer's transport for him, at cost. We offer public land for homesteading after the desirable land is all gone; Ireland commandeers its best land, long fallow under absentees, and splits it up among small farmers.

"In the United States today more than 400,000,000 acres of land, ostensibly in farms, is not under cultivation, while 200,000 acres, or one-quarter of our total agricultural area, is in great estates, principally in the West and South, some many hundreds of thousands of acres in extent. Land speculation has frozen out the small farmer without capital. And land speculation can best be met by taxation, as is being done in Canada. We hear of the old grinding conditions in Russia and Ireland where the tenant farmer groaned under his burden. America is the Russia and the Ireland of the future in this respect.

"The people, and especially our new immigrants, are land hungry, but they cannot be fed. They are thwarted by land monopoly, by land speculation, and by promotion companies which make it almost impossible for a man to establish himself as a farmer if he has no capital.

"Europe has a farseeing eye on these millions. It proposes to make a bid for them. It will offer the prize of homestead to the small settler. It will ruthlessly eliminate the profiteer and the speculator, the land hog and the land baron. Meanwhile, America stands alone as practically the only country which is not considering the reclamation of agriculture in a constructive, intelligent way.

"America exhorts the farmer and educates him, but it will have to do more than that for him if it wants to keep him. We have land in abundance. We have 15,000,000 foreign-born people, many of them peasants, eager for land. Yet conditions are such that they are now looking anxiously to war-scarred Europe to acquire a home."

"Don'ts" from the Author of "Over the Top"

Machine Gunner Empey Gives Good Advice to American Soldiers—"War Not Nearly So Bad as It's Cracked Up to Be"

THIS war, for the man in the trenches," remarked Machine Gunner Empey, American volunteer in the British Army, "is not nearly so bad as it's cracked up to be."

Arthur Guy Empey, author of "Over the Top," served for a year and a half with the British Army in France, and at the end of that time he was so badly wounded that he was incapacitated for further service. In addition to less sensational but more actually maiming wounds, he has a piece of another man's rib in his cheek, where the bone was smashed by an exploding bullet. He has seen "war as it is," if ever man did. And although his conversation, on returning to this country, could scarcely be said to be confined to what some one has called "the lighter side of trench life," his word to the American soldiers is full of practical, and indeed of cheerful, encouragement.

Also he has some bits of advice, culled from his own experience, for the American soldier in England, in France, making friends with the French and British soldiers, and at last on the firing line. And he traces step by step the probable experience of the young American.

"When you've been looking out of the trench through the periscope," he said, "don't stick your head over the top to see what you saw."

And he has a word of forecast, not cheerful this time unless we look beyond it, as to the sort of time the American soldiers are likely to have when they first go under fire.

"I am afraid that the American soldier is going to get it rough at first," he said, "for the same reason that the British colonials got it rough at first. We have heard a great deal about the Canadians and their splendid fighting, and I take off my hat to Canada every time. But we have also heard all sorts of German-propaganda talk to the effect that the Canadians "did all the fighting while England sat back," that the English put the Canadians on the hottest part of the line, and that sort of thing. Well, it's true that it was the hottest part of the line, but it isn't true that the English put them in it. What is true is that wherever the Canadians were would be the hottest part of the line, because that was a definite German plan. To discourage recruiting and to spread the report that England let her colonies do her fighting for her, the Germans specifically concentrated on the colonial lines. It didn't discourage recruiting. But I think it is quite likely that the Germans will do the same thing with the first American forces on the battle front—they will concentrate against them, to make people at home believe that the Americans are being sent to the worst parts of the line, filling in gaps, as they say. So I think that at the beginning it will be rough."

Then the gunner went back to his original word of cheer.

"The trouble with the American public," he went on, "is that they have heard and read so much of the great war and its horrors that they think their boys are going to be continually in the midst of bloodshed and constantly in discomfort, and they concentrate on the terrible side of it and ask, How long will it be before he is killed? They don't see that that is not all there is to it.

"It is natural enough, of course. A man writes a book about the war, takes one incident, and another, and another, makes chapters of them, with the result that the man and woman who read his book read a succession of horrors, and they think it is all like that. They don't realize, or they forget, the weeks between these 'horrors' and discomforts.

"A man is in the front trench under fire, say, two days, and sent back four, or perhaps four days and sent back eight. Usually a brigade is in the 'fire sector' thirty-two days. Then it is sent back to the rest billets for an equal time. Here the men are in practically no danger—perhaps an occasional shell. They are together in jolly comradeship, having lots of amusements—football, baseball—plenty to do. They are well fed, well equipped, well amused.

"Of course," he added, "the grouchy soldier is going to have a grouchy time. And the life of the American soldier on the western front is going to be just about what he makes it. If he goes into it in the right spirit he will find that it isn't so bad as it is cracked up to be. And then he will be in a great state of indignation because the reports of it have made it seem so awful.

Arthur Guy Empey.

"When he realizes that it isn't so bad," the soldier went on, "he mustn't forget to sit down and tell the folks at home! He knows it's a lot better than he thought it was going to be. But they don't."

"In the first place," he said, "before you set out, get over your dread of the submarines. I have talked with a great many young soldiers here in the American camps, and I have found that most of them have a dread of the ocean crossing. They are not in the least afraid of fighting the Germans; they want to get up and at them; that's what they're after. And about the crossing, you couldn't call it fear. But anybody would have a dread of walking in the dark across a field full of poison snakes.

"Well, I don't think that dread has much foundation. I've crossed several times myself, and I don't think there's much danger. Look at the Canadians; with all the troops they've sent 'over there,' they've never lost a man by submarine. And what Canada can do we can do—and I don't say that in any spirit of disparagement of Canada, either!

"When the American gets to England he is going to have a hard time at first getting along with the Englishmen. They are so different. The Englishman has a way of taking everything for granted. You mustn't talk to an Englishman about the war, or ask him about the victory; he is perfectly sure about the victory; the only thing he doesn't know is how long it is going to take. You mustn't talk to an Englishman about money, either. And," the American added with emphasis, "you mustn't tell him that baseball is far superior to cricket; his opinion of baseball is just the same as your opinion of cricket, you know! Don't tell him he is a fool for being governed by a King—the Englishman is a good observer, and he might come back at you and punch some holes in our Senate and Congress.

"Then the American mustn't herald his arrival in England and France as a great event, and say he is going to win the war! And when he is with the English soldiers he's got to forget all this 1776 stuff—the Americans and English are just brothers in arms now.

"But if an embarrassing situation does arise between an American and an Englishman, an uncomfortable silence, or something of the sort," he added, "I'll tell you the thing to do: the American should either offer or accept an invitation to tea! Over a cup of tea the awkward situation vanishes. More pleasant situations and good friendships are built up over a cup of tea than over a cocktail."

With the French, the situation is somewhat different. Said Mr. Empey:

"The French are looking to the Americans as the saviors of their cause, and the Americans must be careful to preserve that sentiment. The French are temperamental. If a Frenchman kisses an American soldier, the American mustn't poke him in the chin: he must kiss him back. And the French are—the American must just remember this—exceedingly polite. You must never poke fun at a Frenchman; that is a mortal insult. And the American must remember that the careful French politeness does not mean that the Frenchman is afraid of anything in the world. Why, a Frenchman will apologize to a German when he sticks his bayonet into him!

"But, after all, the Americans are going over there in the Frenchman's backyard. They are fighting together to keep a common enemy from climbing the back fence. But it is the Frenchman's yard. And the American must keep to the paths, and not step on the flower beds.

"Not," he added quickly, "that there are any regular customs or ways of doing and saying things that the American must adhere to. That was the case before the war, but things are changed now—both the Frenchman and the Englishman are changed with them; they are good fellows together now, and they excuse each other's mistakes. The thing for the American to do in France is to be and act always as a good American. He'll get a wonderful reception if he is just a real, straight Yankee.

"When he gets to his billet or village, the American soldier will find that prices will slightly rise. He mustn't consider that as an injury or an insult, but really as a compliment. To the French people every American is a millionaire; they set the best before him and he is expected to pay the price. The American tourists in France have given that impression. And when you throw a ball against a wall, it is sure to rebound. The harder you throw it," he remarked reflectively, "the harder it will hit you when it comes back.

"When the American soldier first gets to France," he went on, "he will have a fine time enjoying new scenes for about two days. Then he will begin to be anxious to get up the line, to investigate, to see just what is going on, to get into things. He'll have to curb his impatience for awhile. But while he is going through his training period he will be an ardent souvenir collector. He will get all the souvenirs that he can possibly buy and steal. He will load himself down like a camel—and he won't realize that he can't take those souvenirs home, and that he will have to carry them all about with him for months and months and months. When he has sweated through a few route marches with his load of souvenirs, he'll begin to throw away the least precious of them; and pretty soon the gems of his collection will follow the others into the ditch.

"Before he gets within the sound of the guns he will see a good many airplane fights, and this will increase his desire to get to the line itself. Then when he actually hears the guns he will be all enthusiasm, full of questions. By gradual stages the sound will get louder, until at last he sees the great flare in the sky, hears the tremendous noise right at

NEW IDEAS ABOUT CHILD TRAINING

THE father or mother who doesn't sense in its full meaning the God-given responsibility of bringing up children is making a mistake which may easily lead to everlasting sorrow for both parent and child.

Character is not born but builded. You as a parent are the architect of your child's character—the constructor of its future career, for upon character depends success. Abraham Lincoln, perhaps our greatest American, once said: "All that I am and all that I ever hope to be I owe to my mother." Great men before and since Lincoln have said the same thing, and how truly they spoke!

Reversed methods of training could have turned many a ditch digger into a financier and many a financier into a ditch digger. And this difference is not one of school training but of training right in the home from the time the child is born until it leaves home.

And yet we have never until recently given any really scientific study to this great question. Thousands of parents are daily using wrong methods, which can easily destroy their children's chance of happiness and success. And the pitiful part of it all is that they don't realize the irreparable harm they are doing.

The trouble has always been that we have not searched for the cause of disobedience, the cause of wilfulness, the cause of untruthfulness, and of other symptoms which, if not treated in the right way, may lead to dire consequences. Instead, we punish the child for exhibiting the bad trait, or else "let it go." As a result, we do the child an actual wrong instead of helping it. What we should do is to attack the trouble at its source.

The new system of child training is founded upon the principle that confidence is the basis of control. And the five fundamental principles involved are: suggestion, substitution in choice, parental initiative in cooperation, parental expectation and parental approval.

Under this new system children who have been well nigh unmanageable become obedient and willing, and such traits as bashfulness, jealousy, fear, bragging, etc., are overcome. But the system goes deeper than that, for it instils high ideals and builds character, which is of course the goal of all parents' efforts in child training.

Physical punishment, shouted commands, and other barbarous relics of the old system have no place in this modern school. Children are made comrades, not slaves, are helped, not punished. And the results are nothing short of marvelous.

Instead of a hardship, child training becomes a genuine pleasure, as the parent shares every confidence, every joy and every sorrow of the child, and at the same time has its unqualified respect. This is a situation rarely possible under old training methods.

And what a source of pride now as well as in after years: To have children whose every action shows culture and refinement, perfect little gentlemen and gentlewomen, yet full of childish enthusiasm and spontaneity with all!

To put in practice these new ideas in child training, strange as it may seem, takes less time than the old method. It is simply a question of applying principles founded on a scientific study of human nature, going at it in such a way as to get immediate results without friction.

The founder of this new system is Professor Ray C. Beery, A. B., M. A. (Harvard and Columbia), who has written a complete Course in Practical Child Training. This Course is based on Professor Beery's extensive investigations and wide practical experience, and provides a well-worked-out plan which the parent can easily follow. The Parents' Association, a national organization devoted to improving the methods of child training, has adopted the Beery system and is teaching the course to its members by mail.

An Invitation to Join.

At this time an invitation is being extended to earnest fathers and mothers who would like to join the Association and learn the methods which are proving so universally successful with children of all ages from babyhood to man and womanhood.

Life membership in the Parents' Association—which has no dues—entitles you to a complete course in child training by Professor Beery, in four handsome volumes of approximately 275 pages each. This course must not be confused with the hundreds of books on child training which vagueness and lack of definite and practical applications of the principles laid down. It does not deal in glittering generalities. Instead, it shows exactly what to do to meet every emergency and how to accomplish immediate results and make a permanent impression. No matter whether your child is still in the cradle or is eighteen years old, these books will show how to apply the right methods at once. You merely take up the particular trait, turn to the proper age, and apply the lessons to the child. The younger the child the better. You cannot begin too soon, for the child's behavior in the first few years of life depends on the parent, not on the child.

Membership in the Parents' Association gives you, in addition to the special Four-volume Course in Practical Child Training, the following privileges:

First: Unlimited free use of the Association's advisory service in the solution of perplexing problems in Child Training.

Second: Mail service which will consist of Special Bulletins to be issued from time to time, containing the newest findings of the Association's Board of Experts and relating the experiences in child training of other members of the Association, thus keeping each member informed as to the progress being made in this important and far-reaching work.

Third: Authoritative advice as to the children's books, schools, camps, and all matters pertaining to educational methods.

Fourth: Unlimited free use of the Association's Purchase Service Bureau, through which all educational books, whether school text-books, or books treating on the mental, physical or moral development and training of children, can be purchased. This service will be free and members availing themselves of it will find by comparison of prices, that they secure the benefit of publishers' trade discounts.

Before becoming a member of the Parents' Association you are privileged to examine the four-volume Course in Practical Child Training without the slightest obligation, and without even making a deposit, in order that you may be sure that the work of the Association is along the lines of which you approve, and that the course contains exactly what you want.

Here is the offer the Association is making for a limited time: If you will fill out and mail the application form printed below, without any money, the complete Course in Practical Child Training will be sent by return post on five days' approval. Examine it carefully and then, if you feel you can afford to be without it, send it back and you will owe nothing. If on the other hand, you are as well pleased as the thousands of other fathers and mothers who are turning to it each day for guidance, send only $2 at the end of five days and $2 a month for four months—only $10 in all. On receipt of the first payment you will be enrolled as a member of the Association, and will receive a certificate of membership.

If you are truly anxious to make the greatest possible success of your children's lives, you owe it to them to at least look at this course, which you may do, in accordance with this offer, without risking a penny. You must act promptly, however, as this offer may never be made here again.

are such as not only indelibly to dishonor, but even to imperil, the very life of the nation. And if that life is not worth the saving in a self-respecting and honorable existence, then the lives of none of us are worth saving. These things call for hot resentment and determination to thwart and to punish them. And nothing short of this uncompromising attitude toward such enemies of the Republic, until they have repented and brought forth fruits mete for repentance, can claim recognition before the conscience of the nations as the right sort of the moral passion of patriotism.

Another class of facts is entitled to arouse another form of moral passion which must be heightened to enforce our determination to end this war only in the complete defeat of a Prussianized German Empire. Yet with regard to these facts and their appalling significance the people of the United States are still far too ignorant and indifferent. These concern the Pan Germanic Kultur which developed in the diseased imagination of the Kaiser, which has taken an even more cruel and relentless form in the mind of his eldest son and of the party which he represents, has captured and corrupted the universities and pulpits of the nation, and has been sedulously distilled into the minds of the people, including the school children, and almost the infants in arms, of the entire empire. This Kultur, as a matter both of theory and of practice, makes of the German State, as coming to its head in the God-crowned Prussian King, now hailed Emperor of the German Nation and dictator virtually of all Teutonic peoples, a fetich ideal, that is really to be worshipped and served as above all moral ideals human and divine. It glorifies force; it justifies expressly, in its military and civil code and practice, the use of any means whatever to attain its ends. It is the dream of a world empire to be established at the cost of whatever "frightfulness" seems at any moment in its career or madness and crime desirable to accomplish the result.

Now, when such facts are brought to the attention of the average American citizen his emotions are apt to be those of amusement and incredulity. To his good nature and hard common sense it seems impossible that any intelligent people, such as he has always supposed the Germans in a high degree to be, should indulge itself in so absurd and impracticable notions. Convince him of the truth of these facts and he begins to wonder—not unwarrantably—at the stupidity, in political affairs, of those who entertain them; and he may cherish mild feelings of disgust. But what should be his emotions when he learns that this Kultur has built up the mightiest armies which the world ever knew; was fast building a navy with the express purpose of contesting the control of the seas with the peace-protecting navy of Great Britain—for that is what for more than two generations the British Navy has actually been; has enlisted the services of some of the brightest of scientific minds; has brought under control all of Central Europe and the Empire of Turkey; was on the point of laying an unshakable grip upon the Far East; has taken intelligent account of South America and Mexico; had its spies and promoters selected and bribed in the very midst of us; and had it not been for the battle of the Marne, would, without doubt, have already made the immense stride forward which it planned to make by deliberately initiating this war?

Are not these indisputable facts enough to arouse the emotions of passionate resentment and horror, and the firm determination not to withdraw our hands, or listen to any terms of a compromising peace, until this monstrously immoral system of so-called Kultur, with its coolly adopted and ably argued methods of frightfulness, are forever placed hors du combat? It would seem that the heart which does not respond to this call for the moral passion of a love of human liberty, for the determination that a place for free government still be reserved wherever the people desire it and can prove themselves worthy of it, is not the heart of a true American. But, rather, is not the lack or deficiency of this kind of moral passion far from becoming or safe for those who think themselves entitled and qualified to live under a republic or under any system of a truly democratic Government?

Perhaps less needs to be said, possibly nothing at all, to arouse our people to the moral passions appropriate to the narratives of fact as to the ways in which the Germans have conducted this war. Our allies call them "Huns," and we are fain to dismiss the subject in this way. And, indeed, acquainting one's self with the bare facts is a somewhat awfully dispiriting task; they are so intrinsically incredible, so discreditable to human nature, so disturbing to our traditional confidence in conventional Christianity, and even to our faith in the justice of God. And then they are rendered so intolerably nauseating by the attempts to justify them in the name of a respectable war policy—if, indeed, as we were wont to believe, there is any such thing. And the emotions excited culminate and break in a wave that sounds of despair when we listen to the name of God coupled therewith.

The sane moral consciousness of the modern world deplores the enormous loss of material goods and the incalculable sufferings that are the normal, the inevitable accompaniments of the condition of all wars, whether civil or international. It recognizes the deplorable fact that looting and arson and devastation and killing can never be banished from war, by Hague Conferences or Leagues to Enforce Peace. It longs for the time when mankind shall be ready to beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. It foresees that the progress of the physical and chemical sciences, with all the contributions which they are making to the welfare of mankind in times of peace, are likely also to increase rather than diminish many of the horrors that mankind must endure if they consent to go to war. Therefore, in times of war it accepts many of these extravagances, with deep regret and profound pity.

But this order of feelings does not match the behavior of the Germans and their allies in the conduct of this war. Beginning as they did with the theory that war is the normal and healthy condition of the State, that the German State is subject to no higher law, and that its lawful method is that of frightfulness, they have encouraged or tolerated the rape of women, the bayonetting and mutilating of children, the poisoning of wells and of the cattle of neutral peoples—as in the Bucharest affair—the starving and abuse of prisoners, and the massacre or enslavement of nonbelligerent populations. For such things as these there is need of another degree and kind of moral passion. It must be a fire kindled to an intensity which shall be abated only when these things, whether there be other wars or not, in the near or the remote future, shall no longer be possible for nations that lay the slightest claims to a place among the civilized.

When we come to consider what feelings are appropriate to be entertained and exposed toward those who, in the midst of us, are doing what they well can to make the nation impotent for the playing of its part in the great struggle for righteousness and freedom which now engages pretty much the whole of mankind, the case is not by any means so clear. Certainly, there is danger here in both of two opposite directions. There is danger of indifference and excessive leniency. There is danger of sudden passion and excessive severity.

Certainly, the nation has as much right to persecute, as outlawed, institutions whose aims are the destruction of constitutional liberties—as the aims of the I. W. W.'s are reputed to be—as it has to deal in this way with the Mafia or the organized traffic in the white slave. Certainly, it has also the right to put its hand over the mouths of those who, whether in the Senate Chamber or on the soap box, advocate sedition and resistance to the measures legally authorized for the carrying on of our part as a nation in this universal war. The time has come for individuals as well as peoples to take sides; and they who take one side or the other, however conscientiously, must do so prepared to accept the consequences. But in all such cases the emotions of pity and brotherly kindness may well enough mingle with the sterner feelings of disapprobation and anger.

After more than three years of warfare the Entente Allies now surpass their enemies in numbers, wealth, supply of ammunition and food, and skill in the practice of war. But all this lays the final issue more heavily upon the things of the spirit. No other confession of their own stupidity is more notable on the part of the leaders of the German Empire than that implied in their need to study the psychology (sic) of their enemies.

They calculated that Great Britain would not for "a scrap of paper" enter the war; that the natives of India would revolt; that they could stir the Mohammedan world to a holy war; that little Belgium would not resist; that the United States loved its dollars and feared force so much that it would bear all manner of outrages at their hands; that Japan could be bribed to combine with Mexico, and that China could be bullied to the end of time. They thought, in fine, that all others were like themselves in their psychology! And now that they have discovered their mistake they are relying chiefly on the superior loyalty and indomitable courage and willingness to endure hardship of their own people. For is not the German spirit heaven-high as respects these qualities above that of all other nations? Well, we must match them, we must outdo them in all this. For now the issues of the war depend, more than upon aught else, upon the things of the spirit. It is moral passion which will carry the day at the last.

Against what, or whom, are these moral passions to be directed, in order that they may be fitly and effectively directed? Against the head of the German Empire, the insane dreamer of a dream that he could bring the world to bow to his will, as some would have us suppose? Yes, but not against this man alone. Against an autocratic and militaristic Government, that must be made impotent before the world can be safe for democracy? Yes, but not against this Government alone. If the Germans like it and want it, they have the same right to it that we have to our republican Government. And nothing, it seems to me, can be more unfortunate, or more likely to prolong the war and embarrass a reasonable peace, than to create the impression that our chief aim is to open an impassable gulf between the people and the Government of the German Empire. If they elect to remain political sheep in relation to those who make and keep them sheep, they are not worthy of anything else.

We are fighting a nation that has allowed its Government to convert them into a pack of ravening wolves. We are fighting a Prussianized German Empire, and the Austrians, Hungarians, Turks, and Bulgarians, whom this abominable so-called Kultur and Pan Germanic dream of world empire has attached to itself by a long-continued process of bribery and fear. And we must stir our hearts with the moral passions, with the spirit, that needs to control our warlike preparations and activities until, at whatever sacrifice, the complete and final issue is attained. The world must be made safe against the dominance of the devilish spirit that has enslaved and debased our enemies, and the enemies of mankind. Is it not high time for us as a nation to heed the Homeric maxim and "put might into our rage"; but only if these passions are suffused and controlled by moral principles?

Helps the Children Climb the Peaks of Knowledge

YOUR CHILD AND MY CHILD hold the future in their little hands. Their brains must carry on the work of a world which is about to be made over, and their shoulders must bear its burdens. There has never been a time in the world's history when the future of the child was of such vital importance to the nation. Educators have known for a long time that the school-room is not furnishing the child of today with that practical information, that self-control, and that "desire-to-know" which alone can produce powerful, useful and happy men and women. THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE solves this great problem in the home. It is not a luxury; it is a necessity. It is not an expense; but a saving of time, money, and mistakes.

It gives the child the right start on the road to knowledge. It teaches him the things which he ought to know, and without which he will always be handicapped in the battle of life. It makes the climb up the peak of knowledge easy and delightful.

Your Child Will Grow Up to Thank You

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE is the first practical work of reference for the young, arragned on an entirely new plan, as a series of delightful reading courses in the Great Departments of Knowledge—Science, Astronomy, Physiology, History, Biography, Art and Literature. To this Great Treasure House of important but marvelously interesting information there has been added educational occupations of many kinds. Stories and Poems, Sports and Games. THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE supplements the work of the school, enlarges the life of the home, and gives the child an education that will stand the test of life.

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE educates the child spontaneously. Think what it means to you, father and mother, to know that there has been made for your child a wonderful selection of the important things which he ought to know, written so simply and so delightfully illustrated that your boy and girl cannot possibly resist the magic of its pictured pages. They will go to bed with a volume under their pillows and remember in the morning the pages where they left off reading. It is practical, it is delightful, it is ideal. The years of greatest need are between six and eighteen. Do not keep your child waiting for the help he needs NOW. The home is the greatest educational agency in the world.

MAIL ORDER MEN WANTED.

If you have had definite and successful experience as a buyer of any kind of general merchandise for any of the large successful mail order houses; if you are accustomed to handling a big volume of business in your own line and are thoroughly well grounded in the fundamentals of buying and selling by mail and you would like to join a new company now forming and participate in its organization and development, you are invited to make a written application giving age, details of experience, employers—all of them—for the past ten years and your present salary and position.

This new mail order organization will be directed by a group of skillful mail order men. Its President will be one of the best known, most versatile and capable mail order executives. Its capital will be large, and it is planned to open houses in New York, Chicago and Kansas City. It will offer to men of definite MAIL ORDER experience and achievement such an opportunity as rarely comes in the course of a lifetime, and those who qualify will be given contracts certain to lead to large and steadily increasing financial rewards for ability and service.

Here is an opportunity for you to become a real partner in a big business enterprise. We want REAL ability—we want big-brained, red-blooded men who DO things—who have courage and initiative—whose business vision is not bounded by the narrow horizon of today nor by the present achievements of other mail order houses—and such men we propose to reward most generously.

No matter what your present connection nor how big a man you may be, you may write in perfect confidence and without the slightest danger of jeopardizing your position, as your letter will be read ONLY by the chief executive of the new organization. But it will be a waste of time to write at all unless your MAIL ORDER record squares with our requirements.

REAL LAZINESS IS RARE.

Few Persons Show Disinclination to Bodily and Mental Effort.

The average man does not love work for its own sake. This is a truism, and a truism rather mildly worded. And yet we are convinced that real laziness, real disinclination to bodily or mental effort, is one of the rarest things in the world. Cases of it are unquestionably known to the medical profession and to the poorhouse authorities, but when the cause is not hookworm or anaemia it is usually a too enthusiastic thermometer.

What we call laziness in a healthy human being is something very different. It has nothing to do with lack of energy or love of repose. On the contrary, the boy most inattentive to his lessons is frequently the boy whose inexhaustible energy wearies the life out of his parents and teachers. He hates the Fifth Reader but he will forget supper to finish his paper-bound copy of Dead Eye Dick the King of the Outlaws. He hates to write compositions in class but he finds it no labor to compose squibs satirizing his classmates for the school paper, though the tax on his ingenuity is as great in the latter case as in the former. He does not like drawing lessons but he loves to draw. He grumbles about bringing in wood for supper but he will carry forests to build a bonfire. He finds gymnasium work a bore but he submits to more exacting discipline from his baseball coach than any teacher would dare to impose.

The child is father to the man. The clerk who watches the clock does not long for his day's work to end. He longs for his evening's recreation to begin. If there were nothing else for him to look forward to he would not mind clerking sixteen hours a day rather than face the awful gulf of boredom implied in the words "nothing to do." The business magnate who shuts down his desk at 2:30 does not love office work less but tennis more. The housewife sighs at mending stockings because she wants to sew some fine embroidery which is ten times as difficult. The farmer looks balefully at the garden patch not because he would rather sit in the hammock, but because he would rather go hunting and tramp ten miles of muddy road to kill a rabbit. We ourselves, dear reader, are not so lazy as you might think. While we are sitting at our typewriter we are not thinking how unpleasant it is to write editorials. It is not unpleasant at all. We are thinking how nice it would be to play chess or go swimming or write a book of poems. But you would not buy the poems and we could not make a living writing them unless you did.

Work, then, is not distinguished from play because it involves effort. Were people naturally sluggish of body the manufacturers of sporting goods would go out of business; were they sluggish of mind the editors of puzzle columns in the papers would lose their jobs. Neither is work to be defined as effort for the sake of pay. The slave is not paid nor, at a higher level of work, the man or woman who gives free service for the welfare of the nation or the sake of humanity. Mr. Hoover will lose money by giving his time to the Government, but he has enough work ahead of him to frighten a regiment. Work is purely a comparative term. It may be adequately defined as "anything that one does at a time when he would rather be doing something else." That "something else" may be more difficult, more dangerous, more exhausting, but it must be called "play" since it represents the free choice of the will. Mankind hates work not because it takes strength but simply because it takes time.

Of course, there is a moral to all this. It goes without saying that you should do all the work that your conscience or the state of your bank account requires, especially at a time when the future of civilization depends upon the extent to which the American people put their backs into the war. But if you get a chance to play, don't turn it into work. There is work enough without that.

The world's full of people doing what they don't want to do, not from economic necessity or moral obligation but simply from social servility. They fritter away their lives in paying calls or attending social functions or giving elaborate dinners when life would become a thing of wonder and joy if they ceased trying to "keep up with the Joneses," (to quote a justly popular contemporary,) and spent their leisure as they secretly wish they had the courage and independence to do. College "games" are turned into extra tasks because students slave at them after they have ceased to enjoy them. If the gods have given you a vacation this Summer, in the name of common sense do not waste it doing "what everybody does." It is work to go to the seashore when you prefer the mountains; to go to the roof gardens when you prefer sitting at home and listening to the phonograph; to read Summer fiction when you would rather read metaphysics, (were it not for the fear of being laughed at as a highbrow,) to visit the Adirondacks when you would rather visit Kansas City. Don't fool yourself by labeling it play.—Independent.

WHAT ABOUT WOMEN WHEN WAR ENDS?

Will They Give Up the Posts They Have Taken to Help Their Countries?

MAY BE SEX COMPETITION

Problem, However, May Be Solved on the Basis of Individual Fitness.

So many women have gone into the banks and brokerage houses of New York to take the places vacated by men called to the colors that the circumstance leads the dispatches to take note of it. The same situation has come about in other cities in America in greater or less degree.

The last two decades saw woman take business positions which a few years before she hesitated to consider. In that time woman has come to do about 90 per cent. of the stenography of the country. She has sold most of the goods in department and notion stores. She has done most of the school teaching. She has taken clerkships in banks. In some instances she holds executive positions in corporate organizations. Into almost every business woman has gone. She has entered the professions, law, medicine, journalism, and the ministry, though in all save journalism she has become professional only in a mild form. She has gone into suffrage and now and then holds political office. A comparatively small percentage of business and professional women are married. A comparatively small percentage of those married have children, as in most instances the mother of children naturally retires from business whenever the exigencies of her economic life permit hr.

The most notable movement upon the positions of man has of course occurred in Great Britain, France, and Germany, due to the war's heavy drain upon the man power of those countries. In those countries woman has gone into all lines of work in greater numbers than ever before and assumed onerous and heavy labors which formerly she had not done to any considerable extent.

For three years commentators have been speculating upon the outcome of the new situation in the warring countries as to this phase of it: Who will give way, man or woman, once the soldier returns from the war and bids for work which for three years has been done by woman? The numerical superiority of woman over man will continue to exist for years in those countries. For years it will be necessary for women to work for a stipend. There will not be enough men to marry the surplus of women, to put it bluntly; but all must live and labor. Nonetheless competition between the sexes in European countries is bound to become acute after the war; and yet, like most situations, we fancy this one will solve itself.

In the United States woman, in a sense, is more aggressive than she is in any European country. For years she has been talking about what she calls "economic independence" and "emancipation of sex." Untrained in home economics, undisciplined to labor, accustomed to the comforts which a sometimes prosperous and usually hard-working father has been able to provide, has the American girl not grown restless, dissatisfied, and in addition ambitious to no special purpose? Often she has gone into the business world when the necessities of the family purse did not require it. She has too often avoided marriage, thus depriving herself of the interests and satisfaction of a settled home life.

Already intrenched in business, by invitation and acquiescence of man, the war is beginning to strengthen woman's position in the business world, and as the war grows older, the stronger will her position become, the more indispensable will her labor become. Being somewhat "aggressive," as we have said, it is not probable that the American woman, now taking man's place in so many instances, will readily and willingly yield back his post "when Johnny comes marching home."

We are fortunate in the fact that woman is prepared and ready to take up so much of man's work as she is fitted to do while he is away on an important errand; yet it is interesting, if not profitable, to speculate upon the outcome of the inevitable rivalry between units of the sexes when normal conditions are restored. It will be difficult for woman immediately to adjust herself to her ante-war condition and relinquish the position of advantage which necessity and opportunity gave her. On the other hand, fundamentally man is the bread-winner, and when he returns from war he is going to ask for his former place at the same old stand.

Here, as in Europe, the situation will probably adjust itself with a fair degree of equity, the fit woman holding a place in the "working" world, the fit man holding his, with the unfit of both sexes falling out of the ranks to go their way and live the best they may. —Montgomery Advertiser.

SOLDIERING CHANGES MAN.

Once Shaken Into Khaki He Sets Aside His Former Life.

Soldiering changes the point of view. A man worries about becoming a soldier. He may lose a good deal of weight thinking about it. If he is a man with responsibilities, especially with family cares, he is fairly certain to put in a great deal of hard study and undergo a deal of mental travail over the prospect of being seized and thrown into a uniform and made to offer his life without question or the opportunity to object. But after he has been shaken into khaki and spent a few weeks in the field he undergoes, unconsciously, a great mental change. He forgets what it was he worried about. He sets aside all his former life. It seems to become, in a large measure, something that never existed as directly concerning him, something he knew of in the life of another man, but that had no personal interest.

The new environment has much to do with the psychological change. A man is taken from a city desk and thrown into outdoor life. He is made to work with his muscles, and soon becomes much interested in finding new muscles that he had forgotten all about or never knew he had. He becomes physically fit, and that has a great deal to do with his mental trim.

There is a pleasure in being in good physical condition that will make a man happy who has all the other conditions required to be completely miserable. It is hard to be in robust health and suffer severe mental anguish for any protracted period. Healthy men do not die from love.

Moreover, all the conditions of life are so different from what he has been accustomed to that his thoughts take a new angle. He becomes a species of Robinson Crusoe in company with thousands of others. He learns to wait on himself instead of being waited on, to be ashamed of complaining or of doing less than other men. And he learns to let efficiency be its own reward, to be proud of being efficient and ask no pay.

I knew a soldier in the French army who had been three times cited in general orders. He was entitled to wear the croix de guerre with three palms, but he sported no decoration.

"Why don't you wear your medal?" I asked him.

"The soldiers at the front don't need medals," he answered. "It is the ones at the rear who have to have them."

There is more than the mere change of environment that brings the change in the soldier's viewpoint, that makes him cast aside the small things that seemed so important in the days before. A man can go on a camping trip and get much the same change in environment, yet take all his worries with him and bring them all back again. But if he becomes a soldier he undergoes strict discipline, and day after day a new habit of thought is drilled into him. The old thoughts are forced out by the harsh-voiced, quick-speaking Drill Sergeant. He is lined up anew mentally by the new duties he has undertaken. These do not allow of the interference of business worries, and the chief of them is to go cheerfully to the Great Adventure, to offer his life automatically.—Fred B. Pitney, in Leslie's.

MAY USE FISHSKIN IN MAKING FOOTWEAR

All the Oceans Being Searched for Hides Fit to Serve in Place of Leather.

BOSTON IS EXPERIMENTING

Slippers Constructed of Sharkskins to be Offered for This Year's Holiday Trade.

Fish skins for the feet are sought in the seven seas—a quest that is already considerably interesting Boston, as the nation's leading leather mart and the world's second fishing centre.

A few of the tough hides of the myriad sharks that swarm in all oceans are being tanned experimentally at Peabody this Summer to make slippers for the season of holiday gifts. More of them may be required later. A representative of the National Bureau of Fisheries is circulating among the tanners of this section to tell them of new sources of leather, developed at Washington. A Danish inventor has patented in the United States his scheme caught sharks of the deep, and one of some of the roughest hides of hairless sea monsters. The New England Shoe and Leather Association quotes the authority of Sir Ernest Shackleton as favoring an effort, already begun in a tentative way, to get valuable skins from the antarctic. Even the financial sharks have become alert to the chance of selling to unwary investors the uncaught sharkes of the deep, and one of the trade journals is already warning its readers against concerns that are promising huge dividends from the tanning of fishskins! If the war continues, and hides grow still scarcer, companies very likely will be promoted on the Boston Curb to capitalize the leather-making possibilities of the sea serpent.

Why this eagerness to draw tough skins from Neptune's salt pickle is easily explained by the world's present live-stock situation, becoming more critical month by month. While the armies of Christendom are eating more meat than the pampas normally produce, they are simultaneously wearing out shoe leather faster than it grows on the backs of cattle, sheep or pigs. The Food Administration at Washington has lately given out figures that show a decrease of 115,000,000 meat-making animals since the war began. The hides as well as the steaks and chops of most of these creatures have by now gone into the discard, and the wherewithal to replace them is not in sight—unless the Old Man of the Sea can be induced to give up out of his abundance of untanned skins.

Fishskins in the trade mean the hides of sea mammals as well as of some of the largest species of fish. The scaly skins of cod, halibut and mackerel, landed at South Boston, it should be said, are not yet under consideration of practical tanners; though it must have occurred to everybody who has ever tried to take the hide off a two-pound pout that here is a leather out of which boots might be built. The idea at present is to discover whether a limited but helpful supply cannot be developed from marine leathers whose qualities are already fairly well known. It is, therefore, thus far, mostly the promoters who are talking of skinning Nahant pollock and flounders as first aid to the industries at Woburn and Peabody. There is a suspicion that it is the public's skin they are after first and foremostly.

Sharks and skates, found everywhere in the seas in well-nigh limitless numbers, are naturally the first thought when it is a question of helping out the dwindling consignments of "packer" and "country" hides. There are sections of the southern Atlantic where with a stout hook and heavy line you can in a morning pile the deck of a windjammer deep with the unlovely corpses of man-eating sharks. On the Florida and Bahama Keys the sharker already pursues one of the recognized specialties of the fishing industry. It has not heretofore been held very profitable, but an increased demand for the product would probably result in more efficient methods of taking and flaying the brutes.

Shagreen, certainly, the remarkably tough hide of several species of shark, is no novelty in the leather world, though its usefulness up to now has never been what force of circumstances may later cause it to be. The skin of most sharks is covered by fine and closely set spines of papillae which give it the roughness that made it valuable to the oldtime cabinet maker as a sandpaper. A hard leather, assuredly, to handle, and it is a good knife that will go into a full-grown shark's skin without turning its edge. Applied science, however, has solved many a similar difficulty, and quite likely as an abundance of shark skins from Jamaica and Miami becomes assured the Bay State tanners will find ways of economically preparing commercial leathers from the outer covering of the wolves of the sea. In the increasing scarcity of alligator skins it becomes the suit case manufacturer's last hope, for it is said to be nearly ideal box and trunk leather.

How the quest for other sea hides is forward at the antipodes is apparent from passages in an interesting unofficial report received the other day by Secretary Thomas F. Anderson of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, from Clarence E. Bosworth of this city, commercial agent of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, who is making a two years' study of opportunities in Australasia and the Far East.

In his letter, after describing a very rough passage from New Zealand to Australia on a ship which had the distinguished explorer, Sir Ernest Shackleton, as one of its passengers, Mr. Bosworth writes:

"You will notice that Sir Ernest was a fellow-passenger. It was my good fortune to be introduced to him, and, strange to say, he had already heard of me and my work, and was intensely interested. We talked hides and skins several times coming over, and he told me after questioning of several of the animals in the antarctic which, I should think, according to his description, would make good leather.

"Mails, of course, do not run very often to the Never-Never, so I took the matter into my own hands, and wrote to a manager of one of the whaling stations down there without waiting to get permission from the department, and asked to have several skins of the Weddell seal, the sea elephant, and pieces of the blue and hump-backed whale sent North for experiment. A batch of these skins was sent North once, but they gathered fragrance on the way and were worthless when they arrived in England. I gave explicit direction for preparing them for shipment, and I think they will probably come through all right. I have, of course, written to the department concerning this, and told them what to do with the skins after they arrive. Sir Ernest informs me that there are thousands of these animals down there, and that the cost of securing them is not high. I do not anticipate too much, but it is quite possible this will open up a new source of raw stock for certain purposes."

The Southern sea elephant (Macroshinus augustirostris) mentioned by Mr. Bosworth will probably be said by naturalists to afford the best chance among these antarctic fauna of helping the Boston bagmaker to save the department stores' gasoline or the downtown cobbler in his humble task of halfsoling the shoes of a nation, even though they will regret the likelihood that this largest surviving seal may become as extinct through overfishing as is his cousin of the Northern Pacific, found by the original settlers to be abundant on the California coast, but now as rare as the dodo.

The arctic fisheries are already so well developed that the informant does not expect any quantities of heretofore unused leather from Greenland or Nova Zembla. The walrus, great tusked fellows, among whom Mr. Longyear's Spitzbergen specimen at the Natural History rooms was once a leader, has been hunted for generations about as closely as is possible without causing the species to disappear altogether, and the hides as well as the tusks have been regularly used by the Russians and Scandinavians for leather. The same statement is believed to be true of the narwhale and of the arctic seals, not to say those of the Newfoundland floes which make leather wallets for the civilized world. The universal porpoise will continue, as now, to yield a tough hide admirable for cutting up into shoe laces.

What is evident thus far is that the tanners are looking with new interest upon leathers from the sea that may to some extent supplement the cowhides, sheepskins, pigskins, goatskins, and kangaroo pelts which they are accustomed to handle. To investigate just such possibilities the Tanners' Institute is about to establish, probably in New York City, a "leather research institute," under the direction of J. B. Churchill, a graduate in 1899 of the Lawrence Scientific School of Harvard University, who has lately been connected with the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research at Pittsburgh.—F. O. Cornish in Boston Transcript.

JUGGLING WITH TIME

Poor Business for Those Who Wish to Become Successful.

Juggling with time is an outstanding fault of the average man, particularly in those days when youth is still in bloom and life seems all in the making. It is a fault that is common to most of us, and while perhaps inexperience in the ways of the world may be some excuse it is not one that will hold good throughout later years. It takes us so long at times to make up our minds as to what we wish to do; we think about all the time that lies before us as though it is ours to command and we procrastinate the effort to concentrate our energies upon the accomplishment of some worthy work. We hear others say that they would accomplish definite results if they had the ability, and after a while we, too, fall into the habit of saying and believing these words as applied to ourselves.

We waste time while we wait for genius to burn; we settle down to indifferent and mediocre lives while we watch for our talents to develop. In other words, we deliberately throw away hours and days because we have no definite end in view, and therefore no real incentive to do service that is worth while. How can we tell what we are able to do, however, unless we make a determined effort to find out? It may be that we shall fail many times before we discover the right line in which to direct our abilities, but at least the time so occupied will not be willfully wasted, and even through failure we learn many things which will aid us in future attempts.

The idea in life must be to make each waking hour tell if we hope to get the best results. It may be that necessity forces us to certain duties that occupy most of our time and consequently we are left only with small bits here and there which we can with any certainty say belong to us. It is in our use of these odds and ends of time, as it were, that we improve or deteriorate, yet there are so few of us who recognize this fact. Of course we cannot apply ourselves unceasingly to the attainment of any object; we must make allowance for the natural interruptions which come into all our lives as well as for periods of rest and recuperation, but notwithstanding such conditions there are yet, as a rule, a few opportunities here and there for self-improvement which the sincere worker after results cannot afford to pass by.

We may throw away many of the material things in life and perhaps in some cases be the better off, but we cannot afford to throw away a day out of the comparatively few at best that may remain to us. Each day carries its own story of good or evil, of success or failure, of happiness or unhappiness. We know this in our hearts, yet many times we refuse to read the record because we are afraid of what we may see written there. It may be that the score after all is not so black that it may not be washed white, nor yet so futile that hope may not rise from its depths, not yet again so unhappy that our hearts may not sing again. We throw away those days also that we deliberately permit to pass by devoid of at least one good impulse, or thought, or deed. Each day possesses its own values, and in undertaking to study them we often discover opportunities and possibilities which we would otherwise pass by. There is worthy achievements possible each day of our lives, but for the most part we are indifferent to this fact and are content to drift from one day to the other without the encouragement which comes to those who at least have tried to do their best.

The man who is content to imitate others without ever trying to develop his own powers is not the man who may confidently expect the kind of success that counts. Because a person is convinced that he is not a genius it does not follow that he cannot develop marked ability of a character destined to bring him sure success provided he has the courage and the will to do it. It is better by far to make a serious effort to attain our ambitions, even if in doing so we fall below the goal we have set. At least we have done the best we could and that is something even though it is not quite enough to achieve the desired results. A little more time devoted to our purpose, a little more experience in the battlefields of life, a little more courage and perseverance and determination—and most of us would be able to win the success we covet, and to make each hour of each day tell their own story of faithful effort.—Charleston News and Courier.

BIG DEBT TO THE ARMY.

Ex-Soldier Tells How His Military Experience Helped Him.

I think that, of all the experiences and adventures I have had in my life thus far, those I gleaned during my fourteen months in the regular army have had the most profound effect in shaping my destiny.

The recruiting posters will tell you that a year in the army will teach your boy courage. It will. Also, it will teach him how to die, and in teaching him this it will teach him how to live. And he will learn how to obey, in order that in the later battle of life he may know how to command; it will teach him democracy, and if, after he has learned to defend his country and himself, he is called upon to make practical use of his education for the benefit of posterity, he will learn tenderness and manliness and how to sacrifice without thinking about it.

Yes, all pacifists to the contrary notwithstanding, he will learn these things, even while killing his fellow-man. And if you show me a man who has been through active service and is now a pacifist and denies this statement, I will take the short end of a modest bet that his record in the War Department archives will prove him a malingerer, on sick report when he wasn't in the guardhouse for being a dirty, careless, inefficient soldier.

Military service in the United States Army is a real job with variegated details, many of them unpleasant to some natures, but none of them degrading, and the army is the finest school in the world for teaching a boy courage, self-reliance, cleanliness and efficiency.—Peter B. Kyne, in American Magazine.

SWINDLING BOOTLEGGERS.

They Play a Confidence Game in Dry-as-a-Bone Oregon.

No one will sympathize with the illicit buyer of whisky who uncorks his bottle in thirsty anticipation, only to find that it is filled with cold tea. For one thing, this subterfuge of bootleggers is almost as old as the hills. It no more ought to fool a reader of the day's news than the ancient gold brick or sick engineer swindle.

The operation of the scheme has been standardized. It is always the same. The purveyor offers the customer a bottle of "tea," and winks knowingly. The deal is made and the party of the second part some time thereafter is highly indignant because he got precisely what he contracted for.

The buyer, of course, knew in the beginning that he was making himself party to a violation of the law. If he had been law-abiding, he would not have been cheated. It is so with most confidence games. The fellow who puts up his money for a supposed bunch of "green goods," guaranteed to defy detection, thinks he is going to make some "easy money." At heart he is as much a lawbreaker as the man who swindles him. He sometimes pays a high price for experience, but it is worth the price if it teaches him that lawbreaking, from any angle, seldom pays in the end.

Anyway, it is better to drink tea than booze—particularly bootleg booze. Tea is the classical cup that cheers but does not inebriate. But there is no necessity for paying bootleg prices for it.

FIRST EXPLORER OF GRAND CANYON

Achievement of James White Set Forth in Senate Document.

MADE THE VOYAGE IN 1867

Nearly Starved, Was Rescued from the Raft Upon Which He Lived for Fourteen Days.

A Government publication of more than usual local interest is Senate Document No. 42, just issued under resolution adopted June 4, 1917, being an article by Thomas F. Dawson, who gives the credit of first traversing the Grand Canyon of the Colorado to James White, a Colorado gold prospector, who it is claimed made the voyage two years previous to the expedition under the direction of Major J. W. Powell in 1869. The local interest lies in the fact that the rescue of White, nearly starved, naked, semi-delirious and emaciated almost beyond human resemblance, from the raft upon which for fourteen days he had been swept along the perilous channel, was made by residents of the river town of Callville, a settlement of "Mormons" at the head of navigation of the mighty stream, in what is now Nevada.

Old residents of Utah will remember, and readers of the State's early history will have learned, that half a century and more ago a not inconsiderable commerce between San Francisco and this city was carried on via this roundabout route—by freight teams Callville-Salt Lake, and by barges, scows, sailing vessels and steamers San Francisco-Callville. Only a few weeks since, in the regular department of The Saturday News having the caption "Fifty Years Ago," mention was made of the exploration, by a party from St. George, Utah, of a part of the river hitherto believed to have been untraversed by white men.

But that voyage, though not without its perils, was not to be compared with White's terrible trip. These Utahans floated or poled their way down from somewhere near the mouth of the Grand Wash. He launched his raft several hundred miles further up, if not on the Grand River above its junction with the Green to form the Colorado, at least immediately below that junction, and certainly far above the point where the San Juan comes in. It was on the 25th of this month, fifty years ago, that White and one companion, having been attacked by Indians, who had killed the third member and leader of the party, sought escape by trusting themselves to the mercies of the treacherous stream; and it was on the 8th of September that White alone—his companion having been washed overboard and drowned at one of the many rapids encountered during the fearful journey, found succor at the Callville settlement. His was not the first craft from "up river" to meet the eyes of those settlers, the St. George party having preceded him by several months. But he, according to Mr. Dawson's showing, was the first to have traversed the long 500-mile stretch of the pitiless stream through the gigantic gorge that is truly one of the wonders of the world.

Mr. Dawson justifies the putting forth of the claim to this honor in behalf of White, by the fact that the Government monument to Major Powell, at the brink of the Grand Canyon, has raised anew the question as to whether the distinction conferred upon that officer should not be shared with another. The statements made in pamphlet, and the conclusions reached, will undoubtedly be challenged, but they appear on their face to be well founded. Mr. White is still living in Trinidad, Col., or was a month ago.

But, technically speaking, the Powell monument sets up no claim which anybody will attempt to contest. It refers to the indomitable one-armed officer as "The first explorer" of the Grand Canyon. It cannot be claimed for White that he "explored" the gorge.—Deseret News.

REVIVAL OF SAUERKRAUT.

Quite Probable in View of the Extraordinary Crop of Cabbage.

In view of the prospect of a much larger crop of cabbage than usual this year, the Agricultural Department at Washington pointed out the desirability of reviving the domestic art of making the confection known as sauerkraut a means of conserving the food supply of the country. It is declared that sauerkraut is an excellent food product, which can be prepared at a trifling cost, and will prove an extremely valuable contribution to the coming Winter's table supplies.

During recent years the manufacture of sauerkraut has been confined chiefly to large establishments, in which certain so-called refinements have been introduced. Scarcity of cabbage has in some years made the price of the refined article almost prohibitory in the case of the average family. Hence the domestic art of manufacturing it has languished somewhat. Strangely enough, this food has come to be classed, in the higher-priced restaurants, as a luxury.

As a matter of fact, with cabbage selling at reasonable prices, sauerkraut is one of the most economical of the food products which lend themselves to domestic preservation for future use. Given a simple and cheap cabbage slicer, a few heads of sound cabbage, and a tall stone crock, an hour or two's labor will provide enough of the preserved cabbage to garnish the table for many weeks. Indeed, many amateur city gardeners have raised sufficient cabbage on their own premises to furnish an abundant supply of sauerkraut for the entire Winter.

The German origin of this food commodity need not enter into the equation. Its wholesomeness has been recognized by the experts of the Federal Department of Agriculture, and its foreign origin probably will not be a detriment.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Unrepentant Tennessee.

Rehoboth meetings closed with but little interest manifested. The Rev. Banks pounded at satan's strong walls of moving-picture shows and social cold drinks, but to no avail.—Tennessee State Gazette.

Unprofitable.

There may be advantages in being a Senator, but, on the other hand, one has to listen to La Follette's speeches.—Charleston News and Courier.

Tenant Buys Six-Story John Street Building Adjoining Nassau Street Corner.

TRADE FOR HARKNESS HOME

Samuel Untermyer Gives a Broad Street Parcel for Fifth Avenue Corner—Suburban Sales.

An important lower New York sale was closed yesterday in the John and Nassau Street centre, which has been productive of considerable activity recently. The six-story business building at 26 John Street, adjoining the southwest corner of Nassau Street, was purchased by E. P. Reichhelm & Co., manufacturers of jewelers' supplies and a tenant of the building. The firm has been in the vicinity for forty years.

The property formerly belonged to Thomas W. Evans, the American dentist who practiced in Paris. After his death it passed to the Thomas W. Evans Museum and Institute Society, which sold it to the sellers, Frederick M. Hilton and others, who erected the building. It is the second piece of property on John Street sold within a week to a tenant for occupancy. A feature of the deal was that the sellers took Liberty Bonds for the greater part of the payment.

Cammann, Voorhees & Floyd represented the purchasers, and William A. White & Sons the sellers. The assessed value is $125,000, of which $100,000 is land value.

Broad Street Plot in Trade for Harkness House.

Samuel Untermyer was the buyer of the former Charles W. Harkness residence at the southeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fourth Street, 28.5 by 125, the sale of which was announced last week. The property was originally purchased by an unnamed investor through the brokerage firm of Edward P. Hamilton & Co., and the resale to Mr. Untermyer was made through a Fifth Avenue agency. In part payment Mr. Untermyer gave the two four-story buildings at 82 and 84 Broad Street, 51 by 104 and irregular, adjoining the Merchant Marine Exchange, between Stone and Marketfield Streets. This property figured in the deal at about $325,000.

Negotiations are pending for the lease of the former Harkness house for business uses.

Joseph Paterno Buys Newark Corner.

Joseph Paterno, the Manhattan apartment house builder and operator, has purchased in Newark the property on the Southeast corner of Market and Halsey Street, 50 by 50, from the Prudential Insurance Company. Title will be taken in the name of the Halmark Realty Corporation. There are leases on the building on the plot until 1920. The Prudential Company took the property at foreclosure about eighteen months ago to satisfy a mortgage of $213,000. The new purchasers have given a mortgage to the Prudential for the same amount. The property was held at about $300,000.

Feist & Feist were the brokers in the sale.

It is a brownstone residence on the West side of North Mountain Avenue, covering a plot of 100 by 200 feet. The house was built in 1786 for Joseph Munn, a Captain in the Revolutionary Army. It was purchased and improved in 1910 by the seller, Mr. Carr. The holding price was $18,000.

EAST RIVER IMPROVEMENT

Will Open Up Hundreds of Acres to Development.

A shore area development that has been visioned by the Bronx Board of Trade for many years will be realized, at least in part, now that the President has signed the 1917 River and Harbor bill.

In that bill there is a "preparedness" item included through the activities of the representative from the Bronx-Harlem district, the Hon. Murray Hulbert, aided by the Administration, which provides for a forty-foot channel in the East River from the Brooklyn Navy Yard to Long Island Sound.

It is a depth of channel that will permit of the East River being utilized in routing transoceanic and coastwise shipments on the largest steamships afloat, providing, as it does, a second and most valuable entrance to and exit from the Port of New York for such vessels.

A double entrance to the port of New York, one of which utilizes the East River, constituting it a part of a transoceanic or even a coastal route, the Bronx Board of Trade urges, will have a marked effect upon the development of the waterfront areas of the Bronx. This will come from the fact that the East River route will be the one more favored by navigators.

The most important reason for this is the fact that the route to the port of New York via Montauk Point, Long Island Sound, and the East River, will cut off from ninety to one hundred and fifty miles from a trip, which may mean a saving of from four to six hours in time and which will, in many cases, mean a gain in subsidies and an increase in freight tonnage for the lines making use of that route.

The natural result will be that the tortuous channel from Sandy Hook will be used less and steamship companies now docking along the lower bay and in the lower city, with their congestion of water traffic and street traffic, will be attracted to the Bronx, with its improved transit and freight facilities and great water-front areas, suited for any such terminal development as they may desire to make.

TO ENLARGE ARMORY.

Plans Completed for Rebuilding Old Park Avenue Structure.

Members of Troop A who went South last week will have a big armory of their own when they return from the war. Their present home on Madison Avenue, Ninety-fourth and Ninety-fifth Streets, will be enlarged and carried over to Park Avenue to take in the old home of the Eighth Coast Artillery, which recently removed to its new armory in the Bronx.

Plans for the reconstruction of the old armory have been completed by Pilcher & Tachau for the armory board, and are now in the hands of contractors for bids which are to be submitted in the near future.

The money for the reconstruction, $280,000, has been appropriated by the city, and with favorable bids the work will be undertaken in the near future.

According to the plans, the architects have provided for the razing of the administration building on the Park Avenue end of the block, and its site will be used to carry over it the drill shed, installing four new roof arches and an end truss at Park Avenue. This will permit the extension of the drill shed so that it will have an area 200 by 300 feet when completed.

The present drill floor of wood is laid on solid rock. This makes excavating too costly, so the architects have planned to replace it with cement and build galleries on the north and south sides of the building about two feet above the gallery floor with seats stepping upward. There will also be built stalls for 400 horses. Above the drill floor there will be introduced another dirt floor of reinforced concrete, with a gallery at the Park Avenue end high enough to permit the troopers to ride about freely.

Building Still Shows Decreases.

While it is still too early to generalize, it may be stated as an encouraging feature in the building trade that the September total of value is a shade larger than that of August, and when all returns are in it is probable that the grand total for the month may show a gain over July as well. The point to this observation, according to Bradstreets, is that heretofore every month since March had shown a progressive decrease in the aggregate value from that of the preceding month.

Compared with September a year ago, however, a very considerable decrease is shown and, while the falling off is not so great as in either July or August, the volume of decrease is such as would ordinarily make the month notable.

That the decreasing tendency is not checked may be gathered from the fact that the number of permits in September has fallen off in a greater degree than have values, and this is all the more notable because there is general complaint of scarcity of accommodation for renters noted at a number of cities.

Private Dwelling Leases.

Berghaus; also, for the Brenen estate to Harris Parr, the dwelling at 2 West Seventy-fifth Street, and for John J. Sweeney the dwelling at 242 West Seventy-second Street to M. E. and A. Wickware.

Douglas L. Elliman & Co. have leased, furnished, the five-story dwelling at 35 East Fifty-first Street for Gerald M. Borden to Dr. M. Allen Starr, and for Mrs. Harold Barclay, her dwelling at 68 East Fifty-sixth Street, furnished, to Bayard Dominick.

The Houghton Company has leased the dwelling at 253 West 102d Street for Ada Schwab to John Kussera.

Plans for New Assay Building.

Final plans for the new four-story stone and brick Assay Building, at Wall and Nassau Streets, have been completed for the United States Government, Treasury Department, Washington, D. C., by York & Sawyer, Manhattan architects. James A. Wetmore, Treasury Department, Washington, D. C., is supervising architect. The proposed building will cost about $807,000, and has been contemplated for a long time.

STATEN ISLAND WATERFRONT DEVELOPMENT DEEPER CHANNEL URGED ON WEST SHORE

Industrial Concerns Asked to Submit Views for Future Improvements to Army Board by Nov. 1.—Thirty-foot Channel Required for Adequate Shipping Facilities Between Upper and Lower Bay.

A REQUEST has been issued from the Army Board of Engineers in this city to all of the commercial interests using the Staten Island Sound and neighboring waters on the west shore of Staten Island as well as to the industrial concerns on the New Jersey side to submit before Nov. 1 their views regarding the prospective deepening of the channel from the lower to the upper bay to thirty feet at mean low water. This action is the direct result of the hearing held last November before the Army Board, presided over by Colonel McKinstrey, to obtain the views of the big shipping and commercial interests using the channel as to the best methods for future development.

This Staten Island section is one of the most important waterfront areas in the port of New York, and efforts to improve its shipping facilities have been a subject of discussion for many years. The Government has recognized its importance and considerable work has been done in the last four years. With the industrial growth of the United States and the expansion of its export business, in addition to the imperative needs exemplified by the war, proper all around development of the port of New York is beginning to receive the attention for which many advocates have been looking for many years.

The waterfront of the Kill van Kull and Staten Island Sound has taken on increased importance recently with the location there of many new industries of large proportions. Others are ready to go, but in several cases have been prevented owing to the fact that their ships could not come up to the piers on the inland waters owing to the lack of sufficient channel depth.

The most important fact brought out at the hearing last year was that a mean low water depth of thirty feet was essential for the proper development of these inland waters. At present the channel is deepened to twenty-five feet from the upper bay, at the entrance to the Kill van Kull, nearly opposite Constable Hook, to within a short distance of Shooters' Island. In some places this channel has a depth of thirty feet, but a number of rocky projections remain to be blasted out to give a continuous thirty-foot depth. The immediate completion of this part of the channel to that depth is urged by the Staten Island Sound Deep Waterway Association, representing practically all of the industrial interests there and many other commercial and shipping firms whose business expansion is largely dependent upon the improvement of the Kill van Kull and Staten Island Sound.

Of the three distinct improvement projects undertaken by the Government the lower bay channel leading into Staten Island Sound has been completed. This gives a twenty-one-foot channel 800 feet wide, across the shoals and flats of Raritan Bay, near Seguine Point and Ward's Point, just below Tottenville, which is opposite Perth Amboy, practically at the entrance to Staten Island Sound or the Arthur Kill.

The second project is for a channel 25 feet deep and 400 feet wide with a suitable turning basin of the same depth near the mouth of Fresh Kills, from Perth Amboy to deep water in Kill van Kull near the east end of Shooters' Island. This has been completed from deep water in Kill van Kull to the vicinity of Fresh Kills with the exception of certain rock areas uncovered by the hydraulic dredges, and which are now under contract for removal.

The third project is for a channel about one mile in length, 300 feet wide and 16 feet deep north of Shooters' Island and to connect the main channel of Arthur Kill on the Sound with that of Newark Bay. This project provides for the removal of two middle grounds, one at the site of the old Corner Stake Light, the other in the main channel of Newark Bay, northeast of Shooters' Island, and for the removal of a part of Bergen Point Reef. This work is practically finished except for the removal of a small rock area near Bergen Point, and funds are available to complete the 25-foot channel to the vicinity of Ploughshare Point, Perth Amboy.

The present survey of these inland channels connecting the upper and lower bays, was authorized by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers last February and its object is to determine the cost of increasing the depth and width of the channels so as to meet the purposes of commerce. To act wisely on the matter, the Army engineers are asking, among other things, for information as to the necessary depth needed for commerce there for the next ten years, the prospective increase in view of such an improvement, the possibility of freight reductions if vessels drawing twenty-eight feet of water could come up to the piers.

Percival G. Ullman, Jr., who has been identified with many important waterfront sales to industrial firms, said in connection with this phase of the port development:

"The importance of the width and depth of the channel should be measured largely by the commerce that passes through the Kill van Kull, as well as in the interests of navigation. The lower part of Staten Island Sound, better known as the Kill van Kull, is narrow between shore lines, about 400 feet. I believe the channel at those points should be widened from shore to shore. It should also be straightened. From a point east of Fresh Kills River for a considerable distance, owing to the contour of the shore line and shoal water and the distance from the New Jersey to the Staten Island shore, it would, I believe, be possible to build 1,000-foot piers. Conditions would warrant the building of such piers out into the stream without any detriment to the stream as a whole.

"The growth and development of the Staten Island Sound is amply reflected on the New Jersey side, not only in the large manufacturing interests there, but in the great amount of tonnage that is carried almost wholly from the Jersey side. There is no reason why we should not be able to transport from the Staten Island side, in the development of our manufacturing sites, an equal amount of tonnage, but we cannot hope to do that unless we have deep water and railroad facilities, but, most of all, deep water."

Edward S. Savage of the Staten Island Sound Deep Waterway Association said at the hearing before Colonel McKinstrey:

"Give us thirty feet and we will show an improvement on that waterway greater than now in evidence. The manufacturing industries are not local; they gather their material from all parts of the country and they transship it to all parts. We ask for this improvement, not locally, but nationally. The prime thing is to establish a waterway of sufficient draft to bring to this port and to this waterway vessels of all drafts, and the Government cannot spend its money to better advantage than by this improvement of making a thirty-foot channel of sufficient width from the sea to New York bay."

E. B. Ashby, Chief Engineer of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, in explaining the selection of Constable Hook for the railroad's new terminal development, said:

"That terminal would not have been placed at Constable Hook if we could have obtained sufficient water elsewhere, for the reason that it was essentially for ore. The probabilities are that the tonnage will be double at Constable Hook what it would be at Perth Amboy, but it brings out the fact that Perth Amboy, if it had thirty-five feet of water, would attract a big development all along there."

W. A. Walker, representing the Interocean Oil Company, which has a large plant of Carteret said that it was necessary if oil were brought up in deep draft ships to use lighters in discharging the cargo.

"It becomes a matter," he added, "of finding out that our plant at Carteret cannot compete with plants at other places where they have deep water because of transportation being high. We have brought ships in drawing twenty-three feet and that necessarily means that we have to bring them up at high water and must wait for high water. We advocate a channel through Raritan Bay 1,200 feet wide and 30 feet deep, and up through the Arthur Kill in Staten Island Sound 400 feet wide and 30 feet deep."

Other industrial concerns, especially those in the lower section south of Newark Bay to Perth Amboy and Tottenville, have been handicapped in a similar manner in the expansion of their business as a result of the inadequate shipping facilities.

"The tendency today in shipping either by railroad or steamship," said Floyd S. Corbin, who has made a study of port development problems for many years, "is to ship in large units. Larger boats are constantly being required for the shipping business in New York, and the lack of a 30-foot channel between Staten Island and New Jersey is actually driving prospective concerns away from New York. To get deep water for their ships they are obliged to go to New England, Baltimore, Philadelphia, &c. The improvement to the Staten Island Channel have shown very readily what are the sure possibilities of the future to the industrial growth of New York with facilities, the need of which has been intensified by the new conditions forced upon us as a result of the war."

The tonnage that went through this Staten Island waterway in 1916 was approximately 37,000,000 tons, representing nearly $1,000,000,000 in value, an encouraging increase over 1915, with a business tonnage of but 32,400,000, valued at $520,000,000.

HAVE MANHATTAN REALTY VALUES REACHED THEIR PEAK?

Have Manhattan realty values reached their peak? What effect will the opening of the new subways have upon them? Will they increase or decrease?

These three questions are the subject of almost daily discussion among realty men. Opinions vary greatly. Two weeks ago Charles F. Noyes answered the questions in these columns from a downtown standpoint.

He predicted a revival of activity in lower Broadway and in the old wholesale districts and increased valuations. His prediction was, in a measure, fulfilled last week by the sale of the old A. T. Stewart Building at Broadway and Chambers Street, which was sold to Frank A. Munsey for about $3,500,000. This antiquated structure has been an eyesore to the district for years, its Broadway stores being unoccupied for months at a time, and many of the upper floors being vacant and badly kept. A modern skyscraper is planned for the site by the new owner and this, coupled with the opening of the new Broadway subway, is believed by many to be the beginning of the rejuvenation of New York City's oldest and most famous thoroughfare.

A. T. Stewart is said to have done more to retard the natural growth and business importance of Broadway than any one man in the history of New York. For years he fought against the laying of car tracks on Broadway. He was at the head and front of the opposition against a car line in the early sixties, and this, it is claimed, eventually led to the permanent shifting of trade further uptown to districts better supplied with transit facilities. The first break was made to Fourteenth Street, when several big department stores located there, and then he was finally forced from the section which he had stunted by his opposition to transit and opened a new store at Broadway and Tenth Street. For years Fourteenth Street held its own and then the big stores began to spread along Sixth Avenue. Twenty-third Street next marked the centre of the retail trade. From Twenty-third Street business made a jump to Thirty-fourth, and a few years later to Forty-second Street. Today it is centred between Thirty-second and Forty-second Streets. In the meantime the bottom dropped out of realty values in the old retail zones, and it is only within the last few years that they have begun to come back to anything like normal.

A new line of business has entered the old sections and the majority of the former department stores are now cut up into manufacturing lofts and leased to various concerns. The slump has been overcome and values are rising, but it is a question whether they will ever reach the figure they were held at when the section was thronged daily with shoppers. This is an example of the constantly shifting centres of trade which for years has caused Manhattan realty values to fluctuate in a remarkable manner.

The opening of the new subways and the completion of the entire system as planned by the Public Service Commission, it is believed, will have a settling effect upon realty values, and centres will become fixed as they never have been before. The new zone law and the "Save New York" movement will also do much toward bringing about this condition of affairs.

Discussing this subject yesterday Joseph P. Day said:

"In my opinion Manhattan realty values have not reached their peak. It is quite true that at the present time in many parts of Manhattan where activity was greatest and prices highest in 1906, there has been a recession in values, but the recession has not brought them to the levels which prevailed in 1900 in those same sections either for land or from a rental standpoint of improved properties.

"If one will study the history of real estate values for the island of Manhattan for a period of years, it will be noted that there have been periods of stagnation and then marked activity with the establishment of new high values, then recession and stagnation; but the values have seldom receded to the point where they started; then would come another period of activity with a new set of values and subsequent recession.

"The real estate condition of Manhattan at the present time is one of stagnation of values. I believe we have already reached the bottom and that the trend from now on will be upward and I am quite confident that the succeeding six or eight years will be marked by new high values in a great many parts of the island. It is quite probable that those parts of Manhattan which were occupied by the wholesale drygoods district, the silk and cottongoods centres and which have been abandoned to locations further north, may be stagnant for some time.

"It does not yet appear what businesses will come in to take their place, but it seems almost certain that the portion of the city which is being greatly benefited by the improved transit facilities afforded by the new subways and which has the most convenient facilities for receiving and shipping goods, attract businesses and values will take an upward turn.

"The effect of the zoning law, to set aside a certain part of the city for use of the retail business, is bound to affect values favorably and to make them go higher as the city grows and these sections become more congested, and I am of the opinion that reading from the past I am justified in saying that we shall see higher values than have been seen up to the present time.

"What effect will the new subways have upon values; will they increase or decrease, is a broad question. I think, that as applied to tenement properties and flats the opening up of the hitherto inaccessible spots with quick transit and a five-cent fare will have the tendency to attract builders.

"The fact that they will be able to buy land cheap and will be able to erect tenements which can be rented at cheaper rents than Manhattan property and yet show a profit, will have a tendency to draw from Manhattan population and we may have the phenomenon for a time of some Manhattan flats possibly reducing rentals and losing tenants; but the city grows and business is not likely to go far away from the island of Manhattan.

"It is natural for business of a kind to locate in certain neighborhoods and many of the employes of those businesses must live near their work; and as business grows the Manhattan dwellings will be occupied again and rents will be increased. We must remember that all these transit extensions going out into new territory, while at first they take people away from Manhattan, as the population increases along those lines they act as 'feeders' to Manhattan as all those lines centre in New York.

"It must be remembered also that the shape of Manhattan Island with its deep waterways on each side, with the facilities for receiving and distributing merchandise, is the ideal spot for the conducting of mercantile business and for many kinds of manufacturing. The other boroughs do not possess these same facilities and business will still be located in Manhattan and will attract residents from the other boroughs, which will mean that Manhattan values will remain steady or with periods of recession they will spurt upward again.

"In many sections of Manhattan there are properties offered at prices very much less than they would have readily sold for in 1905 and 1906 or 1907. The buyer who has the courage to pick them up today and hold them, in my opinion will be well rewarded in the not far distant future."

On the same subject Samuel Goldsticker, an old New York broker and operator said:

"With the opening of the new subways and such other additional transit facilities now being brought to completion, their apparent advantage, beyond being general along their routes, at station streets and termini, will produce a revival in values to districts which have long been neglected by the real estate speculator and investor, owing principally to a lack of proper communication.

"A locality, which I have in view, that in all probability will reap vast benefits from any new system of transportation, is the entire east side of the city, lying to the east of Lexington Avenue, say from Thirty-fourth Street, north, extending as far as Throgs Neck, the entrance to Long Island Sound. Here a waterway, which the Government is about to develop, making this the gateway to the east, avoiding the necessity of an outside route, is being undertaken.

"This vast enterprise will create a water front of dockage facilities covering miles, probably the longest stretch for such purposes in the world. With this new entrance to the port, business will establish itself in the section and between the water front and subway or other better modes of transit the section will undergo such a change as its respective wants require.

"Shipping, warehouses, manufactories, &c., cannot help but take advantage of such a location with its unmolested water front for miles, with but three small public parks to interrupt its contiguous line.

"There is more prospect of solid opportunity to be derived from transit assistance to this vast territory than will be forthcoming in other localities.

"Also, here, the majority of property is unrestricted, permitting whatever improvement may be desired. This unrestricted zone extends in places well up into the city, but the water front and proximity are free. Broad avenues extend (on Manhattan) from one end to the other—an important factor in traffic.

"There can be no doubt that safe and secure investments in real estate can and will be made here, especially in the tract situated in the city proper.

"Adequate transit accommodation, modern development, business industry, and similar enterprises will surely creep into this section, backed by the Government work along the river front.

"All this will unquestionably enhance values throughout this now dormant district."

Mid-Broadway Rentals Improving.

Improved rental conditions in the mid-Broadway section are seen in the recent leasing by the Cross & Brown Company of 127,000 square feet of space in the building at 649 to 655 Broadway, running through to Mercer Street, north of Bleecker. The building is occupied by the millinery trade, and the rental of all but one loft to tenants in the millinery trade, at an increase amounting to over $10,000 in excess of former leases, is evidence that, while a part of the millinery trade has found it desirable to locate uptown, a large bulk of the trade prefers to remain in the old centre.

In spite of the removals uptown there is a good demand for downtown space.

East Side Parcels at Auction.

Joseph P. Day will sell on Thursday in the Vesey Street salesroom eight improved east side properties at partition for the Kirk estate. William B. Kirk, the original owner, was active in New York City politics, being from 1867 to 1869 a member of the Assembly, and President of the Board of Aldermen in 1884.

The properties include the tenements and houses at 66 Cherry Street, running through to 86 New Chambers Street, the northerly corner of New Bowery and Roosevelt Street, 413 East Fifty-third Street, 381 Water Street, 224 East Fourteenth Street, 36 Roosevelt Street, 57 Madison Street, and the southeast corner of Madison and Oliver Streets.

NEW THEATRE FOR TIMES SQUARE SECTION

Among the new Broadway theatres which will soon be added to the rapidly increasing number of amusement houses just above Times Square will be the Rivoli, now nearing completion, on a large plot between Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Streets, on the east side of Broadway. The plot extends through to Seventh Avenue, being about 100 feet on both thoroughfares by over 140 feet in depth. It occupies the site of the former Palmer-Singer garage and the vacant plot to the south.

The property is owned by the Barney estate and is under lease on a long term to a corporation of which G. Maurice Hecksher, son of August Hecksher, is President. He has leased the new theatre to interests headed by Felix Kahn, which control the Rialto Theatre at Forty-second Street and and Seventh Avenue, formerly Hammerstein's Victoria. The property has an assessed valuation of $730,000. About $400,000 is being spent on the new improvement.

The new theatre is the largest and most costly of the several which have been completed this season and are preparing for opening within the next few months. The house will be conducted on lines similar to the Rialto, that is for the production of high class moving picture shows. It will seat 2,800 persons, next in capacity to the Strand Theatre on the west side of Broadway two blocks below. It is announced that the house will be ready for opening during the Christmas holidays. Thomas W. Lamb is the architect and Russell B. Smith is the contracting engineer.

ASSESSMENT FIGURES HIGH.

Real Estate Board Makes a Vigorous Protest.

The Real Estate Board of New York, in a statement issued yesterday, says: "Real estate owners are not taking kindly to the new assessment figures as shown on Oct. 1. The board is "astounded to learn" that values throughout the city have increased $137,369,... since last year.

"It is an undoubted fact that in many localities values have decreased, and it would be extremely difficult to point to any notable locality increase. The Real Estate Board feels that there must be something wrong about an assessment system that can show increased valuations of $137,000,000 in the several boroughs in spite of this undisputed fact. The whole idea of arbitrarily fixed units of value as an absolute guide for deputies who ought to be allowed to fix valuations according to their own sense of what is due and fair is wrong.

"The Real Estate Board believes that the assessment for the city was fixed as part of a definite policy and not as the honest and conscientious opinion of trained and expert deputies. This policy is that the debt incurring power of the city should be maintained and that the tax rate should be kept down while expenses increase. To do this an arbitrary unit of value is fixed regardless of lower values. The unfortunate part of the whole thing is that this policy which apparently has been adopted by the tax commissioners and their deputies results in giving us a larger proportion of the State tax.

"There is no doubt in the minds of the members of the Real Estate Board that these values cannot be maintained, but it is an absolute injustice for property owners to be compelled to hire experts and even to go to court to get a proper assessment on their property. Last year the tax commissioners, on application, reduced the tentative assessment $24,676,275 and a similar amount will probably be taken from the assessment rolls by certiorari when the cases now pending have been decided. In other words, the city, in 1916, forced property owners to go to great expense to hire experts and lawyers to defeat an attempt to force them to pay, because of an improper assessment on their real estate, $1,000,000 taxes more than they should pay.

"It must be remembered, in considering these figures, that the proportion of property owners unjustly assessed who apply for reduction is very small. The vast majority pay the unjust additional tax without a protest. The small property owner particularly, who cannot afford to make the fight, must submit to what he knows to be unfair treatment."

BUILDING ZONE CHANGES.

New Lines Fixed in the Bronx, Brooklyn, and Queens.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment, at its last meeting, adopted resolutions amending the use of district maps as follows:

Section 3, "so as to include within a business district all the area not now so included on both sides of East 188th Street, between Creston Avenue and the west side of the Grand Boulevard and Concourse, between a line parallel to East 188th Street, and 100 feet northerly therefrom, measured at right angles, and a line parallel to East 188th Street and 100 feet southerly therefrom, measured at right angles, Borough of the Bronx."

Section 9, "so as to include within an unrestricted district all the area not now so included in the area bounded on the north by Lurting Street, on the west by Card Place, on the south by Corona Avenue, and on the east by a line parallel to Junction Avenue and 100 feet westerly therefrom, measured at right angles, Borough of Queens."

Section 16, "so as to include in an unrestricted district the area on the southerly side of Bush Street, within 100 feet thereof, between Columbia Street and Otsego Street, and so as to include in a business district all the area not now so included on the northerly side of Bush Street, within 100 feet thereof, between Columbia Street and Dwight Street, and so as to include in a business district the area on the westerly side of Dwight Street, within 100 feet thereof, between a line parallel to Sullivan Street and 100 feet southerly therefrom, measured at right angles, and a line parallel to Sullivan Street and 100 feet northerly therefrom, measured at right angles, Borough of Brooklyn."

Section 18, "so as to include within an unrestricted district the area on the west side of Freedom Avenue within 100 feet thereof, between a line parallel to Ninety-seventh Avenue (Beaufort Avenue) and 100 feet northerly therefrom, measured at right angles, and a line parallel to Ninety-seventh Avenue (Beaufort Avenue) and 100 feet southerly therefrom, measured at right angles, Borough of Queens."

ORNAMENTAL LAMP POSTS.

A Pending City Ordinance Regulating Their Erection.

The erection of ornamental lamp posts within stoop lines and on sidewalks near the curb, in front of places of business and apartment houses, is contemplated by the terms of an ordinance now pending before the Board of Aldermen.

Existing ordinances permit the erection of such ornamental lamp posts only in front of hotels, churches, theatres, railroad stations, and other places of public assemblage, and limit the size of the base of such posts to eighteen inches in diameter, if circular in form, and, if upon a square base, the sides thereof must not exceed eighteen inches.

It is further required that one of the lamps installed and maintained on each of such posts must be lighted and remain lighted every night during the hours prescribed for public street lamps. Permits for the erection of such lamp posts must be procured from the Borough President having jurisdiction.

Apartment Rentals.

Douglas L. Elliman & Co. have leased an apartment at 270 Park Avenue to John Scott Browning of 777 Madison Avenue to Maurice O'Meara; in the Verona, 32 East Sixty-fourth Street, to Walter C. Hirsch and Arthur H. Hahlo; at 400 Park Avenue to Frank H. Maynard, and at 383 Park Avenue to Messmore Kendall.

Pease & Elliman have leased apartments at 165 West Seventy-second Street to Frank C. Pitcher; at 67 Riverside Drive to Karl L. Hoffman, and at 167 West Seventy-second Street to Mrs. M. E. Momand.

Mrs. H. Dingleman has rented apartments in the Dorilton, 171 West Seventy-first Street, to Giovanni Martinelli; in the Langham, Seventy-fourth Street and Central Park West, to General Yossukovitch, and in the Belnord to Robert Young.

$60,000 for Jersey Lots

At the close of the auction sale yesterday of properties, conducted by Henry Brady for the State Banking Department, which is liquidating the affairs of the Industrial Savings and Loan Company and the New York Mortgage Company, a total of 1,089 lots were disposed of at Morsemere, Teaneck, Richfield, and adjoining New Jersey suburbs for about $60,000. Many of the parcels went at bargain prices. One parcel of 39 lots at Morsemere, on which is a spring which had been leased to a spring water concern a few years ago for $1,500 a year, was sold for $2,300. On Tuesday Mr. Brady will sell a number of lots at Grantwood.

Factory Deal in Newark.

The Art Metal Works of Newark, N. J., whose factory is at 7 to 15 Mulberry Street, has purchased from the Dawson estate the adjoining property, being 180 feet on Mulberry Street, 125 on Centre Street, and 140 on Division Place. The buyers now control nearly an entire city block, having a total street frontage of nearly 570 feet. The property just purchased will be improved with an addition to the main factory building. Louis V. Aronson is President of the Art Metal Works. Feist & Feist of Newark were the brokers in the deal.

FIRE PREVENTION PLAN A FAILUR[E]

Lawyer MacNulty Says It Ad[ds] to the Very Heavy Burdens of Real Estate Owners.

SAYS FIGURES PROVE [IT]

The Claim Is That Under the N[ew] System There Has Been Greate[r] Loss of Life and Property.

The financial burden placed upon t[he] taxpayers and the injury inflicted up[on] small property owners by the Fire P[re]vention Bureau are sufficient, in [the] opinion of Alexander C. MacNul[ty,] counsel for the Real Estate Board, [to] create a widespread demand for [its] extinction.

"During the last six years," said [Mr.] MacNulty, "the fire salaries and [ex]penses of the civilian personnel of [the] bureau cost the taxpayers approximat[ely] $2,000,000, but there were other co[sts,] among them being the salaries of [a] score of officers and men of the F[ire] Department assigned regularly or te[m]porarily to the bureau. The milli[ons] contributed by taxpayers to maintai[n a] horde of fire prevention inspectors, [ex]aminers, engineers, marshals, exper[ts] and others, are but drops in the buc[ket] compared to the aggregate of the out[lay] that individual property owners h[ave] been forced to make to comply with [the] formal orders and other requireme[nts] of the Fire Department, thousands [of] which have been made unnecessarily [and] without lawful authority."

Mr. MacNulty said that since the [or]ganization of the bureau it has iss[ued] 85,000 formal orders, the great major[ity] of them containing several disti[nct] items.

"These requirements," he said, "h[ave] covered every phase of fire preventi[on] from the removal of accumulated r[ub]bish to the installation of autom[atic] sprinklers or the making of extens[ive] and costly structural alterations. [In] 1914 alone 25,653 orders were issued, which over 200 directed the installa[tion] of sprinklers, and more than 8,500 c[on]tained orders to fireproof stairw[ays,] shafts, &c., or to make other st[ruc]tural changes."

During the five years from 1912 [to] 1917, according to Mr. MacNulty's e[sti]mate, based upon figures in his p[os]session, the Fire Department requ[ired] property owners in the city to ins[tall] more than 400 sprinklers, to put in f[ire]proofing material, or to make o[ther] changes which frequently involved v[ery] expensive changes in structure.

"On this basis," he said, "figu[ring] the average cost of a sprinkler insta[lla]tion at $7,500, and of compliance w[ith] fireproofing or other structural requ[ire]ment at $500, the aggregate expense [to] property owners in complying [for] sprinkler installation has been $3,0[00,]000 and for fireproofing and other str[uc]tural changes $15,000,000, a total of [ap]proximately $18,000,000.

"In numerous instances, small equ[ities] in factory and other business proper[ties] have been utterly wiped out by wh[ole]sale and expensive fire preventive [re]quirements, while the heavy dema[nds] made upon more strongly held pro[per]ties of this class, particularly non-p[ro]ductive loft buildings in the older [sec]tions of Manhattan and Brooklyn, h[ave] materially depreciated the values of [the] properties affected and of neighbo[ring] properties as well. Aside from [the] never ceasing expense of complying w[ith] or contesting fire orders, the fact [that] they constitute defects in the t[itle] seriously impairs the value and mar[ket]ability of the property.

"Because of the depreciation in val[ue] due mainly to the over-regulation [of] buildings, the Tax Department has [re]duced real estate assessments in M[an]hattan south of Fortieth Street [by] than $180,000,000 during the last f[ew] years, $68,000,000 of the amount hav[ing] been written off this year. This re[sult] to the hard-pressed taxpayers of lo[wer] Manhattan means, of course, a pro[por]tionate increase in taxes on propert[y in] other sections of the city, for the mu[ni]cipal budget continues to expand and [its] requirements must be met.

"The expense to property owners [and] the depreciation of realty values ca[used] by the perennial flood of fire ord[ers] would be tolerable were these bur[dens] evenly distributed, lawfully impo[sed] and salutary in results. But none [of] these conditions exists. Every owne[r of] a factory or mercantile building who [has] been mulcted by such requirements [can] look out of his window into a neigh[bor]ing building of the same class as [his] own, which seems to be immune aga[inst] the activities of the Fire Preven[tion] Bureau."

Mr. MacNulty said that the Adam[son-]Hammitt system of fire prevention [was] obviously for the purpose of preven[ting] fire and fire losses, but that after t[hree] years of operation under it there w[ere] more fires and greater losses in [1916] than in 1913. A table compiled by [Mr.] MacNulty shows that in 1913 there w[ere] 12,000 fire alarms and in 1916 13,[...] The losses in the two years were [re]spectively $7,467,997 and $8,746,404.

"The reports of the Fire Departm[ent] for the years prior to 1916," contin[ued] Mr. MacNulty, "present no statistic[s as] to losses of life in fires. The repor[t of] the department for 1916 shows [that] fatalities attended no less than nin[e...] three of the fires in that year, the t[otal] roll being 141. More lives were los[t in] factory fires in 1916, despite the [fact] that, during the nearly four years [of] its existence, the Adamson-Hammitt [ad]ministration has directed the major [por]tion of its activities against fac[tory] buildings, as defined in the labor la[w."]

After reviewing the entire work of [the] Fire Prevention Bureau and the wor[k of] the Labor Bureau in connection [with] making factory buildings safe from [fire,] Mr. MacNulty said:

"The remedy for the inefficiency [of] the Fire Prevention Bureau, in fai[ling] to reduce the number of fires and [the] loss of life and property, is plain. [The] bureau should be abolished. Such of [its] functions as relate to preventing [the] starting of fires should be transferre[d to] the Chief of the department, who is [the] head of the uniformed force. And [its] duties respecting structural change[s in] buildings and other means of chec[king] the spread of fire should go to [the] Superintendent of Buildings of [the] several boroughs.

"This revolution of course may [be] effected by appropriate legislat[ion,] the movement for which should be [in]itiated at the earliest practic[able] moment."

GERMANS MAY RETREAT FROM FLANDERS LINES

Another Withdrawal Similar to That About Bapaume and Peronne Last Spring Indicated by Recent Happenings.

By a Military Expert.

Copyright, 1917, by The New York Times Company.

ONE of the most startling operations of the war was the attack on the German lines northeast of Ypres. Coming so quickly after another major attack, with an artillery preparation of only brief duration, and made after a heavy rainfall which left all of the ground over which the advance had to be made a heavy bog, heavily dotted with miniature lakes formed by shell craters, it was entirely unlooked for and unusually successful. This success, indeed, may have been due in no small measure to this very element of surprise, but at all events it was a brilliant achievement.

The French, with probably not more than two divisions and possibly only one, held a small section of the line from Dralbank to Wydendreft, on the British left. The French and British struck together, the French moving north toward the forest of Houthulst, the British, between Wydendreft and Reutel, moving east, either toward what little of the Passchendaele ridge remained to be conquered or toward the plain at the eastern foot of this ridge. The French, fighting their way through mud and water, managed to cross the several small streams which lie between Houthulst and the Yser Canal, and reach the southern edge of the forest. The British, pushing ahead on the French left, bit even deeper into the German positions and moved up along the railroad from Ypres to Staden. The village of Poelcappelle was occupied and passed, the British lines being established about one mile beyond.

Just to the south the British action was directed against that portion of the Passchendaele ridge which still remained in German hands. Here the success was almost complete, the new line being established along the ridge within a stone's throw of Passchendaele. Further south the British already held the ridge, and their effort was only incidental to prevent any troops leaving for the point of attack. North of Gheluvelt and east of Broodseinde the British pushed down the eastern slopes to the floor of the plain, driving the Germans with relatively little effort from all positions of vantage. The first step in the battle of Flanders—the occupation of the entire Messines-Passchendaele ridge, is now practically completed. The second, the driving of the Germans across the plain, will probably soon follow. On the success of the latter hangs the entire British success in Flanders.

There are a number of circumstances surrounding this last attack in Flanders that will bear serious thought as to what is really happening in Belgium. Recurring to the preceding attack, it will be recalled that it was nearly thirty-six hours before any German reaction came against General Haig's troops. This is a very long time to elapse between the attack and the counterattack. The only hope of success in the latter case is to catch the advancing army off its balance, as it were, while it is to some extent disorganised by the mere act of making the advance and by finding itself occupying what must seem, after the well-constructed and carefully prepared trenches, a dump of débris. In such a case there will be no time to consolidate new positions or to construct communicating trenches between the old and the new lines in order that reserves may be sent forward under cover. If an appreciable interval is allowed to pass, a counterattack becomes an attack against prepared positions and the problems involved are practically the same as those which faced the original attacking force when it first went forward.

The reason assigned for the German failure to retake promptly was that they counterthrust. After the removal of the artillery was under way it would be vital that the British should be prevented from pushing on, as that would throw the entire retrograde movement into jeopardy. On the principle that the best defense is a good offense, the obvious thing to do would be to strike out before the British patrols could ascertain the truth as to what was under way. This the Germans did, and, while they prevented another forward movement immediately, they were thrown back without regaining any territory.

Again, let us reconstruct the conditions under which the attack was made. From Poelcappelle northward the so-called Passchendaele Ridge was in German hands. This ridge completely overlooked the British and French lines east of Passchendaele and north of Bixschoote. As if this were not enough, rain had been falling in torrents since early Sunday afternoon, turning all of the flat country into a quagmire. At best, water is struck but a foot down in this country, and only a light rain is needed to make it almost impassable. The ground was filled with shell holes, which were full to the brim with water, making traps for any part of the unwary line which might wander too near the edge.

Further north, in the section over which the French were to advance, the ground was flooded. When shortly after the battle of the Marne the Germans made their first attempt to get to Calais, the Belgians, as a defensive measure, had broken open the dikes and inundated the country. This condition on the French front still prevailed, the territory over which the advance had to be made being really a shallow lake with a treacherous boggy bottom. It will be seen, then, that every advantage lay with the Germans; from the village of Poelcappelle north they controlled the heights, while their positions were guarded by a defensive screen of marsh and bog.

Over such ground and under such conditions the British and French went forward, the attack being preceded by a preliminary bombardment of short duration, though of great intensity. The Germans gave way everywhere over the front attacked, the British arriving within rifle range of Passchendaele, while the French advanced their lines nearly two miles.

What prompted Haig to attack under such adverse conditions? Two answers are possible and reasonable. The first is that his intelligence department had made such reports as would indicate that a German withdrawal was under way, and he calculated that such a sudden stroke would, with relatively small loss to himself, do a great deal of damage, catch a goodly quantity of transport on the roads, and inflict heavy losses on the foe. If this is the case we shall in the next few days—probably before this article appears in print—see the pursuit pushed even harder and faster.

On the other hand, the experience of the two previous attacks certainly indicated an overwhelming superiority in artillery and in the morale of the British personnel. The mere fact that conditions were so unpropitious may therefore have stirred Haig into action on the theory that the attack would come as such a surprise as to compensate for the disadvantages of weather and terrain. The Germans, he might well reason, had not had sufficient time to recover from his last effort, and the new defensive positions which had of necessity been taken up, were not completed. Against the latter idea is General Haig's character as it is generally understood. He is not a gambler, he is not given to taking chances. He has exhibited all of the reserve and caution of his Scotch ancestry, and not since he has been in command has he moved until he was assured that conditions were most favorable to success.

Two other features of this attack are noticeable. The reports show that very little, if any, artillery was taken. This is remarkable, since the German artillery would naturally be just east of the ridge crest between Poelcappelle and Passchendaele, and would therefore have, in part at least, fallen into British hands, and also, since the depth to which the advance penetrated the German positions would, in the usual course of events, have overwhelmed some batteries of the lighter guns before their withdrawal could be effected. Later reports may clear this up. But this is the aspect it presents from such data as are at present available.

The second point is the small number of prisoners captured. It is doubtful whether a successful surprise attack on such a wide front has, since last year, when the western offensive began, yielded such a small harvest in prisoners. In view of the known German strength on the sector attacked, this is doubly remarkable and again points to a withdrawal.

There is, however, a very strong argument against a German retreat except as a last extremity. The position which the Germans now hold is one of the greatest importance in its relation to the coast towns of Ostend and Zeebrugge. There is a distinct limit to the extent to which any section of the line may be bent back without the areas on either side of the bend becoming vitally affected. This was demonstrated on the Somme, where the bulge in the line became so deep that the entire Noyon salient was endangered and had to be given up.

The fighting around Ypres has very much the same thing for its object, and the Allies are going about obtaining it in exactly the same way. In this case the bulge which the Allies are driving in is twenty miles wide—extending almost over the entire distance from Passchendaele to Armentières. At its deepest point this bulge or salient is thirteen miles deep, measuring from the point furthest west, Nieuport, to the Passchendaele ridge. If, therefore, the strategy of the Somme is again successful a German retreat will become necessary at least over a front from Nieuport to Ypres.

Before this occurs, however, the railroad from Lille to Roulers, with its branches to Ostend and Zeebrugge must be either reached or destroyed by artillery fire either at Roulers or at some point north. A section of this road between Menin and Roulers has had much space given to it in news reports of the fighting in this area, and it has been frequently assumed that to cut the road between these points would destroy communication with the sea coast towns.

This is not the case. A good railroad comes into Roulers from the west and joins the main stem from Lille, thereby furnishing ready if not entirely adequate means of supplying the coast towns. Therefore, in order to embarrass these towns seriously, it will be necessary to destroy Roulers as a base either by capturing the city (it is now about six miles distant from the British line) or by cutting the line north of Roulers, as stated. If the British can succeed in forcing the Germans back as far as that, the German line will have to retire north of Ypres over thirty miles. But northern Belgium will not alone be affected. Should this occur Lille itself will also be thrown into the balance and, with it, the German line as far south as Lens.

The Germans, therefore, would lose more than the Belgian coast. They would lose the largest centre in all of Northern France, and, in all probability, before the readjustment of lines could definitely be completed, the effect would be felt as far south as St. Quentin, as it is entirely conceivable that a straightening out of the entire north and south section would become a necessity.

The key to the whole thing is Roulers. Therefore, it is of importance to the Germans from every standpoint to hold the Allies back and prevent a further advance. Whether they can succeed depends more on the weather than on any military element. The Allies certainly hold the dominant position as far as terrain is concerned. They secured this, moreover, through a series of attacks starting from the low lands and directed against the heights. If with such advantage of position the Germans were unable to hold the British back, what are the probabilities that the attackers can be checked when the positions are reversed—when the British have all the ridge positions and the Germans are driven in the plain?

There is still another consideration in the present German position, and that is the danger of hanging on too long. Haig has developed an unexpected ability to strike quick, hard blows with a frequency not before exhibited in the great battles of the western front. The Germans have been allowed but a few days to reconstruct the new trenches and have been compelled to fight with only mediocre defenses. The time is approaching when a moderately successful attack can jeopardize their entire position. Getting guns away from the front between Bixschoote and Nieuport is a difficult operation and one that can only be conducted with great delays. New roads cannot be constructed because of the nature of the ground, so that, if the Germans are forced to retire quickly, much artillery will have to be abandoned.

These are the conditions as they appear now. Whether or not the Germans are making ready for a retirement, the danger which they face on this section of the front is in every sense real.

THE MAGIC OF MUSIC

"INEXPRESSIBLE, the comfort my Vocalion is to me during these lonesome evening hours!

"By day I am busy, and in a tiny way, I hope, helpful. But the evening—the time which seems to belong to him, would be almost unendurable were it not for the solace that the music of the Vocalion brings to me.

"After he had been gone a few weeks, a letter came from 'somewhere in France' which told me of his evenings—

"and we made up a very tolerable quartette, with a burr and a brogue, a drawl and I suppose a twang from yours truly. The boys seem to prefer the old songs—'Sweet and Low' is, I think, the general favorite."

"Nothing, not even his letters, seems to bring him so close to me as to sit down with the Vocalion and play this dear old song.

"As softly, with tones that are real and beautiful, the Vocalion begins to play, I draw out this wonderful expression control, the Graduola, until the full, virile voices come to me softened to tenderest pianissimo—

"Sweet and low, sweet and low
Wind of the Western sea—

"Then I press the Graduola gently and the lovely old melody sweeps out more and more broadly with (to me) Billy's rich baritone clearly discernible:

"Over the rolling waters go
Come from the dying moon and blow
Blow him again to me—

"Now I draw out the Graduola again, and slowly the music floats away to its tender, soothing close—

"While my little one, while my pretty one, sleeps.—

This wizardry is the magic of music—that gift to man which above all others stirs the soul—inspires, consoles and remakes memories to living realities again!

It is the magic of music's eloquent hand-servant—the phonograph—that wonderful interpreter which knows and voices all her thousand tongues!

It is the magic of the phonograph's new art—emotional response—which makes the phonograph truly an instrument of personal expression.

NEW MEMBERS HELP RESERVE BANK FUNDS

Trust Companies and State Institutions Add Their Accounts to the Federal System.

$130,000,000 TO ALLIES

New York Bank During the Week Distributed $55,000,000 to Britain and $40,000,000 to France.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—The Federal Reserve Board made public today its regular weekly bank statement as at close of business Oct. 11-12, 1917. Columbus Day being observed as a legal holiday by seven of the banks and three of the branches, the figures for those institutions indicate their condition as at close of business Oct. 11. Figures for the Federal Reserve banks at Richmond, Atlanta, St. Louis, Minneapolis, and Kansas City, and the reserve branches at New Orleans and Omaha are given as at close of business on Oct. 12.

The statement indicates a large increase in member banks' reserve deposits, largely at the New York bank, following the opening of the reserve account by the newly admitted Guaranty Trust Company, also substantial additions by all the banks to their note circulation. The banks' reserves against deposits declined about $12,000,000, while gold reserves against Federal Reserve notes increased $20,900,000.

Net deposits of the banks on which reserve is computed show a decrease of $29,200,000, the "float," including clearing house exchanges, carried chiefly by the New York bank, being unusually large. As a result the deposit reserve shows an increase from 73 to 73.7 per cent., while the note reserve, owing to the relatively large amount of notes issued against paper during the week, shows a decline from 76.9 to 75.7 per cent.

During the week the New York bank disbursed a total of $130,000,000 to the Allies, $55,000,000 being paid to Great Britain, $40,000,000 to France, $20,000,000 to Russia, and $15,000,000 to Italy. These funds were largely withdrawn from local depositaries, which remitted in part by checks on other New York banks, the latter figuring among the clearing house exchanges reported by the bank.

Discounts on hand show an increase for the week of $27,900,000. Large borrowings, mainly on collateral security, are reported by the New York bank, the total discounts held by the bank showing a gain for the week of $39,300,000. Total holdings of collateral notes increased from $153,000,000 to $208,200,000, while the total of notes secured by Liberty bonds or United States certificates of indebtedness went up from $84,100,000 to $130,800,000.

Acceptances and United States bonds on hand show a slight decline, while holdings of United States short-term securities fell off $25,100,000, the New York, Cleveland, and Chicago banks having disposed of large parts of their holdings of certificates of indebtedness.

Total earning assets show a gain of $1,600,000, and constitute at present 953 per cent. of the banks' paid-in capital, as against 952 per cent. shown the week before. Of the total, 50.3 per cent. is represented by discounts, 31.9 per cent. by acceptances, and 17.8 per cent. by United States securities.

Admission to membership of the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Company and of the Lafayette South Side Bank of St. Louis accounts largely for the increase of $77,000 in capital account. Government deposits decreased about $12,100,000, the week witnessing considerable withdrawals of Government funds from the interior and their concentration at the New York bank.

Transfer on the books of the New York Reserve Bank of the Guaranty Trust Company's clearing account to member bank reserve account is largely responsible for the changes shown in these two items, all other Reserve Banks except San Francisco reporting but slight changes in their total bank deposits.

During the week the amount of Federal Reserve notes outstanding increased from $797,630,000 to $837,425,000. Against the total of notes issued the agents hold now $580,734,000 of gold and $263,164,000 of paper. The banks report an actual Federal Reserve note circulation of $779,885,000, an increase of $38,996,000 for the week.

The weekly statement of the resources and liabilities of each of the twelve banks at the close of business on Oct. 12, follows:

COPPER MEN AWAIT GOVERNMENT CALLS

United States and Europe Expected to Need 120,000,000 Pounds a Month.

LITTLE LEFT FOR TRADE

At Current Rate of Output Only 30,000,000 Tons Would Go to Private Consumers.

The present relation between supply and demand in the copper trade is one of the most puzzling developments that has grown out of war control of the major industries. The country's copper output has been commandeered for Government requirements, not directly, but in effect, and little if any business outside of Government orders has been done yet at the fixed price of 23½ cents a pound. Gradually the situation is clearing, however, and the trade believes that before many days pass it will be known to the producers how much the Government and the foreign Allies will need for the next three months, and when this is known the private manufacturer of copper goods can re-enter the market.

Unofficially it was said in producing circles last week that the Government and the European consumers would need 120,000,000 pounds a month during October, November, and December. At the current rate of refinery output there would be not more than 30,000,000 pounds a month left over for the private consumers, but the effect of recent strikes at the mines is lessening, and the refineries are gradually increasing their production. It is believed that the average monthly output during the final quarter of the year will be in the neighborhood of 200,000,000 pounds, which would permit the private buyers to absorb 80,000,000 pounds a month.

The query was frequently heard last week, "Will 80,000,000 pounds monthly be enough for the concerns which are not handling war orders?" In some quarters the reply was that it would be enough; in others, it was held that the shortage would be pronounced. Opinions apparently were governed by estimates in regard to the extent to which the supplies covered by the Government's 120,000,000 pounds a month would be turned over to private mills. The manufacture of shell cases and other war material is occupying a vast amount of factory capacity which would be devoted to the arts of peace if the country were not making enormous war preparations.

Idle Mines Brought Into Operation.

Now that the price has been fixed, it is safe to say that copper producers are devoting more attention to ways and means to insure adequate production than to anything else. High prices since 1915 have brought into operation mines which were idle, or only partially worked before.

"The prices for copper that prevailed in 1916," says The Mining and Engineering Journal, "undoubtedly brought out a surplus production. This was manifest in the statistics of blister-copper production and also in the reports of accumulations of [illegible] so that the latter refused to take in more ore. Since then, however, there has been a change. The cost of production has increased, the supply of labor has decreased, the price for copper has shrunk, and smelters have reported that the supply of ore offered to them is less bountiful. This tends to indicate that under recent conditions the sundry supplies of copper have shown a tendency to contract.

"Now, three years ago, even one year ago, any suggestion that a price around 25 cents would be anything but a stimulus to unrestrained production would have been regarded as humorous. It is not so today. We are informed respecting at least one company of considerable output whose present cost is 23 cents a pound, and it is not unlikely that one of our major districts, viz., Clifton-Morenci, is actually confronted with conditions that may make the present price an unprofitable one. The mines of that district are still idle, their labor troubles have not yet been settled.

Complicated Market Machinery.

"Another direction in which contraction of copper supplies may be feared is in the importation from South America. Some of that copper is high-cost copper, and natural difficulties have been further enhanced by the depreciation in those countries of the American dollar. Quite aside from that, however, is the fact that our business in crude copper with those countries has been built up by dint of hard effort and by the creation of complicated market machinery. That machinery cannot be wrecked, as it has been, without interfering with supply.

"The feature in the economics of the situation that has been overlooked is this: the same inflation that affects price also affects costs and in so doing widens the spread among the costs of the several producers. Thus, if before the war one producer had a cost of 10 cents and another a cost of 15 cents, their present costs might be 16 and 24 cents, respectively. The high-cost producer would be losing money at 23½ cents, just as formerly he lost money at 14½ cents, but the low cost producer would be making 9 cents per pound profit, against 4½ cents formerly. This illustrates how such companies as Anaconda and Utah and the other prophyries can properly regard 23½ cents as a reasonable, even generous, price and how they may continue to show earnings not very much short of their stupendous returns in 1916, when they got 25 cents for their copper, while the small producer who got 27.2 cents in 1916 and made a moderate profit may lose money at 23½ cents, and even may be compelled to suspend production."

M. J. FOX IN COLUMBIA BANK.

Leaves Firm of Architects to Become Vice President.

Mortimer J. Fox, who is a son-in-law of Henry Morgenthau, former Ambassador to Turkey, and for twenty years a member of the firm of Buchman & Fox, one of the leading architectural firms of the city, which has erected some of our best buildings, among which are the Times Annex, Saks Building, 30 East Forty-second Street Building, Montefiore Home, Barnard College, &c., has retired from the field of architecture to take up banking. He has been elected a Director of the Columbia Bank, and on Nov. 1 will be installed as Vice President of that institution at its principal bank, 507 Fifth Avenue.

In 1915 Eli H. Bernheim was elected President of the Columbia Bank, at which time Mr. Fox's father, Joseph Fox, became Chairman of the Board of Directors, having retired from the Presidency after twenty-seven years of active service during which time the bank grew from a small institution to its present condition, with a branch at Broadway and Canal Street and total deposits of $11,000,000.

GOLF HOUSE BURNS DURING BIG GAME

Quarters of Oakland Club at Bayside Destroyed at Loss of $100,000.

The clubhouse of the Oakland Golf Club at Bayside, L. I., one of the wealthiest organizations near New York devoted to the game, was destroyed by fire at noon yesterday, entailing a loss of $100,000. More than a score of club members were on the links, some of whom were in the second round at match play for the club championship, when the fire was discovered. It was caused by a defective flue.

The players, among whom were former Supreme Court Justice Henry A. Gildersleeve, Morton G. Bogue, Craig Colgate, R. H. Hoadley, Charles G. Meyers, E. B. Malone, Dr. W. Stuart Brown, Lott B. Malone, and others who were playing informal matches, and C. W. Singleton, the club's professional, dropped their golf clubs and hastened to the clubhouse. Meanwhile an alarm had been sent to the Bayside Volunteer Fire Department. The fire, which originated in the cellar near the furnace, was discovered by Mrs. Mary McMills, a laundress at the club.

When the volunteer firemen arrived they found no fire hydrant near the club. They finally succeeded in pumping water from Oakland Lake, about three hundred yards away, but the flames gained such headway that the frame structure was soon doomed.

Before the firemen arrived club members, caddies, chauffeurs, and waiters worked together in endeavoring to rescue some of the valuable contents of the clubhouse. They succeeded in saving paintings, silverware, furniture, clothing, and linen.

One of the articles saved from the building was a silver loving cup won by the late John B. McDonald, builder of the East River tunnel. Mr. McDonald won the cup in a competition in Carlsbad, Austria, more than a decade ago. A richly furnished library which was recently added to the club was destroyed.

The clubhouse covered an area of 300 by 300 feet and was erected soon after the organization of the club in 1893. Four additions have since been built. The club started with a membership of sixty, but has grown to 350, with a waiting list of 125. J. V. Davies is President.

The Oakland Club was organized by the late John H. Taylor, Malcolm M. Graham, G. Howland Leavitt, the late Lawrence Embree, and fellow-members of the exclusive Niantic Club of Flushing. It was at the Oakland Golf Club that Walter J. Travis, who later became champion of the United States and also of Great Britain, first drove a golf ball.

The links were laid out on part of the Oaks, the extensive estate of Mr. Taylor. The club owns the property, comprising more than 180 acres and representing an outlay of over $1,500,000. Work on a new building will begin without delay.

NEW GARIBALDI LETTER.

Written to Ambassador Marsh, It Pays Tribute to Lincoln.

An important and unpublished letter of Giuseppe Garibaldi, the Italian patriot and liberator, about Abraham Lincoln, has come into the possession of Gabriel Wells of 489 Fifth Avenue.

This letter is addressed to George P. Marsh, Minister Plenipotentiary from the United States to the new Kingdom of Italy. It is dated from Caprera, the rocky island off the north coast of Sardinia, at various times the place of residence of Garibaldi, who died there June 2, 1882. It will be recalled that he spent about three years in this country and supported himself by making candles in a factory on Staten Island. The letter was written less than three weeks before Lincoln's death:

The following is an English translation:

Caprera, March 27, 1865.

Very Dear Mr. Marsh: The name of Lincoln, like that of Christ, marks the beginning of a glorious epoch in the history of humanity, and with pride I have perpetuated the name of the great Emancipator in my family. The press and the other enemies of the great Republic are like the asses of the fable who kicked the lion believing him dead, but today, when they see him arise in all his majesty, they change their language. The American question is a light of liberty for the world, and will gladden the hearts of all honest men. I greet your wife with affection and respect. Yours, G. GARIBALDI.

Mr. Marsh, Minister Plenipotentiary from the United States.

This letter recalls the fact that in the Summer of 1861 President Lincoln, through his Secretary of State, William H. Seward, made an appeal to Garibaldi to lend his sword to the Union cause, and tendered him the command of an army with the rank of Major General. The correspondence relating to this negotiation between the American Government and a foreign General, was excluded from the published "Diplomatic Correspondence" of the United States. It might have seemed humiliating to the national pride and an admission of weakness by the North.

On July 27, 1861, after the battle of Bull Run, Secretary Seward wrote to Henry S. Sanford, American Minister at Brussels, to go at once on a special mission to Caprera and inform Garibaldi of the offer of a Major General's commission in the Northern Army.

"I wish you to proceed at once," said Seward, "and enter into communication with the distinguished Soldier of Freedom, say to him that this Government believes his services in the present contest for the unity and liberty of the American people would be exceedingly useful and that therefore they are earnestly desired and invited. Tell him that he will receive a Major General's commission in the army of the United States with the hearty welcome of the American people."

This letter is quoted in part in the "Life of William H. Seward" by his son, Frederick W. Seward.

QUEEN MARIE'S PLEDGE.

Rumania Will Fight On—Thanks America for Red Cross Aid.

JASSY, Rumania, Oct. 9, (Delayed.)—Queen Marie of Rumania today asked The Associated Press to convey her thanks to the United States for American Red Cross aid and pledged Rumania to fight to the end. The occasion was the raising of the Stars and Stripes and the American Red Cross flag over the first relief hospital established on Rumanian soil.

"Our hearts have been warmed by gratitude and our hopes reinspired by this evidence of America's generosity in our hour of suffering," Her Majesty said. "We have 50,000 orphans and a large civilian population in a precarious position on account of the lack of food, clothing, and medical aid. America's assistance came at a critical hour.

"I voice our gratitude to the great ally from over the seas, which is the wholehearted expression of six millions of my people. With the help of the United States and our other great allies we are determined to prosecute the war until the cause to which we consecrated our lives has been vindicated.

"Adversity has made Rumania all the more decided not to give up the struggle which has caused her so much in blood and tears."

Queen Marie told the members of the American Red Cross Commission, which is headed by Colonel Henry W. Anderson of Richmond, Va., that their ready grasp of Rumania's needs had given her great hope and confidence that America would continue to render Rumania all the assistance possible to enable this country to meet the sufferings of Winter.

The Red Cross hospital is manned by fourteen doctors and twelve nurses, headed by Dr. W. E. Kirkpatrick of Bellingham, Wash.

GAS COS. MAY ADOPT THERMAL STANDARD

Service Board Grants Permission So That Toluol Can Be Increased for War Use.

LIGHTING COST EQUALIZED

Consumer to Get a Rebate if Illuminating Power Is Reduced Below 22-Candle Standard.

The Public Service Commission has decided to grant permission to the gas companies in New York to change the gas standard from candle to the British thermal unit. The application of the companies followed a request from the United States Government that they produce as much toluol, a by-product, as they possibly could because of the need of great quantities of it in the manufacture of explosives.

During the hearings it appeared that the amount of toluol could be greatly increased by using oil of a lower grade than that demanded when high illuminating power was required. Testimony was also offered that a consumer desiring the same illumination as that furnished by gas of twenty-two candle power in a standard burner, without using more gas and thereby increasing his bills, would have to use it in an incandescent mantle, where the illumination depends upon the amount of heat.

The companies asked that the commission find that 585 thermal units would supply gas of the same lighting capacity as the present twenty-two candle power gas, but the commission found instead, after a careful investigation, that it would take 659 British thermal units.

So, if the companies care to, they may change the gas standard, providing 659 heat units are furnished at the present legal rate of 80 cents per thousand cubic feet; that if more toluol can be obtained by reducing the standard, the difference in the illumination power of the gas shall be made good to the consumers by a rebate, and that they shall furnish to each consumer not more than two incandescent burners free of charge.

Under an agreement with the Government it is provided that the gas companies shall be reimbursed for all money spent by them in making the necessary changes in their plants for the production of toluol, and that any loss occasioned in the net returns shall also be repaid to them. The companies have claimed that the gas they furnish now at 80 cents really costs them about 94 cents, and they were hopeful that if they obtained permission to change the standard so that a cheaper oil could be used their alleged losses would be considerably reduced. The decision of the commission blasts these hopes. In part, the commission's opinion says:

"The Federal Government has made direct representations to the commission that it is urgently necessary that the operations of the principal gas plants in this city and elsewhere be made available for the production of an important ingredient essential to war operations. To accomplish this it becomes necessary for the period of the war to permit the companies to exercise the option of furnishing gas on a thermal basis.

"It is not contemplated that this service should be uncompensated, for the national authorities are prepared to pay a fair equivalent. Because of this readiness to guarantee against loss and possibly even allow a reasonable profit, the national exigency should not be made the opportunity of the gas companies for a betterment in earnings or profits at the expense of the consumers, through a lowering of quality by means of a change in standards.

"Any right to an increase in rates should be determined through the exercise of legal processes available to the companies. Any action herein at the present time does not permit a decrease in the value of service available to consumers at the present 80-cent rate, but because of national emergency will give freedom and opportunity for the production of a different standard of gas so as to be able to serve national requirements."

During the hearings before the commission an expert in its employ testified that if the companies were permitted to adopt 565 heat units as the equivalent of 22 candle power, it would be the same as an increase in the price of gas, because the consumer would have to use more in order to obtain the same result. Public Service Commissioner Whitney, who made public the decision of the commission, said that only about 20 per cent. of the gas consumed in New York was used for illumination.

JEWS SEEK RELATIVES.

Families in Russia Ask Aid of Hebrew Sheltering Society.

The Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society has received a number of appeals from Jews in Russia asking that their relatives here be notified that they are in want, or that they desire to join them in this country. In some cases the relatives sought have been quickly found, but in a number of cases either the addresses supplied were insufficient or wrong. The society has asked THE NEW YORK TIMES to print a list of those sought.

Jacob R. Fain, Acting Manager of the society, said yesterday that in most cases it was almost a matter of life and death that the missing relatives be found. In many cases families are destitute. In one case a mother with several children seeks her husband, who came here to make his fortune. In another case a sister notifies the organization that she wants her brother to know that their mother died five months ago and that their father is seriously ill and in want.

Here is the list of those sought:

WOMEN WORK FOR MITCHEL.

Committee Urges Three Weeks of Final Intensive Effort.

New headquarters were opened yesterday at the Hotel Manhattan by the Campaign Committee of the Woman's Committee of One Hundred working for the election of the Fusion Ticket. Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Chairman of the Campaign Committee, has issued a general call for volunteers and asks every woman who can give definite time for service in the next three weeks to report to her.

"We are organizing meetings in schoolhouses in every district in the city," said Mrs. Harriman. "We are going to do the closest kind of neighborhood work, and there never was a better time for women to take up civic work in a way that will count. The women who believe in good government should go into all the neighborhoods of the city and carry on for three weeks such a campaign as New York has never seen, go to every neighborhood organization and urge the re-election of John Purroy Mitchel, in the name of good and decent government for New York City. Only three weeks are left."

Mrs. Harriman also asked for motor cars.

CUBAN BONDS MADE GOOD.

Ports Improvement Securities Convertible Into Government Issues.

HAVANA, Oct. 13.—The long standing contest over the bonds of the Ports Improvement Company of Cuba has been settled, the report of the committee appointed to study the matter having been affirmed by President Menocal. The representatives of the bondholders also have agreed to the committee's report.

By the agreement the bondholders will receive fifteen-year 5 per cent. Cuban Government bonds in lieu of the securities they now hold, and they will forfeit all claims for unpaid interest. The Ports Improvement Company was formed under a concession granted by the Gomez Administration to clean and dredge the ports of the island. It was to receive a certain percentage of the revenues paid to the Government on merchandise entering Cuba, and its $7,000,000 bond issue was sold principally in the United States and England. When President Menocal entered office he canceled the concession. Protests were made and the Cuban Government agreed to make some form of restitution to the purchasers of the bonds.

EARLY MORNING TOU[R] TO STUDY PARK BIRD[S]

Audubon Society, Led by Wa[lt] McMahon, Makes Close Observations.

FINDS MANY SPECIMEN[S]

Watches Sharp-Shinned Hawk [as] He Descends on a Squirrel and Yellow Hammers.

"Look at him, boys, but don't [get] too close and frighten him."

It was a hermit thrush which [had] flown into a tree in Central Park ea[rly] yesterday morning while the grass [was] very wet with either heavy dews, fr[om] or the moisture from Friday's ra[in] and Walt F. McMahon, leading the S[at]urday morning bird walk of the [Na]tional Association of Audubon Societ[ies] was urging the boys of his party [to] make close observations. There w[ere] about twenty in the party, includ[ing] three small girls and two small bo[ys] who had managed an early breakfast [to] get to the bandstand in the Mall a[t] o'clock for the walk.

"Folks with field glasses get to w[ork] on the hawk," called Mr. McMahon, [and] this proved to be the exciting event [of] the morning. Flying into a tree acr[oss] a long stretch of green at one side [of] the Belvedere was a bird which Mr. [Mc]Mahon identified as a sharp-shin[ned] hawk. It was out either for its bre[ak]fast or for a bit of after-breakfast f[un] and the leader of the bird walk w[as] inclined to think it was the latter. J[ust] after the arrival of the hawk a floc[k of] flickers or yellow hammers could [be] seen dropping into the grass not [far] from the tree. To these and the ta[me] park squirrels, which were out forag[ing] in great numbers, the hawk paid [little] attention. First he dropped down u[pon] a squirrel, and the little animal co[uld] be seen jumping up as if to offer fi[ght] and the yellow flickers, too, rose [bel]ligerently as the hawk swept do[wn] upon them.

"Could he possibly get away with [one] of those flickers?" asked a member [of] the party.

"I don't know, that is for you to s[ay]," said Mr. McMahon.

A pretty little slate-colored cat[bird] his feathers all fluffed up, imply[ing] that he considered it cold, sat fo[r a] long time on a low tree while the pa[rty] gathered and took observations f[rom] all sides. Perhaps he liked adm[ira]tion, for a little later in the Sha[ke]speare Garden the only bird to be [seen] was a little catbird which flew o[n] the fence and then down among [the] flowers. On the Belvedere every [one] looked out on the water for the b[ig] ducks which may now be expected [at] any time. They were not to be s[een] but far out was a streak of white [sea]gulls, the herring or harbor vari[ety] and a red-winged hawk flew over.

"The gulls do good work," said [Mr.] McMahon; "they are scavengers [of] the water as the hawks are on [the] land."

Myrtle warblers, small canary[-like] migratory birds, some of whose n[um]bers stay through the Winter, [were] seen; starlings with their long-cu[rved] bills and blackish plumage now ta[king] on its Fall and Winter khaki tips; [a] brown thrasher which repeats its no[tes;] there was the little kinglet, smaller [than] a canary with orange, crimson and [yel]low combined, with its grayish g[reen] feathers, and the downy woodpecke[r].

Pigeons came familiarly around [the] party and walked through pools [of] water on the walks, leaving quaint li[ttle] tracks on the dry places. There w[ere] many sparrows, and the squir[rels] stood on their hind legs and looked [at] the party, appealing for the atten[tion] which they were not receiving. [The] notes of the blue jay and the g[old]finch were heard, but the birds c[ould] not be seen.

Mr. McMahon told his party wh[at a] tame and likable bird the flicker [was] and how, a member of the woodpe[cker] family, it was changing and acqui[ring] the ground habit.

"You can always tell Mr. and [Mrs.] Flicker apart," he said. "for [Mr.] Flicker wears a black mustache."

Among the hawks and predatory [ani]mals there is the unusual difference [that] the female birds are larger and w[ear] the brightest colors. The cat[bird,] mocking bird of the North, is one [of] the best singers, giving the harsh [cry] cry from its nest in breeding sea[son]. The hermit thrush Mr. McMahon [be]lieves to be the best of all the [song]singers.

A list that is given by the Audu[bon] Society of birds, which private e[xpe]ditions are now likely to f[ind] includes the blue jay, brown thras[her] flicker, gold-crowned kinglet, ki[ng]fisher, phoebe, sparrow hawk, star[ling] and warblers.

TO DISCUSS HELP IN WAR.

Public Service and Railroad Commissions Will Meet in Washington.

Representatives of all of the Public Service and Railroad Regulating Commissions, which are members of the National Association of Railway Commissioners, will meet in Washington Tuesday to discuss in what way they can best serve the Government during the war. The occasion will be the twenty-ninth annual convention of the association, but matters affecting the intimate relations of the members, which have heretofore occupied practically all of the time during former conventions, will be subordinated to matters pertaining to the interests of the nation.

James Blaine Walker, Secretary of the local Public Service Commission and Acting Secretary of the national association, said yesterday that never before in the history of the association has it been called upon to face and solve such problems as are now presented to it.

"The importance of the occasion is fully realized," said Mr. Walker, "and the prospects are that nearly every State in the union will be represented, and that more members will attend the convention than ever before.

"Soon after the declaration of war President Max Tholen of California and the other officers formally tendered to President Wilson the support and co-operation of the National Association of Railway Commissioners toward Government control of the transportation systems of the country. The association, which comprises all of the State commissions having regulatory control powers over the railroads, constitutes a medium of communication between the Federal Government and the States, which should be most useful during the war."

It was said that in all probability the convention would provide for the appointment of committees in each State whose duty it would be to lend a hand to the Government whenever called upon.

Forty-seven of the States now have Public Service or Railroad Commissions, which exercise regulatory powers over all public utilities. The only State which is not thus equipped is Delaware, where the power is still exercised by the Legislature and the local governments.

On Wednesday members of the convention will hold a banquet at the New Willard Hotel, Washington.

PUBLIC SERVICE HEARINGS.

The following important hearings will be held this week by the Public Service Commission:

Tomorrow—Concerning alleged dangerous conditions at the Morris Park station of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, and a complaint of an alleged overcharge made by the New York Edison Company.

Tuesday—On the application of the Bleecker Street & Fulton Ferry Railroad Company for permission to abandon certain of its routes.

Wednesday—On the application of the New York & Richmond Gas Company for the approval of an issue of $2,214,400 of bonds; concerning the compliance of the Edison Electric Illumination Company of Brooklyn and the Kings County Electric Light and Power Company, with a uniform system of accounts, and the compliance of the New York Edison Company with the system prepared by the commission for keeping accounts and making annual reports.

DOUBLE BANK RESOURCES.

Reserve System Swamped with Applications from State Banks.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—The expected landslide of trust companies and State banks to the Federal Reserve system, officials announced today, has begun.

Within the last three weeks so many large trust companies and State banks have joined that the resources of that class of institutions within the system have more than doubled. A steady stream of applications is pouring into the reserve board every day.

Second Plea for Young Widow.

The Widowed Mothers' Fund Association, 192 Bowery, repeats an appeal for contributions toward a fund of $200 to make a young widow with one small child self-supporting. She lost her husband and one baby in February of this year, and has been too ill to work. This fund will make her self-supporting. Gifts may be sent to Mrs. Henry Zuckerman, 32 Broadway, or to the rooms of the association. Thanks are offered [illegible] for $2 each, "A. C. T." for $5, and "J. M. T." for $25 in response to a previous appeal.

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Reduction in Dividends Predicted Because of Excess Profits Tax.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 13.—Advices from the Lake indicate that the Michigan copper output for September was about 8 per cent. below that of August. About the same production is expected this month.

Butte correspondence says that the clearing out of the old workings on the 400-foot level of the Hibernia property of the Davis-Daly Copper Company is well under way.

A local authority forecast a reduction in dividends by several of the porphyries companies because of the excess profits tax. This authority estimates for Chino net earnings, after all taxes, of $8 a share, whereas dividends have been at the rate of $10 a share; for Utah Consolidated earnings of $11.50 a share, whereas dividends have been $14 a share; Nevada Consolidated, $3.50, against dividend rate of $4; Ray Consolidated, $5.50, against dividend rate of $4; Inspiration, $8.50, against $8, and Shattuck Arizona, $5, which has been the dividend rate. Ray Consolidated, it then appears, makes the best showing.

MUST HAVE PROOF OF DEATH

Court Holds That Seven Years' Absence Does Not Suffice.

The Appellate Division of the Second Department has just decided that a seven years' absence is not alone sufficient proof of death, and that in a litigation there must be evidence indicating death. The decision reversed the verdict of a jury in the Kings County Court in favor of May Connor, who sued the New York Life Insurance Company for a policy of $1,000 taken out by Frederick Winnington on June 29, 1904.

On Aug. 11 following, the wearing apparel of Winnington was found in a bath house at Sea Cliff, together with a gold ring and a stick pin in an envelope on which Winnington's name was written. At the trial the plaintiff testified that with her sister she called at a branch office of the insurance company, and was told that as she had no proof of Winnington's death she would have to wait seven years, and then, if the body was not found in the meantime, or Winnington failed to appear, the company would pay the insurance.

Nine years after the disappearance the action was brought. The court found that the action should have been dismissed because it was brought before proofs of death were furnished.

ARMY AND NAVY NOTES.

The popularity which has attached to the War Department's designation of the word "Rainbow" as the name of the guard division of troops at Mineola has resulted in the unofficial adoption by many other divisions of colorful and suggestive appellations. For instance, the Twenty-ninth Division, under Major Gen. Morton, at Anniston, Ala., calls itself the "Blue and Gray Division" because it is made up of troops from the North and the South. The division in training near Greenville, S. C., is known in that part of the country as the "All American Division." This division is made up of guardsmen from the Carolinas and Tennessee. The official records show that 96.6 per cent. of the division are American born, the great majority of them tracing their Americanism for generations back.

In Kentucky there is a little county named Larue, which is famous in history as the native county of Abraham Lincoln. Larue County was called upon to provide 132 selective draft soldiers for the national army. The first 132 men called for examination passed the Government test. Not a single one claimed exemption.

The greatest bookkeeping establishment in America is the Adjutant General's office, in the War Department at Washington. It requires the steady work of nearly 1,000 expert clerks to keep up with the paper work in General McCain's busy office. The day war was declared the mail received daily by the Adjutant General averaged, according to statistics compiled by John C. Scofield, Chief Clerk in the War Department, 3,036 pieces. Today the average is more than 40,000, and it is expected to climb to a daily average of 350,000 within the next few months.

The air patrol of the Atlantic, which will be directed by the navy, is being rapidly perfected and aviation bases have already been established at various strategic points between the Canal Zone and Maine. Each station when completed will have cost about $300,000. Dirigibles as well as seaplanes will be a part of the equipment of each patrol unit. All of the stations will be utilized as far as possible as training schools for aviators, while five other coastal stations in process of construction will be exclusively devoted to training purposes and will be independent of the patrol as such.

Brig. Gen. Charles P. Summerall, the former West Point artillery instructor and the officer who anticipated future trouble years ago, perfected the plan for the great artillery training camp at Tobyhanna, Penn., and then put the plan into operation, is exercising an important artillery command in the new army. Colonel Guy Vidmer, recently the Adjutant at West Point, commands one of the infantry regiments at Camp Upton, while Colonel Robert Lee Howze, famous as the officer who rescued Lieutenant Gilmore of the navy, after that [illegible] dita, is one of the ranking officers of the General Staff. Henry Jervey, who [illegible] sistants in the building of the canal, is one of the new Brigadiers.

The fact that an officer of the army has won the most coveted of American Army honors, namely, the Congressional Medal of Honor, is indicated by the service ribbons which officers wear on their left breasts. The Congressional Medal is awarded only for gallantry in action. White stars on a field of light blue silk, forming part of the service ribbon, mean that the wearer has won this most coveted of honors. Two red, white, and blue bands, separated by a thin band of white, the blue being outermost in each instance, show that the wearer is a Certificate of Merit man. This honor is awarded by the President.

The headquarters clerical staff of the recruiting service of the United States Marine Corps, among many other things, keeps a record of all men who are enlisted whose names are unusual. A recent recruiting report states that among the rookies are two Pippins, while a Kentucky newcomer, who was born on a train, bears the name of Pullman Palace Carr.

The Rockbridge Battery of Field Artillery, which was one of the most famous of all the artillery units on the Southern side in the civil war, has recently been reorganized and will go to France with the Virginia troops. The name Rockbridge is indicative of the fact that the battery comes from the Natural Bridge country. Greenlee D. Letcher, a son of the war Governor of Virginia, will command the battery in France.

One of the signal officers on the staff of General Pershing has recommended that provision be made for a supply of $1,000,000 worth of barbed wire for every month the war lasts. This represents the monthly average of wire loss which is anticipated by General Pershing when his armies get into action.

An officer of the regular army who has been inspecting negro draft soldiers in the South reports that the biggest job of the officers on duty with those troops is to break them of the habit of addressing their commanding officers as "boss." He cites an instance where a negro soldier, from the cotton fields of South Carolina, failed to salute according to military regulations. Instead the soldier lifted his hat and said:

"Good mornin', boss."

"Don't use that word 'boss.' Salute in the proper way," the officer said somewhat sternly to the soldier.

"All right, 'boss'; I won't say 'boss' no more," and the smiling rookie of the cotton fields passed on.

Major Gen. Enoch H. Crowder, the Provost Marshal General of the United States, who directed the mobilization of the national army, states that the examination and mobilization of the more than 600,000 men called to the colors have been accomplished without a single instance of disorder in the entire country. General Crowder's reports show that the men have gone into the service enthusiastically and that already a keen rivalry has developed in the various cantonments in the "efficiency" race now [illegible] of the national army divisions will have the honor of being the vanguard when the "Nationals" are ordered overseas.

DUTCH SHIP CAPTAIN DISCUSSES EMBARGO

Says Action by United States Entails Immense Suffering in Holland—Contention That We Have No Right to Seize Vessels.

The following article was written by the Captain of a Dutch steamship detained in the North River.

IN the beginning of June, 1917, Dutch ships, empty of freight, began to crowd into New York Harbor.

They discharged their ballast at various piers and loaded cargoes, chiefly of grain, flour, and cattle fodder, which had, before that time, been bought by the Dutch Government. Then the greater number of them, while waiting for the Allies' permission to sail for home, found anchorage in the North River, where they have lain for more than two months. Occasionally one of them disappears. She has gone back to her pier to discharge her cargo, which, owing to her long detention, has deteriorated.

Holland's ships and those of her neutral sisters are a precious, but at present a dangerous, possession. Germany aims to bring the Allies to terms by destroying their shipping facilities, while the need of ships for the Allies grows constantly more urgent. This is the great issue in the world war in which neutral ships are closely concerned.

But what is the real meaning of the present condition? Why did so many Dutch ships come to this port? Why are they lying idle during the best time of the year, while abnormally high freight rates, all the world over, call them to work? Why is the Dutch Government put to the daily expense of hundreds of dollars, instead of being able to exploit the only source of income left to Holland?

To understand the answer to these questions one must know more of Holland than that it is a country of canals, windmills, and dikes, much skating, and a recently increasing number of wooden shoes. Holland is, in itself, one of the poorest countries in the world. Except for a very few coal mines, (exceptionally hard worked at present,) it has nothing under the surface. On the surface it has no forests, while the land has been so long under cultivation that only by means of much labor and a liberal use of fertilizers can it be kept productive. Holland requires millions a year to protect itself from the sea and the rivers, and, whereas in other countries there is an amount of free water power, here power must be created to carry the water back to the rivers. Yet, before this war began, Holland was justly called a wealthy country, and her big financial interests in America were well known. But the greater part of that money was not made in Holland proper. It came from and through her colonies and her world trade. Hard and constant work, enterprise, cool reasoning, together with stringent economy during centuries, and simple demands on life, brought about this result.

Holland has to go into the market for all her metals and most of her salt, coal, grain, fodder, and raw materials. She pays for all these with her exports of meat, dairy products, fish, fruits, vegetables, bulbs, shrubs, and finished products, besides her colonial trade, shipbuilding, world freight-carrying, and the revenues of her financial interests in other countries. She must have her imports at any price, at any terms of freight, if all her workmen are not to go idle and all her people to suffer cold and starvation.

At present, her imports are practically cut off, while her export markets are almost entirely closed. She is not allowed by the Allies to carry her exports to any oversea country, not even to her own colonies; she cannot reach England on account of the German submarines; her trade with Germany is more and more hampered by the conditions under which the Allies allow any merchandise to enter Holland; her colonial trade is broken, since there is practically not a ship allowed to keep up that trade; her shipbuilding is stopped for lack of materials; her factories are stopped for lack of coal; her fisheries are idle because of the German danger zones and British mine fields, and the condition of her world freight traffic is revealed on the Hudson River.

Now, let us see what, within a few weeks' time, brought such a great number of Dutch ships to American ports. For a true understanding of this matter, we should have to go back to the beginning of the war, which would give us enough material to fill a book. But it may suffice to state that, as early as 1915, the Dutch Government took into its own hands all imports of grain, soon followed by other staples such as coal, salt, and fodder. She did this in order to keep down prices, assure a reasonable distribution, and prevent exportation.

Under the management of some of the foremost business men of Holland, men of the highest standing, a company was formed called the Netherlands Oversea Trust, to whom first some, and soon practically all, imports had to be consigned. Before they allowed any person or firm to consign to them they carefully considered every case, and after a consignment reached Holland it was not delivered to the owner before he had promised and made himself financially responsible that no part of it would be exported either by him or by future owners. The Netherlands Oversea Trust followed closely every pound of imports till it had reached the hands of the consumer, and attempted in every way to prevent forbidden trade.

That, despite their best intentions and the greatest care, the results were in the beginning not always perfect, can be understood. Few laws are made that leave no loopholes for those who are determined to evade them, and in this case the laws were made to fit conditions never before met with in the world's history. Thus Holland managed to exist, and, though prices soared high and many things were lacking, industry and shipping went through unparalleled difficulties, and the Government's expenses mounted to untold sums, it can be said that the life of the Dutch people went on in a somewhat normal, though distorted, fashion.

Feb. 1, 1917, brought the intensified German submarine war and entirely upset conditions in Holland. Ships under way, learning the facts through their wireless, turned back to a safe port; others, not able to receive the news, proceeded and reached port or were sunk; many were locked up in British harbors. Holland had to stop all her shipping until some understanding with the belligerents could be reached. Not knowing how long that would take, the stocks of many staples being low, the Dutch Government commandeered what stocks there were and issued bread and flour tickets, soon to be followed by cards for beans, rice, potatoes, soap, and all manner of other things to insure the most economical use of the stocks on hand and a fair distribution, and to make any exportation impossible.

Diplomatic negotiations take time. The new German danger zone in the North Sea overlapped a British mine field, so that the passage to and from Holland was entirely cut off. Weeks elapsed before Germany consented to take back her line and open up a channel about eighteen miles wide. England wanted Dutch ships to call at a British port for examination, which would have taken them through at least 800 miles of the danger zone. Just when she had at last agreed to make Halifax a port of examination, thus allowing ships plying between Holland and America to avoid that zone, a British armed merchant ship tried to enter the new waterway, the entrance to Rotterdam, and when Holland, on the ground of her statement of neutrality of August, 1914, refused admittance to this armed ship, the agreement just arrived at with England was canceled once more.

At last, toward the end of May, 1917, a general understanding was reached, and the Dutch Government, having in the meantime requisitioned the whole merchant fleet, sent out all available ships to bring in her cargoes, long since ordered or bought. This, then, explains why so many ships arrived here at the same time. Holland, whose food supply was low, (since she had for months been shut off from the world,) hoped to lay in stores before she might again be cut off and before the rough Winter storms should render traffic through the narrow passage too dangerous. It will be understood that under existing conditions she did not send her ships without being in touch with the official opinion of England and America.

As stated above, the ships, after discharging their ballast, loaded cargoes consisting largely of foodstuffs and cattle fodder, bought and paid for by the Dutch Government. They were then obliged to wait for permission from the British Government to leave America for home. Several ships had already been kept waiting for such permission for weeks, some were loading, while others continued to arrive in New York on their way home from the colonies when, on July 15, the embargo was announced, which has kept them all prisoners to this day. That this embargo entails immense suffering in Holland, amounting almost to a deathblow, even the few lines of our description of conditions in Holland must make clear. However, if the Dutch people can feel that this embargo is necessary and fair, they will uncomplainingly submit; if not, bitter feelings are inevitable.

Embargo, forbidding the export of some or all goods, is the recognized right of every nation under all circumstances. When action is taken against a friendly nation it is customary and courteous to explain the reasons for it. We find them stated in this case also. They are:

1. America wishes to reserve her supplies for her own use and that of her allies.
2. America wishes to prevent her supplies from reaching the enemy via neutral countries.
3. America wishes to prevent her supplies from replacing the products of neutrals which are exported to the enemy.

Now, when an embargo is established at short notice, it affects goods intended for export at various stages. Some are ordered at factories, but not finished or delivered; some have been bought and even paid for; others have been actually delivered, but not yet taken out of the country. No one doubts the right of a nation to make laws affecting her own people's property, but what of goods already sold, which are clearly the property of another nation, and are even loaded into the ships, sent from a great distance, to transport them? That a difference between these two classes of goods is recognized by all nations was clearly confirmed only a short time ago.

When England, in 1915, closed the seas to German products, America insisted on her right to transport those German products which had been bought and paid for by her before the blockade was announced, and, although those products were not necessities of life to America, they passed, with "made in Germany" plainly marked on them, for many months, from Rotterdam through British ports.

Yet law and its history refer to circumstances under which a nation may neglect the question of ownership of goods falling under an embargo. If a country is in urgent need of certain supplies, she can seize all those supplies found within her border, without any regard to ownership, though, of course, refunding all costs and expenses to the owner. But one of the first and simplest proofs of such emergency would be that she take the goods and use them, or that, as in the case of grain which must be kept until the next crop is harvested, she store it where it will keep and not deteriorate. The using of another nation's ships for warehouse purposes can only be justified if there is no place for storage on shore. This is inconceivable when a shortage is claimed.

If America had allowed to pass such supplies as were bought before the embargo, or at least had allowed to pass those which were loaded in ships cleared by the United States Custom House before the embargo, and being held in port by force majeure, (in fact, waiting for permission from England to sail,) or if she had removed the cargo, distributing it for her own use and reimbursing the owners, the situation would have been much clearer. It is not difficult to understand that bitter feelings must be aroused in Holland's people when, on the plea of urgency, their property in wheat is kept from them by a country in which the daily waste of bread exceeds their own ration, while the grain in question is deteriorating.

Without going into the first reason stated for the embargo, let us examine the second reason, namely, that America wishes to prevent her supplies from reaching the enemy via neutral countries. Much has been said and printed about American supplies which have reached Germany during the war through neutral countries, but the date when such goods reached Germany is never mentioned.

When the war broke out and England claimed the right to regulate the supplies for neutral countries, she had to institute the mechanism for doing this. Holland also had to build up the means for keeping supplies from going out of her own country. Therefore, in the beginning, things could not be so carefully controlled as at present. Hence facts relating to irregularities, however true they may be, are of no present value, if the date when they occurred is wanting. We do not hesitate to state that nowadays, except for insignificant leakages at the frontier, checked by all available means, nothing leaves Holland for Germany without a permit from the Dutch Government and the consent of the German Government.

For it is too little realized here that Germany, seeing little benefit in it, to her country in general, and fearful for her finances, fights smuggling as hard as Holland does. The frequent reports in the Dutch papers that a smuggler of a few pounds of coffee or the like had to pay with his life at the hands of the German frontier guards for his attempt are proof of the fact. Also, it must not be forgotten that there was a time, before America entered the war, that American goods went into Germany via Holland, of which the Dutch were merely the carriers for the American merchants, and it is only by stating the date when things occurred that one can determine which cases of the supplying of Germany can be attributed to the Dutch.

The third reason given for the embargo was that America wished to prevent her supplies from replacing the products of neutrals which were exported to the enemy. Of course, such replacing of products leaves open a wide field for discussion. That America does not wish to sell cereals to Holland, if Holland exports to the enemy those raised within her own borders, is clear. As long as America was neutral and England controlled United States exports to Holland, England's rights and those of the neutral countries could be determined by international law. Now that America has entered the war, international law has nothing to do with her supplying neutrals. She may sell her products under whatever conditions she chooses and sees fit to make, and the only restriction which she meets is based on common law, which decrees that it is immoral to exact detrimental conditions from a party which, because of abnormal circumstances at the time, is not free to accept or refuse.

Is America's reason for not selling supplies to Holland for fear of their replacing Dutch products which might go to the enemy valid? At first glance one might say "yes;" for it appears extremely reasonable that Holland should not need American foodstuffs so long as it exports its own products to the enemy. Yet upon closer consideration the flaw in such reasoning is apparent. American wheat or corn, it may be argued, would replace exported Dutch rye or buckwheat, oatmeal would replace Dutch barley, and so on.

There might have been reason to fear such exportation in 1915 or 1916. At present there is none, for in the beginning of this year Holland forbade all exports of cereals. Meats, vegetables, and fruits form a surplus; but they cannot take the place of bread, particularly since it is probable that during the next Winter there may not be sufficient coal to make it possible to prepare them.

Cattle fodder presents a quite different problem. We can appreciate the point of view that America is not called upon to supply Holland with the means of providing Germany with meats; yet this question is not to be disposed of thus. Holland depends, and has always depended, largely on her dairy products. She can slaughter her cattle and turn her pastures into wheat fields, but this would utterly disorganize her large agricultural population and be a blow from which she could not soon recover. One of the reasons why the future looms so dark for Belgium is that that land, so dependent on her industries, has been deprived of her machinery. Should Holland after the war find herself without cattle, her pastures turned into wheat fields, her farm labor disorganized, her economical position would be as bad as that of Belgium.

Holland has not deserved punishment, as some papers try to make the public believe. Though during the first years of the war huge profits were made by some of her people, she has always kept strictly within the limits of neutrality. Therefore it cannot be called fair to demand of neutral Holland that she allow her people to suffer hunger and cold and her working class to degenerate, that she consume her capital and willfully destroy the necessary means by which, when the war is over, she will have to repair her tremendous financial losses.

It must be clearly understood that Holland cannot depend on herself alone for the remainder of the war. She must have certain imports, such as coal, oil, cereals, metals, cotton, &c., and she will have to pay the price asked for them, as long as that price does not involve her going from bad to worse, by endangering her neutrality or ruining her future.

No one doubts America's right to attack Germany in every possible way. She went into the war to win. Yet she must respect the life of the surrounding neutral States, however small they be. If she neglects to do this, she will find out too late that she has widely missed the mark, though she may apparently have attained her high aims.

So much for the present regarding the embargo and the points it involves for Holland.

Let us now consider the charges, to which I have already referred, that are at present being made against Holland. Holland is accused of playing a double game, of sending foodstuffs into Germany by secret means, or in undue quantity, as proven by statistics widely published by the Dutch Government. But are those statistics quoted in full?

We have seen shiploads of oleomargarine, often containing a high percentage of butter, on their way from Holland to England; yet that article is not mentioned in the reports of the comparative quantities of exports to Germany and England. Is this omission to be explained by the fact that the margarine sent to England might equalize the butter shipped to Germany? Fully to understand the Government statistics one must know that the pure food law in Holland forbids the classification of margarine as butter, or vice versa, so that for fair comparison both items must be mentioned.

Another charge against Holland is her recognizing the German danger zone by refusing to send her ships through it. Holland never recognized the right of Germany to establish that zone, and most strongly protested against it, but the existence of the zone she was forced to recognize, since she, like other nations, has experienced the fact. What chance has a Dutch ship to pass safely through the danger zone? Holland's neutrality forbids her to accept British protection, and she cannot arm her ships or take other precautions without having the ships justly considered and treated as enemy ships. From time to time we see articles concerning Holland, quoted from or supplied by Dutch newspapers. Strange to say, these articles generally come from papers which are not highly thought of in Holland, and even from such as are considered, in Holland, to be influenced by the Allies.

Why has Holland suddenly sunk from the high place she has heretofore held in the esteem of Americans? Why is she described as being strongly pro-German? Long before America suffered any actual losses through German mines or submarines, Holland had to book many such losses. Can Holland, for this and other reasons, be suspected of feeling undue sympathy for the perpetrator of these acts?

But to what do all these suspicions lead? Once more we turn to the newspapers and readily find the answer. America wants to seize Dutch ships. The Allies are in great need of them, since scarcity of ships has become and is daily growing to be a more important factor in the war. To augment her shipping England took from Holland ships which, for years, had enjoyed the hospitality of the Dutch flag, on the plea that they were owned chiefly by British capital. That was before America entered the war.

At present America, with her allies, contemplates going a step further. Has America the right to commandeer Dutch ships? The papers say "Yes." But every one who knows anything about international law says "No." That America realizes the doubtfulness of her right is proved by the length of time it takes her to arrive at a decision, and also by the preparation of the public mind by the press and by the means employed, such as embargo, coal licenses, bunker accommodation, &c., to obviate the difficulty. We have even read that America will not exert her right but is trying to arrive at an understanding or to make a contract with Holland. Taking into consideration the situation of Holland, and knowing the conditions offered her, we cannot consider that such a deal would be a fair and honest contract as between free parties.

As the situation is at present America, by means of her embargo and coaling licenses, makes it impossible to carry anything from this country to Holland. England, by means of her control of neutral imports, prevents practically all ships from other parts of the world from reaching the Netherlands. She is willing to relax these measures if Holland will submit to the following demands: Stop all exports to Germany; bring all surplus of Dutch foodstuffs to England; take from her colonies sugar, coffee, rubber, and tin, and carry them to America; hand over all her ships (at present the greatest contraband of war, from the German standpoint) to the Allies.

Is it not clear that Germany need no longer respect Dutch neutrality if Holland should stray from the narrow path to the extent of agreeing to such demands? Is it not clear that, even if Holland should decide to pay so high a price to keep her people from starving, the result might be nil, since Holland's geographical position is such that it would be easy for Germany to sink every ship conveying foodstuffs to Holland?

When the war for European supremacy broke out, Holland, a small country which for several hundred years has exerted no influence in international politics, decided to keep out of the war. She declared her neutrality in the form prescribed by international law, and in an irreproachable manner she has lived up to it. To whichever side sinned against her neutrality, she uttered protests as strong as they could be uttered by a nation which knew that its entry into the war would mean suicide. Yet Holland has kept fully prepared to take up the sword against any trespasser on her territory, thus doing to the full the duty of a land situated between two countries at war.

Holland, being a small country, was naturally neutral. She did not expect much love from any of the great nations. Through her geographical situation, war profits (such as came to America naturally through her trade with the Allies) came to Holland most naturally from Germany. But Germany, on the other hand, frequently hurt her feelings, injured her trade, and damaged and destroyed her possessions. Always she did these things in an uncompromising and therefore often rude manner. But Holland was not spared hardships imposed by the Allies. Blockade, detention of her ships for weeks and months, coal licenses, embargo, the cutting off of trade with her own colonies, all these things and more she has had to suffer.

Holland is convinced that, just as a Belgian relief was created to meet a need, a Holland relief also would see the light if necessity arose, but she would prefer, if possible, to take care of herself. This she can perfectly well do, if she be only allowed the rights and courtesies due to a strictly honest and neutral State. Holland's people are not excitable, but they have a good memory, and though they are not a powerful nation, they have a sufficiently high standing in the world to be represented by their own page in the history of the present time. In the excitement of this greatest of wars, right, law, and humanity may be temporarily obscured. History is not blinded by such excitement, and will clearly present every act in its true light.

It seemed to us that it might be of importance to the people, who rule America, to understand more fully her present dealings with Holland. We fully appreciate that America's entry into the war brought so many problems that not all could receive the full attention due them. We are convinced that Holland's interests are safe in the hands of a people that is ready to sacrifice everything in order to rid the world forever of the doctrine that "Might makes Right."

cannot be combatted by merely periodically cleaning the motor. From the minute the motor is cleaned carbon begins forming again and you go on with your motor growing sicker and sicker until you have it cleaned again. KEEP YOUR MOTOR CLEAN! YOU CAN DO IT IF YOU INSTALL THE and have a motor that every day in the year has that snap and dash that makes motoring worth while—a motor full, not of carbon, but of life and energy. A motor that jumps when you touch the accelerator, that climbs with eagerness; that throttles down to a walk in high gear. DON'T TAKE OUR WORD FOR IT—HERE IS THE PROOF!

The Automobile Club of America

"With an Esta attached to a carbonized motor at the end of the decarbonizing run there was obtained in one hour's time an increase in speed of 35.7 per cent and of power 33.6 per cent, also a decrease in fuel consumption of 17.2 per cent.

"As regards the decrease in fuel consumption when using the Esta Auxiliator, the greatest amount, which was as much as 43.3 per cent, took place when the motor was idling with no loads."

Pratt Institute of Brooklyn

"At the end of the test there was shown an average decrease in fuel consumption of 25.5 per cent and an average increase of 27.5 per cent in speed over the first test, while the engine was developing almost 35 per cent more power than at the beginning of these tests.

"The results of these tests would indicate the following points in favor of the Esta Water Auxiliator:

1. Decreased fuel consumption.
2. Increased speed.
3. Increased power.
4. Smoother operation.
5. More nearly perfect combustion.
6. No carbon deposited.

ST. CHARLCOTE WINS UNITED HUNTS JUMP

Edward M. Weld's Horse Proves He Is King of American Steeplechasers.

FINAL CARD OF THE SEASON

Mrs. Payne Whitney's Cherry Malotte Loses Good Chance by Stumble at Last Fence.

Edward M. Weld's St. Charlcote demonstrated that he is the king of the present-day jumpers when he won the second half of the Double Event that was a stirring feature of the United Hunts meet that rang down the season's curtain yesterday on racing in this State. The finish was even closer than when this same son of St. Savin snatched victory from Cherry Malotte at Piping Rock last Wednesday, and it was only by the narrow margin of a nose that he gained the verdict from Joseph E. Widener's Maitre Corbeau. Only three horses started, but the contest over the stiff course of three miles was bitterly fought out, and there were pangs of regret for the admirers of Mrs. Payne Whitney when her gallant mare Cherry Malotte stumbled after clearing the last fence and destroyed what at the time looked to be an excellent chance to carry off the honors.

There was a great crowd of cross-country enthusiasts to see the final racing of the year over the best course in the metropolitan district. The weather and crowd were typical of old-fashioned hunt meets, and, in the absence of the usual stand, the spectators surged in the inner field and lined the rails of the course to obtain vantage points for a view of the races that carried the contestants well out into the open country.

Army and Navy Men Attend.

More than a sprinkling of the army and navy mingled with the crowd, the most prominent of the officers being Admiral Usher, Commandant of the Navy Yard, who had a place in the Stewards' stand during the running of the races. The blue of the navy and the khaki of the army were to be found everywhere, and in accordance with the fitness of things the bugler, who called the racers to the post and sounded taps when the sport ended, was also arrayed in a businesslike khaki uniform.

Many of the gentlemen riders who add distinction to this annual fixture were absent on military duty, and the manner in which the service has encroached on this sport was shown by the fact that four of the six members of the Race Committee have military titles attached to their names. Under these circumstances John Tucker of Philadelphia was the only amateur in the saddle. He was a host in himself, for he guided his two mounts to victory, scoring with Morton L. Schwartz's Archdale and Mrs. G. H. Stetson's Ben Wyvis in the flat races that served as a diversion to the races through the field.

St. Charlcote's victory placed Mr. Weld in the position of owning the two best steeplechasers in the country, as the stable companion of yesterday's winner is Weldship, champion for several years past. It also was remunerative, as six of the leading owners subscribed $500 for the privilege of naming horses, making a total of $3,000 taken down by the winner in addition to the valuable cup presented by the United Hunts. The small field did not detract a whit from the credit due the winner, as the poorer jumpers had been weeded out in earlier competitions, leaving the cracks of three stables to fight it out. J. E. Widener's imported horse Maitre Corbeau was a slight favorite over St. Charlcote, with Cherry Malotte the outsider.

Maitre Corbeau Takes Lead.

Maitre Corbeau had the lowest weight and set out to make the pace, with Cherry Malotte following and then giving way to St. Charlcote on the backstretch of the first turn of the course. On passing the judges for the first time Maitre Corbeau held a lead of six lengths, with St. Charlcote three lengths in front of Cherry Malotte. Powers saved ground with Cherry Malotte in rounding the next turn and closed on the leaders as they raced again along the backstretch, with each horse jumping beautifully. Going down the hill Cherry Malotte made up more ground, and on the far turn the mare had passed St. Charlcote and was gaining rapidly on Maitre Corbeau.

Those who did not know the stoutheartedness of St. Charlcote thought that he was beaten as they turned into the stretch, with only two jumps to take. Maitre Corbeau was leading by two lengths at that time and St. Charlcote was three lengths further back. All the boys were driving through the stretch, and Cherry Malotte gained steadily, so that in leaping the last fence she was in the air at the same time as Maitre Corbeau. The speedy jump of the mare caused her to stumble and go almost to her knees as she landed—and with St. Charlcote four lengths back, Maitre looked almost a certain winner.

Cherry Malotte recovered quickly and managed to get on even terms with the French horse before she felt the effects of her mishap and fell back. This was fifty yards from the finish, and St. Charlcote was still three lengths behind, but going great. The son of St. Savin made little of this handicap, and tearing along on the outside with terrific strides he closed so quickly that he shot across the line locked with Maitre Corbeau so closely that the crowd did not know which horse had won until the official decision showed that St. Charlcote's nose was in front at the critical moment.

In the opening race for three-year-old jumpers Captain J. E. Davis's Melodrama repeated his victory of Piping Rock, with Herbert L. Pratt's Brand taking the place when Onunda fell and Rural lost her rider. In the Autumn Steeplechase Handicap, Med Henderson rode one of his best races on Morton L. Schwartz's Crest Hill, catching W. A. Prime's Silver Dart at the last fence and winning by the margin of half a length. This constituted a double for Mr. Schwartz, as he had previously won the highweight handicap on the flat with Archdale. The Stayers' Cup for a two-mile and a quarter race on the flat was captured easily by Mrs. G. H. Stetson's Ben Wyvis, and the last race over the brush was a gallop for G. Brooke. 3d's, Eagle Thistle.

SARATOGA WINNERS NAMED.

Four Entered for Annual Rose Tree Hunt Meet.

The Rose Tree Hunt Club race meet to be held for the benefit of the Red Cross next Saturday and the following Wednesday and Saturday promises to be one of the best horse racing events held in Philadelphia for many years. Though the entries at the present are not yet complete, no less than four winners at Saratoga have already been nominated. Major Cassatt's Trite, and Terigourdine, Walter M. Jefford's Red Sox, and the Glenn Riddle Reveller will be found competing for the trophies and purses that are at stake in the three-day meet.

For the racegoer, one of the most interesting events will be the Edgemont Plate, to be run next Saturday. This race is for two-year-olds, and is the first time that the yearlings have been given a chance at a Hunt Club meet. The distance is seven furlongs, and some speedy youngsters will try for the honors.

The full list of entries will be given out early this week. Some of the owners represented are as follows: Major Cassatt, Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. Jeffords, F. Ambrose Clark, Archibald Barklie, George Brooks III, M. L. Schwartz, W. R. Martin, R. B. Strassburger, Ivan Fox, Walter J. Salmon, the Glenn Riddle Farms, A. B. Harvey, Lieutenant Toland, Miss Frayling, and J. S. Leiper.

The track is being put into the best of condition and the Racing Committee hopes to carry through the meet without any serious accidents in the steeplechase races, which are, of course, numerous in any Hunt Club meet. Last year, because the jumps were placed correctly, and also because such very high class steeplechase horses were racing, not a single serious accident occurred.

SIX PRIZES ADDED TO LIST.

Lively Interest Manifested in Annual Horse Show.

Announcement that the entire receipts of the National Horse Show will this year be given to the Red Cross has resulted in the donation of so many special prizes that the association yesterday sent out a supplemental prize list for the thirty-second annual exhibition, which begins on Nov. 12, at Madison Square Garden. The original list was the largest in the history of the association, yet within a week after its publication six more special prizes, amounting to $800, were offered by prominent horse fanciers, who wish to see $100,000 realized for the war relief fund through the medium of the coming show.

That four of these prizes are for competitions exclusively for women is significant of the part which women of society will take in this year's exhibition. They have not only formed a committee representing the Red Cross, but they are going to ride and drive in the ring and help to make the show.

One of the new classes for women promises to rival the annual competition for the Alfred G. Vanderbilt Memorial Gold Cup as a spectacular feature of the week at the Garden. It is for hunt teams of three qualified hunters shown in hunt uniform by women, who are masters, whips, or members of a recognized hunt club, uniforms and appointments to count 25 per cent. in determining the award. The conformation and quality of the horses will count 25 per cent. and their performance over fences 50 per cent.

Though entries will not close until Wednesday, it is understood that several women who are members of the Red Cross Committee are to be represented in the ring when this interesting class is judged.

Another of the added special prizes is for women's qualified hunters to be ridden [illegible] is for pairs of hunters, one to be ridden by a woman and one by a man; then there is a new special prize for the best three hunters ridden by women, in all of which classes society women will ride their horses over the jumps in the Garden. Tandems driven by women will compete for still another of the new special prizes.

Among the prominent horsewomen who are members of the Ladies' Committee representing the Red Cross are the following: Mrs. Arthur Scott Burden, Chairman; Mrs. August Belmont, Jr., Lady Beck, Mrs. Walter P. Bliss, Mrs. Burke Roche, Mrs. George F. Baker, Jr., Mrs. Edward H. Carle, Mrs. John E. Cowdin, Mrs. Preston Davie, Miss Lida L. Fleitmann, Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt, Miss Marion Hollins, Mrs. Arthur Iselin, Mrs. W. Goadby Loew, Mrs. Adolf Ladenburg, Mrs. C. C. Rumsey, Mrs. Robert E. Tod, Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, and Mrs. David Wagstaff.

NAVY HAS AN EASY TIME.

Overwhelms Maryland State Eleven by a Score of 62 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 13.—Navy warriors took the Maryland State lads into camp on Farragut Field here this afternoon, 62 to 0. While the game showed improvement in Navy's play and indicated a gradual development of greater smoothness of team play, it did not indicate anything like the improvement which the sailor rooters boasted.

A better team than they had last week the sailors undoubtedly have, but whether they have shown the stamina that will enable them to wallop the Indians on next Saturday is entirely a different matter.

In the squad which Curley Bird brought to Annapolis this afternoon were only two veterans of last year's Aggie 'Varsity, and of these the only one who showed any real class was Mills.

The lineup:

| Navy, (62.) | Position. | Md. State, (0.) |
|---|---|---|
| Graves | L. E. | Wiseman |
| Saunders | L. T. | Sullivan |

Special to The New York Times.

LAWRENCEVILLE, N. J., Oct. 13.—The Lawrenceville football team defeated the Barringer High School team of Newark, N. J., here today by the score of 6 to 0. The tally came in the last few minutes of play when Lewis made a touchdown on a line plunge after several trick formations.

COLUMBIA ELEVEN OPENS IN VICTORY

Howard Miller Again Proves Formidable in Contest with Naval Reserves.

DISPLAYS STRONG ATTACK

Offensive of Blue and White Shoves Visitors Back and Brings Decisive Results.

In the first test of its football team yesterday, against an eleven from the Naval Reserves and Militia of Brooklyn, the Columbia varsity showed a wealth of football material and knowledge, and won 24 to 0. Howard Miller, the star quarter back of two years ago, was the individual expert, scoring one touchdown, a drop-kick, and three goals from touchdown. Shaw's seventy-eight-yard run, after intercepting a forward pass, followed close after Cole of the navy had made fifty yards on a similar play.

On the first kickoff Miller went thirty yards. After a clever lateral pass and a short run by Canapary had made it first down, Houlahan punted forty-five yards. A punting duel followed, with Houlahan gaining five yards on each exchange. There was no scoring in the first quarter. A stiff offensive brought a score early in the second quarter. Houlahan passed to Miller, who traveled twenty-five yards. On three plays Shaw gained two first downs. With the ball on the navy's six-yard line, Canapary made one yard, and Houlahan followed with a buck that carried him over for Columbia's first score. Miller kicked the goal.

After Canapary and Shaw had carried the ball to the navy's twenty-eight-yard line, Cole intercepted a forward pass and ran fifty yards. Kelley failed to gain, and on the next play Shaw intercepted another forward and went seventy-eight yards for a touchdown. Miller kicked the goal as the half finished.

Howard Miller hoisted the ball over the bar for his first drop-kick of the season shortly after the second half began. At the start of the last quarter Shaw gained twenty yards around end. Rosen and Canapary carried the ball to the three-yard line, where Miller put his head down and wormed his way to another touchdown.

The lineup:

HARVARD DEFEATS SAILORS.

Crimson Eleven Scores 35 Points Against Naval Reserves.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 13.—Harvard defeated the Naval Reserve eleven from Humkin Island 35 to 0 this afternoon at the Harvard stadium. Both teams furnished flashes of interesting football at times, although the Reserve team showed lack of training and found it hard to check the advance of the better-coached Harvard eleven. Horween and Works starred for Harvard in the back field during the first half, while Hoffman carried the ball well in the second half. Tirrell and Schow excelled for the Reserves. A naval band added much to the enjoyment of the 4,000 spectators.

In the first half Harvard gathered 16 points. The first two came as a gift in the form of a safety, when Cedarstrand passed over the head of Schow, who fell on the ball behind his own goal line. Horween scored twice on short line bucks after he and Works had plunged through their opponents' line from midfield. Horween kicked both goals.

In the second half Hoffman ran the kick-off back 40 yards to the Navy team's 30-yard mark. Three plunges and Blanchard scored. A few moments later Francis, Harvard's centre, intercepted a forward pass and ran 80 yards to put it on the 12-yard mark. Crosscup hit the line for the touchdown. The last score was made by Hoffman. He ran 38 yards on an end play, and was downed on the 2-yard mark, and carried it over on the next play. Works kicked the goal.

PENN STATE ON A RAMPAGE.

Overwhelms St. Bonaventure, 99 to 0 in Scores of Powerful Rushes.

Special to The New York Times.

STATE COLLEGE, Penn., Oct. 13.—St. Bonaventure's football team was crushed by Pennsylvania State on Beaver Field today by the score of 99 to 0. After sixty points had been hung up, State's coaches sent in second and third string men. Only one regular appeared in the lineup after the first half. The visitors had no attack, and their defense was like paper. The Blue and White backs circled ends, smashed through a thin line, and romped down the field for fifteen touchdowns.

Two touchdowns, by Black and Rauch, were tallied from State kick-offs that went over the goal line. The St. Bonaventure players failed to touch the ball down, and it was dropped on for scores on both occasions. Against the substitutes the defeated team launched a forward passing attack in the last period. Two first downs resulted but that was the extent of St. Bonaventure's ground gaining. Czarneckie played a powerful defensive game at right guard, and Ullery, a new man at full back, showed offensive strength in his first 'Varsity trial.

The lineup:

| Penn State, (99.) | Position. | St. Bonav't'e, (0.) |

WEST VA. BEATS CARLISLE.

Scores 21 Points in Final Period of Game.

Special to The New York Times.

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Oct. 13.—West Virginia did not wake up until the fourth quarter in her game against the Carlisle Indians here today, but when she did, she put across three touchdowns and kicked the resultant goals in short order, and won the game, 21 to 0. The Redskins insisted on eight-minute quarters, and through the first three brief periods West Virginia played listlessly, fumbled, and made other errors of omission and commission.

The third quarter ended with the ball in her possession on the Indians' 6-yard line, where it had been placed, following a 21-yard penalty for slugging by Long Time Sleep. Then a 5-yard dash by Harris, 7 by Rodgers, and 4 by King. From here Rodgers bucked it over soon after the fourth quarter started. The Indians received the next kick-off, and on an attempted forward pass Rodgers intercepted, and ran it back to the Indians' 25-yard line. Lentz then made 3 yards, Harris contributed a fine dash for 15, and King made the touchdown on the next play. The Indians again received, but punted to midfield on the fourth down.

On the first play, with the ball in her possession, West Virginia engineered the most sensational play of the game, when Rodgers hurled a long pass for 30 yards to Mills, and the light-haired Keyser prep. star dashed the other 30 yards for a touchdown. Rodgers kicked all three goals following these plays.

The game was a poor exhibition for the first three quarters, neither team gaining consistently, and West Virginia's miscues being conspicuous. The Indians made three first downs during the course of the game. Captain Bailey played a fine game, as did Rodgers, Mills, Ice, and Harrick. McCue was also strong on the defense.

The lineup:

| West Virginia, (21.) | Position. | Carlisle, (0.) |

OHIO STATE WINS AGAIN.

Western Conference Champions Beat Northwestern, 40 to 0.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 13.—Outclassing Northwestern University in every department of the game, Ohio State University, last year's western conference champions, today defeated the Purple warriors in the first conference game on State's schedule, by a score of 40 to 0.

The combined efforts of "Chic" Harley, all-America half back, who performed at right half, and Stinchcomb, at left, together with some fast work by Ohio State ends and tackles, all worked the downfall of the Purple. Holding and slugging in the latter part of the game cost the purple team penalties of fifteen yards at two different times and the Methodist school lost many downs because of playing off side.

AMBULANCE MEN VICTORS.

Special to The New York Times.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Oct. 13.—The United States Ambulance Corps team of Allentown scored their first win of the season here this afternoon when they trounced the Seventh Infantry of Gettysburg 43 to 0. Superior team work on the part of the men from the Allentown camp, aiding the brilliant plunges and open-field runs of Mike Murphy, "Tuffy" Conn, and Cramer, accounted for the victory.

The lineup:

VICTORY FOR ARMY OVER V. M. I. CADETS

West Pointers' Powerful Attack in Second Half Rolls Up 34 to 0 Tally.

OLIPHANT SCORES THRICE

Southern Team Causes Worry in First Half, but Offensive Weakens by Degrees.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Oct. 13.—Virginia Military Institute, coming here for the first time, tasted defeat at the hands of a patched-up Army eleven this afternoon. The West Pointers, slow to hit their stride, launched a terrific crushing drive at the opening of the second half, which carried the Virginia cadets repeatedly behind their own goal line until the score had totaled 34 to 0.

The Southerners at the outset caused the Army men some worry and managed to stave off the Northern cadets during the whole of the first period. In fact, after Oliphant, Captain of the Army eleven, had fumbled on their 8-yard line early in the quarter, the Virginians with a puzzling, shifting attack battered the left side of the Army's line and succeeded in registering several first downs before the West Pointers woke up.

But the Dixie lads erred in that they did most of their rushing while well back in their own territory, when a kicking game seemed the best strategical move. Neither team displayed a particularly strong kicking game. Oliphant did all the Army's kicking. Aside from this feature of the game Oliphant's running and Knight's powerful defensive play marked the Army's work today.

The cadets were minus the services of several of their 'Varsity men, among them Van De Graff and McQuarries. Virginia got to the Army's thirty-five-yard line in the second period, and at this point Leech made a try for field goal, which went low and wide of the posts. The West Pointers launched only three air line plays during the game. Two were incompleted, but Barton caught one of Post's tosses in the last minute of the game and went over for the final touchdown.

In the second period Oliphant ran sixty yards to a touchdown after securing the ball when a V. M. I. back fumbled, but the score was not allowed because the referee said an Army man tripped a visiting player. The West Pointers received rather a severe setback at the hands of the officials today in the matter of penalties.

The Army scored its first touchdown in the second period, when Oliphant dashed off tackle for a ten-yard gain and the score. He booted an easy goal. The first half closed Army, 7; Virginia Military Institute, 0.

The Army ran amuck at the opening of the second half. Oliphant, Monroe, and Wicks drove through the centre and off tackle for big gains, and Oliphant rang the scoring gong twice more, kicking both goals before he gave way to Bartlett. Monroe on a line plunge through centre scored another touchdown at the opening of the final quarter, but in his trial for goal missed fire by several inches.

A forward pass of twenty-five yards straight over the line of scrimmage, Post to Barton, was responsible for the Army's final touchdown, after which Epes booted a pretty goal. The West Pointers used a host of substitutes during the game, and although V. M. I. rushed fresh men into the fray at frequent intervals, they were unable to withstand the Army's onslaughts.

AMHERST OUTPLAYS UNION.

Home Team Overcomes Early Lead of Visitors to Pratt Field.

Special to The New York Times

AMHERST, Mass., Oct. 13.—Amherst defeated the heavier Union eleven this afternoon on Pratt Field by the score of 19 to 6. After the first quarter, when Union tallied its only touchdown, the game was in Amherst's hands, and not until the last five minutes of play did the Garnet threaten to score again.

Amherst was handicapped by the loss of Captain Bodenhorn, but O'Brien, who substituted, played good football. Phillips and Perry carried the ball for Amherst, and consistently pushed into Union territory. Notable plays were a double pass, O'Brien to Davis to Phillips, for the first Amherst touchdown; Perry's off tackle dashes, and Phillips's end runs.

The line-up:

| Amherst, (19.) | Position. | Union, (6.) |
|---|---|---|
| Davidson | L. E. | Mosher |
| Bliss | L. T. | Lehman |
| Cummings | L. G. | Gregory |
| Bennayan | C. | Hochuli |

Touchdowns—Moynihan, O'Brien, Phillips, (2.) Goal from touchdown—Bliss. Substitutions—Amherst, Kimball for Cummings, Kilby for Perry. Referee—Carpenter, Harvard. Umpire—Johnson, Springfield College. Linesman—Sugelle, Brown.

GREAT MATCHES OF THE AMERICAN TURF

Coming Event at Laurel Revives Memories of Stirring Contests of the Past.

Few of the present generation of turfmen have seen a match race such as will take place next Thursday, when Omar Khayyam and Hourless meet at a mile and a quarter on the Laurel track to decide the supremacy of the three-year-old division. In recent years match races have been frowned on by the Jockey Club and there is a rule of racing which forbids such contests. This rule is still in force, and for that reason Omar Khayyam will meet Hourless in a special event, the conditions of which, however, were framed so that it would be to all intents and purposes a match race.

It remains, therefore, for old timers to relate details of the stirring contests that quickened the blood of spectators when the leading owners of the eighties and early nineties would jump at a chance for a match that would demonstrate without question which of them owned the fastest thoroughbred. Though immense amounts were wagered on those contests, there was never a suspicion afterward that the best horse had not won. The calibre of the sportsmen engaged was sufficient to guarantee that their representatives would be fit and would make every effort to win. Later, when unscrupulous men obtained a foothold on the turf, it was believed that the match race gave opportunities for sure thing gamblers, and the Jockey Club issued its edict against this form of the sport.

Lorillard Versus Lorillard.

Among the famous racing men who dearly loved the excitement of match contests were Pierre Lorillard and George Lorillard. When no other owner could be found to take up the gauntlet, these brothers raced against one another and were just as keen rivals as though they were pitted against strangers. The Dwyer brothers, then in the heyday of their career, also were inveterate matchmakers, but, as in their other turf ventures, Michael and Phillip were partners and matched their champions against outsiders. They displayed so much acumen that it was a truism of the turf that the Dwyers never lost a match.

The first really important contest in which the Dwyer brothers figured with Pierre Lorillard as the opposing sportsman was when Luke Blackburn carried the red and blue sash to victory over a mile and a half course at Sheepshead Bay in 1880. Jimmy McLaughlin rode Luke Blackburn and scored decisively over Mr. Lorillard's Uncas. Two years later the Dwyers were represented by Onondaga, which defeated Pierre Lorillard's Sachem.

Perhaps one of the most remarkable instances of the astuteness of the Dwyers in matchmaking was in 1885, when they issued a defi that led to the matching of Miss Woodford against Freeland, which was owned by Ed. Corrigan. Previous to this engagement Freeland had beaten Miss Woodford on two occasions, making the condition of affairs similar to that which obtains for the coming struggle at Laurel. Monmouth Park was selected as the battle ground and Jimmy McLaughlin was intrusted with the handling of Miss Woodford, wh. Isaac Murphy had the mount on Freeland. The distance was a mile and a quarter and the race was in many respects a counterpart of that recently run by Hourless and Omar Khayyam at Belmont Park. The horses came down the long stretch locked together, but at the finish McLaughlin maintained the supremacy of the Dwyers by landing the mare's head in front of Freeland. The time was 2:09½.

Salvator Lucky to Beat Tenny.

There are thousands of sportsmen living today who remember the meeting of Salvator and Tenny at Sheepshead Bay on June 25, 1890. It may be taken for granted that a majority of these will dispute the enthusiasts who declare that the Realization of that year was the greatest race ever run on the American turf. At this time Salvator had not made his great straightaway mile in 1:35½. He was owned by J. B. Haggin, who thought he had the best horse in the country, while David T. Pulsifer, who owned Tenny, believed that the swayback could beat him. The distance chosen for the supreme test was a mile and a quarter, with Isaac Murphy as the jockey for Salvator and Snapper Garrison for Tenny.

Salvator was a slight favorite, but this had no effect on David Pulsifer, who took tickets on his horse for any amount that the layers would give. One of these was made out to the tune of $12,000 to $10,000, and that was only one of the many that the owner of Tenny invested in. That he was unlucky to lose, many of those who saw the thrilling contest believe to this day. The official story of the race scarcely gives enough credit to the swayback, according to good judges of racing, who insist that Tenny would have won but for bearing out in the stretch.

Salvator went to the front on the back stretch, but Garrison, depending on the finish that made his name famous, made no effort to race with the Haggin candidate. Then on turning into the stretch Tenny spoiled all the well-laid plans by bolting to the outside of the track. Garrison straightened him, but, according to spectators, Tenny bore out on three distinct occasions. Finally Garrison got him straight for good and began to cut down Salvator's lead. The Garrison finish never received a more artistic touch than on this occasion. At every stride the swayback gained on the flying leader, but the effort came a shade too late, for, with the thousands yelling distractedly, Salvator crossed the line a winner by a nose. The mile and a quarter had been covered in the fast time of 2:05.

Another match that aroused great interest arose out of the Futurity of 1893, when James R. Keene's Domino won, with Richard Croker's Dobbins in third place. Mr. Croker was sure that his colt would have won but for interference, and Mr. Keene gave him the opportunity to test his theory in a match over the Futurity course. Fred Taral rode Domino, and Willie Simms was astride of the Croker champion. Two great horses and two great riders were pitted against each other, but the distance was too short for either thoroughbred to demonstrate his superiority. All the way through the Sheepshead Bay straight course of a trifle less than six furlongs the two horses were almost together. Domino held a slight advantage for the first quarter, but for the next three-eighths Mr. Croker's horse had his head in front. Then with an eighth to go the pair became locked together and neither could gain the advantage. Thus they ran to the line in front of the judges, and the official verdict was the rare one of a dead heat.

CORNELL DEFEATED BY WILLIAMS, 14-10

In Last Minutes of Game Boynton Races Fifty Yards for Score That Triumphs.

ITHACA ELEVEN SURPRISED

Purple Team Comes from Behind to Cut Down Red and White on Its Home Field.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Oct. 13.—Held scoreless until the final period of play, Williams came back with a strong punch in this chapter of today's football game, and by scoring two touchdowns defeated Cornell by the score of 14 to 10. The purple was lighter than Cornell, but much faster, however, and few in the stands thought Williams had a chance to win until five minutes before the end of the game, when Boynton darted through right tackle, and then making a sharp curve to the left eluded Cornell's forwards and raced across the goal line at the northwest corner of the field.

Carry, Cornell's quarter, was playing up, and he never got within hailing distance of the fleet Williams quarter. This run clinched the game, because, although Cornell staged a magnificent come back, carrying the ball fifty yards before it was finally held on Williams's ten-yard line, it lacked the punch at the final moment. Williams's first score came at the opening of the last period. Just before the third quarter closed. Wright ran back a punt for thirty yards, taking the ball well into Cornell territory. A few rushes advanced the ball to Cornell's ten-yard line, and then after a line play failed Boynton fooled Cornell by drawing in the Ithaca backs and tossing a forward pass to Brown back of the line for a touchdown.

Cornell scored in the second period when Hoffman made a drop kick, and in the third period when, after a successful pass, Hoffman to Rubenstein, Hoffman broke through for a seven-yard run and a touchdown.

TRIUMPH FOR FORDHAM.

Norwich Eleven Crushed Under Score of 60 to 0.

Fordham's "war" eleven worked like a juggernaut yesterday in mowing down the Norwich University team on Fordham Field by a score of 60 to 0. Using open plays almost exclusively, the locals scored nine touchdowns, and by tight defensive work in difficult situations kept their own line from being crossed.

Bill Erwig, with his right hand taped in bandages, made his season's début for Fordham and celebrated the occasion by making three touchdowns. He made end dashes of sixty, forty, and thirty yards. Frank Frisch, the freshman back, contributed four scores and left a trail of Norwich tacklers in his wake every time he carried the ball. He scored the first touchdown on the initial play by a sixty-yard dash.

Norwich made two sustained advances down the field. In the first period the visitors ran straight thrusting, worked the ball for four first downs to the Fordham 15-yard mark, when they lost the ball on downs. In the third period the Vermonters again went on a rampage and carried the ball to within a foot of the final mark. Three offside penalties and one for holding helped the visitors along, although Liston and Beowe were successful in getting through the left side of the line.

Fordham worked every forward pass except one, and this was intercepted by Martin, the dusky Norwich back, behind the goal line. Fordham fumbled on the 5-yard line on one occasion on which a score was imminent.

Colletti scored Fordham's second touchdown in the second period on a straight plunge. In the same period the locals advanced the length from midfield 10 yards on Frisch's dash. Erwig then skirted left end for a touchdown. Erwig made the next score on a 10-yard dash.

In the third period Frisch swept around end for fifteen yards and a score. In the same period Frisch intercepted a pass on Fordham's 40-yard line and on the next play Erwig, on a shift formation, went around for a score.

In the fourth period Brennan scored after receiving a pass from Frisch. Erwig's 30-yard dash and Dumoe's pass placed Fordham in position for a score and Frisch obliged on an end run. Frisch made the last score running a punt back 30 yards.

Lineup:

STEVENS BEATS WESLEYAN.

Scores Only Touchdown of Game in Second Quarter.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Oct. 13.—Stevens Institute smashed down the field in the second quarter this afternoon, pushing Bloss over the line for the only touchdown of the game, and winning from Wesleyan, 6 to 0. Captain Deghney failed at goal. Wesleyan came very near scoring twice in the first quarter, but lost the ball both times on fumbles, and again in the fourth quarter when the ball was lost to Stevens on downs on the New Jersey college's four-yard line. Stevens punted out of danger. Goodale made the longest run of the game, carrying the ball for 42 yards in the first quarter. Both teams tried the forward pass, but the plays were mostly incomplete. For Stevens the stars were Goodale and Bloss in the back field and Brun and Carlson on the line. The Wesleyan men who started were Berlew and K. V. Dixon in the back field, and Anderson, Woolley, and S. E. Dixon on the line.

The lineup:

| Stevens, (6.) | Position. | Wesleyan, (0.) |

SOUTHERN COURSES OPEN FOR GOLFERS

Pinehurst and Florida Season Promises Unlimited Number of Tournaments.

ATLANTIC CITY IS NEXT

Local Competitions to End with Annual Contest Over Links at Lakewood.

Although the Northern tournament golf season suffered immeasurably because of the war, public opinion has swayed toward sport to such an extent that it is likely the Winter events which heighten the golf attractions of the South will be carried through with greater fields than ever before. At Pinehurst and further South around the Florida links there is every prospect for a series of competitions which will bring many golfers to the top of their ability when the United North and South championships are decided early next Spring.

Although Atlantic City is too many miles above the Mason and Dixon line to be considered a Southern city, it might be said that the first of the Southern events will be held over the Atlantic City Country Club's links, Oct. 25 to 27. This tournament has become a fixture in the golf world and annually attracts the cream of the metropolitan players and a lot as able from Philadelphia. In a way the Atlantic City affair allows a mingling of the golf celebrities of all the Eastern cities and invariably gives several top players a chance to either finish a Summer season in glory or else start a Winter of golf in the proper fashion.

As in seasons past the qualifying round at Atlantic City will take up the first day, with each entrant playing eighteen holes. On the next day the field will be divided into as many sixteens as are entered, and the pairs will start off in match play battles which will carry them through the first and second rounds. On the final day the semi-final and final rounds will occupy the attention of the players. There will be a medal play handicap with suitable prizes for those unlucky enough to have been shut out of the honor rounds of match play.

Following the three-day enjoyment of Atlantic City's hospitality the mantle of Winter probably will settle the golf of the metropolitan district, but not until the Country Club of Lakewood has invited and found scattered over its attractive course many of the leaders. The Lakewood tournament usually comes in the latter part of November and there is little reason to believe that there will be a change in date this season.

Lakewood, like Atlantic City, will have a three-day affair, which will wind up on a Saturday with the semi-final and final rounds of match play and a contest at medal play for the handicap followers. Lakewood always has attracted a fine field of golfers. It invariably provides amusement for the competitors both during the tournament and afterward. Gardiner W. White annually plays at Lakewood, and it is reasonable to believe he will be there again this year. Walter J. Travis used to be a regular at Lakewood, but since the end of the United States Golf Association has listed him among the professionals, because of his ability as a links architect, he will be unable to take part.

After the Lakewood event New York's golf army will have to go to sleep for the Winter or go South into the lands of perpetual Summer. And since most golfers refuse to sleep, especially during most of the daylight hours, it is reasonable to believe that several will take their bag of clubs and hike for Pinehurst or points further away.

For the last five years Florida has been building golf courses at the rate of ten or more a year. Now it has any number of modern, sporty courses to offer Northern tourists. It has made a bid for golf patronage which Northerners have not been slow in taking advantage of. Several of the Florida tournaments already have been won by players of national rank.

It was in Florida last year that Walter J. Travis won his last amateur cup since immediately after this event was notified that he no longer was considered eligible for amateur competition. And that notification cost America its most loved and most widely known amateur golfer, the only American who had been able to journey to the other side and beat the best of British, Scottish, and Irish players at their own game.

Florida opens its tournaments much earlier than those events which make Pinehurst the centre of attraction shortly after the Christmas holidays. Practically every well-known Winter resort in the far Southern State will hold a tournament this year, and at all there will be cups and prizes galore. Florida to a golfer believes that the cancellation of Northern tournaments was premature anr unnecessary.

The Druid Hills invitation tournament held early last Spring at the Atlanta links, with its primary object to give Atlanta residents a chance to see its infant prodigies pitted against the country's best, achieved its object with such remarkable success that the affair may be held again this year. In the last competition Bobby Jones, Perry Adair, Tom Prescott, and Dick Hickey made many inroads on the visiting stars, but only Jones reached the final round, and he was beaten there. This time invitations probably will be sent to Chick Evans, Eswald Kirkby, Jerome D. Travers, and other players of handicaps only slightly under these stars, and a tournament worth while probably will result.

Hackensack, after having a race of it with Forest Hill, managed to win in North Jersey, and Baltusrol was the victor over the southern clubs. These two teams will meet at Englewood Wednesday to decide the Jersey leadership. Mrs. T. H. Thomas is Captain of the Hackensack team, and Mrs. Steven P. Nash Captain of Baltusrol. As soon as the Jersey title is decided, the winners of the three divisions will meet in round-robin matches to decide the metropolitan laurels for the year.

WORTHINGTON BEST ON SHAWNEE LINKS

Beats Coles, His Clubmate, After Eliminating Max H. Behr of Baltusrol.

Special to The New York Times.

SHAWNEE, Penn., Oct. 13.—Home talent successfully withstood the efforts of visiting favorites in the Autumn invitation golf tournament of the Shawnee Country Club when Reginald S. Worthington won chief honors in the final round here today. He defeated Alec Coles, a clubmate, 4 up and 2 to play.

Earlier in the day Worthington eliminated Max H. Behr of Baltusrol rather decisively, while in the other half of the semi-final round Coles caused a stir by defeating Gardiner W. White, the match being carried to an extra hole.

In this affair both players kept close together, though White began well by winning the first two holes. Coles holed a mashie shot for a 3 at the 220-yard third and he squared the match a little later when White got into trouble at the fourth. At that time White stood 1 up, having gone out in 40 to the other's 41.

After Coles drew level with a 3 at the twelfth, the remaining holes were halved, each making the round in 79. To the extra hole White sliced his drive to the bank of the brook and failed to make the green on his next, while his third over ran the flag several yards. Coles although failing to get home on his approach, laid his third close and got the putt down for a 4, which won the hole and the match.

In the final Coles went completely off his drive and it was these mistakes from the tee that gave him too much to do. Worthington, who took 42 to go out, stood 2 up at that point. He had the round in 83 to Coles's 85.

The summary follows:

First Eight.—Semi-final Round—Reginald S. Worthington, Shawnee, beat Max Behr, Baltusrol, 5 up and 4 to play; Alec Coles, Shawnee, beat Gardiner W. White, Flushing, 1 up. (19 holes.)

Final Round—Worthington beat Coles, 4 up and 2 to play.

Second Eight.—Semi-final Round—Captain F. M. Sawtelle, Englewood, beat G. W. Statsell, Jr., Aromimink, 4 up and 3 to play; H. B. Newton, Frankford, beat George Rodenbaugh, Shawnee, 2 up.

Final Round—Newton beat Sawtelle, 5 up and 4 to play.

Third Eight.—Semi-final round—R. Devens, Scarsdale, beat Edward White, Frankford, 1 up; J. C. Snyder, Aromimink, beat M. T. Hauser, Shawnee, 3 up and 1 to play.

Final Round—Snyder beat Devens, 4 up and 3 to play.

Fourth Eight.—Semi-final Round—G. F. Handel, Glen Ridge, beat R. S. Sheble, North Mills, 4 up and 2 to play; H. S. Stephens, Essex County, beat C. M. Horrocks, Frankford, 6 up and 5 to play.

Final Round—Stephens beat Handel, 2 up.

RIVALS REACH GOLF FINAL.

Kammer and Walker to Decide Staten Island Leadership.

A. F. Kammer of Fox Hills, one of the leading players of the Metropolitan district and four times Staten Island golf champion, will meet, A. L. Walker, Jr., the 19-year-old Eastern interscholastic champion, who hails from Richmond County, in the thirty-six-hole final match today for the seventeenth renewal of the Staten Island golf leadership, at the Richmond County Country Club. Both players successfully disposed of opponents in the second round and semi-final round of match play yesterday.

In the second round Kammer was called upon to face the reputed dark horse of the tournament and the man who won the medal in the qualifying round, F. C. Newton of Richmond County. Kammer lost nothing thereby. Newton hardly played up to his earlier performances and the Fox Hills expert was right at the top of his game which brought the defeat of Newton by 4 up and 4 to play. In the next round Kammer met W. Roy Barnhill, a clubmate, and had no great trouble winning by 3 and 2.

Young Walker gained his second round by the expense of E. H. Armstrong of Fox Hills, defeated by 4 and 3, and then advanced to the final round over J. G. Spindler with a margain of 3 and 2. The results of the matches leaves a representative of the two Staten Island clubs in the final and is expected to attract a big gallery.

The summary:

Championship Flight.—Second Round—A. F. Kammer, Fox Hills, defeated F. C. Newton, Richmond County, 4 and 3; W. Roy Barnhill, Fox Hills, defeated A. C. Palmer, Fox Hills, 3 and 2; A. L. Walker, Jr., Richmond County, defeated E. H. Armstrong, Fox Hills, 4 and 3; J. G. Spindler, Fox Hills, won from H. R. Catlin, Richmond County, by default.

Semi-final Round—Kammer defeated Barnhill, 5 and 4; Walker defeated Spindler, 3 and 2.

WOLVERINE ATTACK STRONG

Weston Stars for Michigan in Defeating Mount Union, 69 to 0.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Oct. 13.—Michigan's football eleven overwhelmed the light Mount Union team 69 to 0 here this afternoon. After the first half Coach Yost used a number of substitutes. Michigan's defense for Mount Union's forward pass attack was perfect. Weston, the lightest man on the Michigan squad, who has been rated as second substitute quarter back, made at least one-third of the Wolverines' gains and scored five touchdowns. Weiman kicked eight goals.

TENNIS AMBULANCE SECTION RECRUITED

Forty-five Men from East and West at Allentown for Examinations.

Arrangements have been completed for the enlistment of the first ambulance section raised by the United States National Lawn Tennis Association, and the men have been ordered to report for their examinations. The section will go to Allentown, which is headquarters for the United States Army Ambulance Service, into which these men are enlisted. About 4,500 men are now stationed there.

Despite earlier and contradictory information, it now appears that the Government wants men for this branch of the service, and the National Association is proceeding to recruit the second section. A number of applications have already been received by Paul B. Williams, 20 Broad Street, who has charge of the preliminary details, but more are needed, as a section includes forty-five men. Any who desire to enlist should notify him at once, as the applications for the second section will be forwarded within a very few days.

The section just raised includes one man from Los Angeles, half a dozen from St. Louis, twelve from Chicago, while the remainder of the forty-five are scattered through the Eastern part of the United States. Pittsburgh was a centre of interest, as it turned in half a dozen applicants and New York sent about the same number. In addition to these who have enlisted, there were a number of applications from men who could not meet the physical requirements.

The first section includes the following: Dr. J. Kartick, David B. Karrick, Washington, D. C.; Frederick F. Palmer, R. W. Lamarche, F. Courtlandt Perry, New York; Harold J. Carr, White Plains, N. Y.; John F. Montgomery, Arlington, N. J.; Harvey Doremus, Paterson, N. J.; Erhard Frederikson, Little Falls, N. Y.; R. H. Torrey, Niagara Falls, N. Y.; W. K. Goetzman, Rochester, N. Y.; A. T. [illegible]ing, Ray C. Hill, Buffalo, N. Y.; Clayton K. Warner, Woodmont, Conn.; George C. Trimble, Wakefield, R. I.; Wilmer L. Richr, Jr., Clarence D. Koehler, Harold D. Fry, Oil City, Penn.; Paul Reed, Bedford, Penn.; Lewis Mohn, Jr., Harold Wright, Howard J. Burgwin, Elmer S. Horigan, Kenneth Gassaway, Pittsburgh, Penn.; Robert C. Irwin, Wheeling, W. Va.; Frank J. Maxwell, Carleton C. Wood, Clarksburg, W. Va.; A. Purinton, Morgantown, W. Va.; William H. Gustine, Franklin H. Gustine, Eugene F. Lukens, Overton Chambers, L. A. Twomey, Thaddeus Jarsenewski, C. H. Hill, R. C. Williams, L. W. Stratton, S. T. Rockwell, L. W. Bergstrasser, Chicago, Ill.; C. L. Davenport, Sioux City, Iowa; Clyde H. Hunter, Wingate, Ind.; Arthur J. Freund, W. M. McGowan, E. C. Daly, Dr. Morris J. Erwin, St. Louis, Mo.; Frank O. Wilson, Los Angeles, Cal.

Besides the foregoing, there are five men already at Allentown whose presence is due to the activity of the National Association. They are Francis Brown, William Wells, Fred Biven, Ernest Padmore, and William Noble, from Honolulu.

Arrangements for their coming had been made by cable at a time when it was supposed that the examinations for the first section would be held Sept. 15. There has been delay, however, in arranging the preliminaries, and when they reached New York there was no section for them to join. Lieutenant James Boyd of the New York Chapter of the American Red Cross, through which the National Association had been working, brought the matter to the attention of the Allentown authorities, and because of their remarkable trip, the men were instructed to report at Allentown, where they were examined and enlisted. No argument in their favor was needed when it became known that some of them closed their business affairs and started for New York on three days' notice. The military authorities took the position that men who wanted to join as badly as all that certainly ought to be accommodated.

Since that time Alfred L. Castle of Honolulu has cabled for permission to send two more recruits. Chicago wants to raise a section all by itself. Pittsburgh claims to have fifteen men ready to join, and other cities are interested. The response from New York City has been rather small thus far, but it is felt that as soon as men understand that there is a chance to enlist at once there will be plenty of applications.

The Most Beautiful Car in America

Among smart people the Sedan is, by all odds, the most popular type of enclosed motor car. It makes an instant appeal to both the city and suburban dweller because of its many practical advantages.

It is, in fact, two cars in one—a snugly, comfortable vehicle for cold weather and a splendid touring car for spring, summer and fall. The sliding windows are responsible for this magic.

As a type, the Sedan is unquestionably the most sensible car that you can buy. But don't stop there. Go just one step further and buy the handsomest of all Sedans—the Paige model.

You will know what we mean when you make comparisons. You will then realize that there are many Sedans, but only one Paige.

SHORTER MATCHES AID TO BILLIARDS

Amateur Class A Championships at 300 Points Expected to Increase Interest.

EAST AND WEST AGREE

N. A. A. B. P. Adopts Revolutionary Change Which Permits Amateurs to Play Pros.

Among followers of billiards it is generally believed that the radical changes adopted at the special meeting of the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players last week can have nothing other than a salutary effect upon the future of the game. Most important in the minds of many is the adoption of the oft-repeated suggestion that the length of the Class A championship games be reduced from 400 to 300 points, the Class B matches from 300 to 200 points, and the Class C from 200 to 150. It is hardly of less interest, however, that matches in the future will be permitted between amateurs and professionals, of course under proper sanction. These two new rules are probably the most revolutionary that the amateur billiard association has promulgated since its inception many years ago, and the effect will be far reaching, both as to increasing interest in localities where billiards has already flourished, and in addition opening up new fields for the entrance of the game on popular lines.

Just how much the billiard association was converted to the new régime, and just how much it was whipped into the acceptance of it, can be nothing more than conjecture. At any rate, the association a year ago turned its face absolutely against the idea of amateurs and professionals competing together where gate receipts and prizes were awarded, and thereby brought about a threatened break between the East and West, with a rival amateur organization opposing the sway of the older governing body in the control of Western billiards. Charles Heddon of Dowagiac, Mich., a contestant in many of the Class A championship matches of former years, resigned from the N. A. A. B. P., and it was said that he was sponsor for the proposed new association in the West.

This threat, for it was really that, was couched in gentler terms, but it was, nevertheless, a challenge to the Eastern group which had dominated the billiard association with absolute sway. Now that the N. A. A. B. P. has seen the light, and adopted the new régime with an open mind, the basis of dissention between East and West has been removed, and with the broadening of the Executive Committee to give representation in greater degree to the men of the Middle West and Far West, there seems to be nothing but harmony for the future of the game, which takes on a new life and a new interest that is nation wide.

As far as the length of game is concerned that was not really an issue between East and West, and the amateur association last year was beginning to see that something toward shortening the contests was necessary to maintain interest. There was special note taken of the national Class A tournament in Boston last Winter, so that there might be indisputable data wherewith to determine the merit or demerit of the claims that the shortening of the games was necessary. No tournament of recent years could have better born out the contention of the advocates of the 300-point game. With the exception of Nathan Hall, there was hardly a contestant who could finish the 400-point match in such a length of time that interest was maintained until the very end.

It has been a noticeable feature of tournaments of recent years that the spectators enjoyed the first 200 points of a match, but that they drifted away as the last hundred points were being played, weary of mind and eye. This could do nothing but detract from the interest of the game and it was perhaps a bit disconcerting to the contestants. Many of those who argued for the shorter game pointed to the fact that the professional matches in a tournament for the 18.1 or 18.2 balkline championships were only 500 points and it was maintained that if such a game was sufficient to test the skill of the professionals, whose runs and averages are always far in excess of the amateurs, certainly 300 points were enough for the amateurs to play.

There was no acceptance of this viewpoint among some of the leading amateurs, however. Men like Morris D. Brown, former national champion; Edward W. Gardner, another national champion, and Jacob Klinger, former Class B champion of Europe, and a contestant in two national Class A championships in this country, were confident that a reduction in the length of championship games would be a grave mistake. They pointed to the high averages which certain men had made in championships, such as those of the late J. Ferdinand Poggenburg, when he was in his prime, and maintained that it would be detracting, not alone from the spirit of Class A competition, but from the real test of skill as well, to alter in any such way as proposed the championship play.

Brown and Klinger appeared before the national association meeting last week in support of their views. Klinger argued that France had set the standard for class A games at 400 points in all international contests, and that the association could hardly afford to make such a drastic change as to reduce to 300 points and belittle competitions here. He was backed in this by both Brown and Dr. L. L. Mial of Philadelphia. On the other hand, Fred Hovey of Philadelphia, in a communication to the meeting, showed that Class A competition during the last few years had, according to averages and runs, been deteriorating, and claimed that the length of game was too great a strain on the players, as well as being harmful to the best interests of billiards.

It has been noticeable in championship contests of the Class A variety that the averages were well maintained for the first 300 points, but that the last hundred caused them to fall to low figures. It has frequently occurred that the grand average of a number of contestants failed to measure up to 8, which is the qualification presumed to be exacted before a player can graduate from the ranks of Class B to Class A. After considering all the facts the special meeting voted, with few dissenters, in favor of making the future Class A matches 300 points and the Class B and Class C 200 and 150, respectively.

The permitting of play between amateurs and professionals follows somewhat the plan which prevails in golf and opens up room for many matches which will be of especial interest. For instance, it is proposed now to hold a match between Frank Taberski, the professional pocket billiard champion, and J. Howard Shoemaker, the national amateur champion, John Doyle seeking this match for his billiard academy on Forty-second Street. It is probable that other matches of similar nature will be arranged, once the billiard season is fairly under way, and that many of them will be for the benefit of the Red Cross.

At present plans for the national amateur tournaments are only in the formulative stage, but it seems certain that events in the three classes will be held as in former years, even though at least two of the most prominent contenders, Edgar and Francis Appleby, now with the Pershing army in France, will be unable to compete. There is not the least glimmer as to where the next Class A championship will be held. Of course the committee in charge will send out for bids as in former years. In view of the reconciliation of East and West in billiards, however, it is not improbable that the next tournament will go west. Last year it was held in Boston and the year before in Philadelphia.

If the tournament does go west there is small likelihood that Nathan Hall, the present holder of the championship, will compete. In fact, it is unlikely that he will compete in any city other than Boston. This was his announcement last year after winning the championship.

DE ORO TO PLAY DALY.

Match for Three-Cushion Title Scheduled at Howison's.

The competitive billiard season in this city will get away to an auspicious start next week when a match, that should prove to be of particular interest to followers of three-cushion billiards, will be played between Alfredo De Oro, the titleholder, who recently won the championship from Robert L. Cannefax of St. Louis, and John Daly, himself a former titleholder. This contest will be held at Leonard Howison's Billiard Academy, at Forty-ninth Street and Seventh Avenue, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights, Oct. 23, 24, and 25.

De Oro and Daly have been the actors in more stirring three-cushion battles than any other players. De Oro, born at Manzanillo, Cuba, on April 28, 1863, is 54 years old, or nearly six years the senior of Daly, whose birthplace was Utica, N. Y., on Dec. 17, 1868. These veterans met three times for the Jordan Lambert trophy, eventually captured outright by De Oro. The Cuban won two of these games, by scores of 150 to 119 and 150 to 146, losing the other by 150 to 120. Daly evened the standing between them in a special match at Doyle's four years ago, which resulted in a tally of 150 to 148.

Seldom have the nerves of spectators at a billiard match been more cruelly dealt with than in that contest. The score was tied at 115 and from there to the end they plodded along, slowly, carefully and nervously. The spectators, to relieve themselves, broke the world's record for smoking.

Abundant safety play has been the chief characteristic of the Daly-De Oro struggles in the past. They never have met in a challenge match since the adoption of the rule penalizing a player for two successive deliberate safeties. In the brief 50-point game of the tournament at Chicago two years ago, Daly managed to beat his rival and eventually finished third in the competition, one step above the Cuban. There is no telling how the anti-safety regulation will affect the result in a longer game, and followers of the sport have been debating the point with spirit of late.

Daly has not played in New York for several years, having spent most of that time on the Pacific Coast. He will make his reappearance tomorrow, Tuesday, and Wednesday afternoons and evenings of this week, facing all comers at Howison's. De Oro will do likewise the next two days and on Saturday afternoon will begin a practice exhibition game at 1 o'clock.

Frank Taberski, the professional pocket billiard champion, was in New York Thursday and stood in line like other real fans to get a seat at the Polo Grounds and see the Giants defeat the White Sox. He declared that his next championship contest, with young Louis Kreuter of New York would probably be played in Buffalo, as was that with Joseph Concannon of New York, whom he defeated by a most spectacular finish. Jerome R. Keogh, former champion, in commenting on Taberski's great work in scoring 277 to Concannon's 92 on the final night, said: "Never have such odds been overcome. Taberski's achievement in scoring 183 balls to Concannon's 4 in the beginning of the last night's play, after being 127 balls behind stands without parallel in the annals of championship play."

The championship season of the Interstate Three-Cushion League got under way last week when John Layton, former pocket billiard champion, now representing Detroit, defeated Gus Capulos of Pittsburgh, 44 to 20, and Ray Palmer of Ann Arbor downed Hugh Heal of Toledo, 50 to 38. The competition this year is on a handicap basis. George W. Moore, the New York entrant, who will play at Thum's Academy, Thirty-first Street and Broadway, will have Heal as his first opponent on Wednesday of this week.

FIRST INDOOR MEET IN BROOKLYN SOON

Thirteenth Regiment Armory to be Scene of Benefit Games—Leading Runners Enter.

With the closing of the outdoor track and field season local athletes can now turn their attention to the events to be held during the Winter months indoors. While a number of the leading athletes are away on military duty enough talent is still about the local district to warrant a hope for a comparatively successful season. In fact, it is expected that many of the district's leading athletes who have enlisted will be seen in competition, as well as others who have not yet answered the call to war. Throughout the Summer season liberal furloughs were granted enlisted men so that they could enjoy a splurge at their favorite pastime, and there is no reason to believe that these furloughs will be discontinued.

The indoor season will open Oct. 24, when the Thirteenth Regiment Armory in Brooklyn will be the scene of an athletic and military carnival. The games will be held for the purpose of raising funds for the Sun's Tobacco Fund. Eleven events have been arranged, five of them for A. A. U. athletes, one bicycle race for members of the National Cycling Association, and the remaining five for soldiers stationed at the various forts around New York.

The feature attraction will be a special race at 880 yards, which will bring together Eddie Frick of the New York A. C., senior metropolitan half-mile champion; Mike Devaney, the Millrose A. A. athlete, national half-mile champion; Jack R. Sellers of the New York A. C., and a host of other leading local athletes who like this distance. Sellers and Frick were rivals in a race over the same distance on the track at Jersey City baseball park recently, which Sellers won, and it is expected that Frick will take this chance to retrieve his defeat.

Other A. A. U. events are: One hundred-yard dash, 300-yard run, 1,000-yard run, and one-mile run, all handicap events.

For the soldiers the hand grenade throwing events, which will be held as a scratch competition, will furnish the feature. This contest since its inception last Summer by the officials of the New York A. C. has attracted large entries.

The use of the Thirteenth Regiment Armory has been given free of charge by Major Clarence W. Smith, in command of the Thirteenth Coast Artillery Corps, New York Guard, and he has also given the use of the regiment band. The usual fee for sanction charged by the Amateur Athletic Union has been overlooked, and the majority of the prizes offered have been given by persons interested in local amateur track and field sports. Entries for the various events will close on Tuesday with A. A. U. headquarters at 200 Broadway, or with Lieutenant Joseph C. Hardmeyer, Thirteenth Regiment.

YALE MEET ON OCT. 27.

Willisbrooks Included in Plan for Annual Contests.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 13.—It has been announced that tentative arrangements have been made by the Yale University Track Association to hold its annual Fall track meet on Saturday, Oct. 27.

On that date the track events will be run off at Yale Field. The field events, with the exception of the hammer throw, will be held in the cage at the gymnasium in November.

As in former years, the class numerals will be awarded to the winners of first places in the several events.

All men have been urged to report as often as possible from now on to practice in the event which they expect to enter. Coaches Queal and Mack will assist them in their training for the meet.

It has further been decided that the Willisbrooks will again be included in the track plans. The Willisbrooks are held every year in the Winter and Spring, each event being run ten times. Awards are made to those men who have won the greatest number of points at the end of the year. The first competition in the events is held without handicaps. After every competitor's performances have been noted, however, handicaps are allotted. Points are allotted for the first five places in each contest.

FEWER ATHLETES ARE LOST.

British Casualty Lists Have Names of Famous Experts.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—Casualties among prominent British sportsmen show a falling off in the latest list issued of those killed and wounded on the western front. Lieut. Col. R. P. Lewis, who has died of wounds, was the famous Middlesex County and Oxford University cricketer. He was one of the finest amateur wicket keepers in the country. He was in the Winchester elevens of 1891 and 1892, and got his "Blue" at Oxford in 1894, appearing at Lord's also in the two following years.

Captain G. W. Birkbeck, previously reported wounded and missing, and now officially announced killed in action, was a staunch supporter of coursing. Like his father before him, Captain Birkbeck was a valued member of the Norfolk County cricket team. Educated at Eton, where he was twelfth man at cricket, he made his début for Norfolk in 1900, and played regularly for the County in 1910, when Norfolk won the Minor Counties Championship.

Major J. T. Catley, killed, represented Highgate School for two years at the public schools boxing competitions at Aldershot, and as a member of the Honorable Artillery company shot regularly at Bisley, winning many prizes and being included in the King's Hundred. Lieutenant E. G. Fricker, wounded, represented Cranbrook in the Public School Championships in 1914 at boxing.

V. S. Simpson, a Sheffield golfer and soccer footballer, has been awarded the Military Cross for brilliant services, while the famous professional golfer, George Pannell, has gained the Military Medal for gallantry in France, the decoration being pinned on him in the trenches. When the war broke out, he was professional to the Royal Golf Club de Belgique, his pupils including King Albert's children. Captain J. F. Ireland, a Cambridge University golfer and cricketer, has also been awarded the Military Cross.

Sergeant Phil Evans, a famous Swansea Rugby player, has been wounded in the face by a shell. He was an outstanding member of the Swansea pack in 1913-14. Lieut. Thomas, their clever centre three-quarter, has been discharged from the army owing to wounds, while their Captain, Lieutenant Howel Lewis, is still under treatment for a severe wound.

LAST OUTDOOR MEET TODAY.

Irish Federation Games to Give Athletes Final Chance for Prizes.

Celtic Park, Long Island, this afternoon will be the scene of what looks like one of the best athletic gatherings that has been staged at the famous old stamping ground, when the Irish Federation of the U. S. A. holds its annual track and field meet. This will mark the closing of the local outdoor season, and as a climax a program with at least two events of more than ordinary importance has been arranged.

The feature event on the track will be a special scratch race at 1,000 yards, in which Mike Devanney, national half-mile champion; Eddie Frick, local title holder, and Willie Gordon, the former New York A. C. star middle-distance runner, will compete. Devanney's last appearance in local outdoor competition was at the games of the Newark Police Department a week ago, when he led the famous Yale runner, Johnny Overton, to the tape in a special mile race.

Another attraction should be the all-around weight-throwing contest, in which two Olympic champions and one record holder will compete. The athletes of Olympic fame are Matt McGrath of the New York A. C. and Pat McDonald, also of the New York A. C., who has gained national and Olympic laurels with his efforts with the 16-pound shot. The other contender in this even will be Pat Ryan, record holder, with the 16-pound hammer.

INTRA-MURAL PHASE OF SPORTS GROWING

Professor Corwin Urges All Students to Report for Class Elevens at Yale.

The war, which has upset nearly all athletic schedules in the colleges and created a new situation in the field of intercollegiate competition, is being widely regarded as offering the opportunity to practice the intra-mural system so often preached. Athletics for the few with the aim of developing winning teams has been opposed by a large number of educators, who have advocated a general participation in sports by the students.

Although immediately the aim of athletics has become military efficiency on the part of the youth of the country, the absence of the former flavor to the football games between colleges has been seized upon as an occasion to launch the plan of athletics for all. Professor Corwin, of the Yale Athletic Board, in an appeal for as many students as possible to report for the class football teams attached great importance to this phase of the intra-mural activities.

In the Yale Daily News of Thursday he is quoted as saying:

"The military authorities at Washington have appealed to us and to other colleges to maintain and encourage athletic sports as an essential part of military training and discipline. The officer in charge of the Yale R. O. T. C. has in recognition of the importance of these sports given over to them one-half of the time allotted to military drill, and we are in return expected to make our athletics serve a very definite and important purpose.

"It is, therefore, the plain duty of every one of us who feels the importance of the task that is set to get in on this. The task from the athletic side is new and difficult—for it means everybody in the play—everybody who is physically fit for military service. Here is a chance for us to prove that athletics can show results as tangible and as important as to do the foot drill or bookwork.

"The season is late and schedules are still in the making. We want every man, therefore, to take hold hard and to help us make a season successful along these newer, untried lines. The Fall season sets the pace for the whole college year. Let us, therefore set a good, hard, steady pace.

"No appeal to Yale men in a just cause ever fails of a ready response. Witness the number of Yale men in service and at the near-front. But our service has but just begun—and Yale expects every man to do his duty whether he is in camp or in college. Let us see whether the Yale Field cannot serve in helping to win battles as did the playing fields of Harrow and Eton."

The News adds:

"For the present, the class Captains and managers will have complete charge of their teams. If possible, however, coaches will be secured for each team. Practice will be held on the Old Field, the Freshman Field, and, if necessary, the Soccer Field.

"Numerals will be awarded to the winning team if the support given the new system by the student body is sufficient to warrant it.

"It is still undecided whether an informal university team will be formed. For the present, all university candidates will report with their class teams. Freshman football will continue as before."

CONIBEAR MADE WINNERS.

Late Rowing Coach Put University of Washington to Fore.

The death of Hiram Conibear, for many years coach of the University of Washington, brought to a sudden end the career of the most successful rowing mentor in the Far West. Conibear died without having realized the dream of active international rowing competition, to which he devoted such effort, the war having put an end to the prospects last season, when they seemed to be brightest.

Under Conibear's coaching the Washington crews won a position in the Pacific Coast rowing circles somewhat similar to that held by Cornell in the East. The Seattle college oarsmen won a large majority of the 'Varsity regattas in which they were starters, and in the two trips made to the Hudson River at Poughkeepsie for the intercollegiate regatta, won the admiration and respect of both the spectators and their opponents.

While never successful in winning the college rowing classic of the East, the Washington crews of 1913 finished third, being led by Syracuse and Cornell, and outrowing Wisconsin, Columbia, and Pennsylvania. The next season the eight was not so well placed, being next to last in a field of six crews. In addition to these transcontinental trips to the Hudson, Conibear's eights were many times victors over both the Stanford and University of California combinations.

AMATEUR HOCKEY SEASON IN DOUBT

War May Prevent League Games, but Skating Will Go On Just the Same.

With the advent of heavy overcoats for the men and low-neck furs for women, New York's outdoor public is sharpening its steel runners and beginning to raise a fearful appetite for the greatest of all Winter amusements—skating. For the first time in years promoters of popular rinks have anticipated the desires of sport-loving Father Knickerbocker, and there will be no lack of glassy surfaces for him to glide about, arm-in-arm with one or two or three or a multitude of his favorite daughters and sons. New York is to have every facility for the enjoyment of skating this Winter, both indoors and outside.

Several of the hotels are to reopen the ice rinks built within the last three years, and a few more hotels are installing artificial ice plants and planning on rinks for their patrons. The Biltmore roof rink needs only favorable weather to again afford pleasure to a host of skaters. The Majestic Hotel also will have a rink.

The St. Nicholas Rink, for years New York's most attractive skating place, will be opened to the public again next Saturday. Manager Cornelius Fellows has completely renovated the building at Sixty-sixth Street, has installed many more conveniences for the several clubs using the rink as a headquarters, and is preparing for the busiest season of his career. Several innovations are promised at St. Nicholas Rink this year.

Whether or not the American Amateur Hockey League will go on the field this season has not been decided as yet. Mr. Fellows could not state whether a team would represent the rink this year or what the Directors planned. A few months ago it was stated that the war would make it impossible to play through a schedule this Winter, but since that time many of the interested parties have had a change of mind, and it is likely that there will be three teams at least in New York.

The St. Nicholas Rink for two years has refused to lease its ice surface for private parties at night, and last year no afternoons were turned over to the many asking for private affairs. Mr. Fellows insists that this plan will be adhered to this year, although there again may be a chance to lease the rink during the early morning hours, as was the case with the Brokers' Club last year.

Mr. Fellows is mightily in favor of hockey, and hopes that the officers of the league will see fit to play again. The St. Nicholas Rink will be open to the league to play out a schedule. Boston teams are said to be ready to enter the field, and the Crescent A. C. undoubtedly will have its team in action if not in the league. Toward the end of last year here was a lot of hard feeling in the hockey league because of charges and countercharges of professionalism, and it seemed for a time that the league was about to be buried under the arguments, but finally peace was brought about, but some of the team leaders insisted that this season the scheduled games must be played in the Brooklyn Ice Palace, and not in the New York rink. Whether or not this opinion still prevails could not be learned.

The hockey season will not be under way for several weeks, and officers of the league are not worried yet over the details. Last year the New York Athletic Club acted as if it would ask for reinstatement in the league and again enter a team, but at the last moment the club did not present a team. The war may postpone the return of the N. Y. A. C. for another year.

The Hockey Club, which has its headquarters at the St. Nicholas Rink, will doubtedly will be together again, and it is possible they will play several games. Should the league not draft a schedule this season, the Hockey Clubs may arrange games with the different college. Yale and Princeton will play hockey even if no intercollegiate contests are arranged.

The rink at 181st Street has been open for two weeks, and is attracting skaters in droves. Another indoor rink in Broadway and Fiftieth Street, also has been the scene of many skating parties. Skaters are not going to be denied a chance to indulge in their favorite sport. None of the outside rinks or the numerous lakes about the city will be ready for sport for at least two months. However, the different park boards of the five boroughs already are making plans for the benefit of the skaters. Edges of several lakes are to be planked so that skaters may start and stop their journeys in safety.

Most of the playgrounds of the city will be flooded that youngsters of New York may not be denied a chance to strengthen their legs and lungs.

Stearns MOTOR CARS
SILENT SALESMEN

Many prospective purchasers of automobiles recognize that frequently rare bargains are obtainable in USED CARS of high class manufacture.

They are convinced, and rightly, that such cars possess inherent possibilities of satisfactory service far beyond new cars of cheaper list price and less meritorious construction.

But they are oftentimes dissuaded from acting upon their conviction thru lack of confidence in the seller. They even hesitate to inspect the machines offered owing to a neutral disinclination to listen to what they anticipate would be his importunities and exaggerated statements.

In buying direct from the USED CAR DEPARTMENT of a BRANCH of the MANUFACTURER, the first objection is at once eliminated.

In our USED CAR DEPARTMENT the second objection is non-existent, as our DEPARTMENT MANAGER merely exhibits or demonstrates the cars.

He willingly answers any question when asked; but, in the main, our USED CARS themselves are their own SILENT SALESMEN.

Allow us to briefly introduce to you a few of the more desirable bargains. All are STEARNS Knight-motored and therefore more powerful, flexible and silent than when first put into service. Ask us to prove this.

OWEN MAGNETIC

The Luxurious Economy of the Owen Magnetic

ASIDE from considering the Owen Magnetic as the last word in flexibility, many ask about its economy—even though Owen Magnetic owners are the City's richest men and women.

The economy of most cars is measurable only in figures—but one can also "feel" it in an Owen Magnetic. As you sit by the driver—or take his place, as you'll always want to do—you'll "feel" the engine idling after a gentle but powerful pull forward or down a grade.

How it saves Gas
The Owen Magnetic rolls (words are hard to find to describe the sensation of riding in this car) at a thousand speeds. Your finger tip controls its easy action, like your muscles control your arms. You automatically save gasoline—you can't waste it.
Four-year records give this car 12 to 14 gallons per mile—unheard of in other luxury cars of this class.

How it saves Tires
The fluid, magnetic control does away with old-fashioned, jerky gears, clutches and rude brakes. No giant, crashing shivers quake the car.
The wheels start and stop in response to magnetic, not ordinary control. This reduces tire chafing and slipping—so fatal to long wear. It is not unusual—but quite normal—for tires to run 11,000 miles on an Owen Magnetic.

The simplicity of the Owen Magnetic—means less to wear, less to need adjustment. No car is so free of complicated parts, hundreds having been discarded.

How it saves You
Aside from material economy, the wear and tear on human nerves, common to noisy, tiring gear shifting—is entirely absent in the Owen Magnetic.
To ride in this car is comparable only with sailing, aeroplaning, tobogganing or some such sport where freedom of motion looses one from that tied-to-the-earth feeling.
Such exhilaration is indescribable in words—you must ride in the Owen Magnetic to really appreciate this new sensation.
Upon appointment, a smart Owen Magnetic will appear at your door—then you may know for yourself the joy New York's 400 Owen Magnetic owners experience—and why they prefer this car for personal driving.

FOR incomparable coach work, beauty of lines and luxurious appointments, you are invited to view our Fall Series of Town Cars, Touring Cars, Limousines and Broughams.
A luxurious Owen Magnetic will be at your door at the appointed hour if you telephone 898 Circle.

GASSED SOLDIERS MADE UNFIT TO DRIVE AUTO

Nerve Weakness While at Steering Wheel Attacks Discharged Men Who Have Been Through This Ordeal.

An after-effect of life in the trenches on the battlefront in France has come to light through the failure of some of the discharged soldiers to meet the requirements of driving an automobile. Men who have been gassed, especially, and also those who have suffered from shell shock, exhibit outbursts of irritation over some trivial traffic interruption or lose control in a sort of temporary paralysis. In the first article on this subject that goes into any detail, H. Massac Buist, the well-known English motor authority, says:

"For two reasons the private motor vehicle owner who retains the restricted use of his car is glad to employ men discharged from the army as unfit. Obviously, everybody is anxious to provide the defenders of the empire with a suitable means of livelihood. Moreover, today, despite the fuel situation, qualified motor drivers are hard to come by for civilian service, for there are the needs of the utility motor vehicle users to be supplied as well under this head. Knowing that the conditions of one's health has a very direct effect on the manner in which one drives a motor vehicle, I have taken particular pains, during the last three years, to observe the manner in which motor driving affects those discharged from the army as unfit. The conclusion I have come to is that the effect is so important as to constitute a question which we shall have to consider very gravely, if not in the immediate present, at least in the after-war period, when thousands of motor drivers who may have struggled through the campaign will suddenly resume civilian employment without a proper rest period.

"In the main, cases of men who have been gassed seem to be the most serious as regards the after-result manifested in civilian motor driving. These seem to divide themselves, broadly, under two heads. In the first category are those—they include the shell-shocked as well as the gassed—who see in every little road incident an emergency of such magnitude as practically to paralyze their power of initiative. Such men generally realize the situation after a few weeks, and either give up their work or apply for housework in place of car driving. I know one case in which a shell-shocked man after confining himself to housework for six months was able to go back to driving a covered car for all local work. He did not, however, undertake long runs. Motor driving is notoriously an occupation in which a driver cannot always be certain of getting his meals at a fixed hour, even though the work is merely local. This matters little or not at all to the normally healthy man, but to one who has gone through a war campaign, and is discharged as unfit, it involves the risk of bringing on bad nerves, and nobody with that complaint should drive.

"The other chief effect on men who have been gassed, or who have been shell-shocked, but more particularly the te... road to produce a condition similar to fury. I came across a case of such a man the other day. He was going along a ... road ... when a ... on a bicycle debouched in such circumsta... manoeuvring by both parties. The car ... that was necessary was to ease pace, there being no call to apply brakes. Instead, the discharged soldier put down the ... as ... could and charged straight into the bicycle, instead of steering his proper course. Afterward he could say only: 'I felt as if I could have done anything.'

"I met the same man on the road a few days afterward on a perfectly straight stretch when there was ample room for both vehicles, and noted that, about fifty yards from me, his hand made a movement at the steering wheel of the car whereby he inclined from his right side of the road toward me. The man's face was in a contortion of sorts, and, with an apparent effort at self-control, an instant later he moved the steering wheel again, with the result that the car passed quite safely. Other cases of the sort could be cited. Indeed, the problem is one which the medical profession would do well to ponder. It would appear that when nerves are badly overwrought, as in such cases as we have been considering, everything seen surprises the overstrained senses, the result of which is either to produce a sort of temporary paralysis of the limbs and even of the mental functions, or ... condition. Certainly the problem is one which will have to be considered very much more closely than it has been."

AUTO MONEY TO WIN WAR.

Special Trade Committee to Solicit Sale of Liberty Bonds.

The Liberty Loan Committee of the automobile and allied trades, appointed at a meeting last week to organize and conduct a campaign for the sale of Liberty Bonds among the automobile interests, reports that the response received thus far is satisfactory and that the prospect is that the automobile men will do their share in this loan as they did in the first one.

Horace De Lisser, Chairman of the committee, in speaking of the need of co-operation from every branch of the trade, said yesterday: "We are sending our best boys to France and it is up to us to stand back of them with all that we have of money and supplies. Failure on our part to do our share means betrayal of these brave men who offer life sacrifices against the few dollars that we are asked to lend our Government in supporting them to fight for the cause of freedom to make the world safe for democracy."

The other members of the committee are: Harry S. Houpt, I. M. Uppercu, J. Storms, Jr., Duncan Curry, and C. A. Stewart, Secretary.

ACCESSORIES AT AUTO SHOW

The management of the National Automobile Shows, to be held in New York and Chicago, will have a greater display of accessories and parts than at any previous show. This was made evident last week when the Show and Allotments Committee of the Motor and Accessory Manufacturers, of which Christian Girl is Chairman, allotted space to 109 members of the association. By the time S. A. Miles, Manager of the two national shows, allots space to the accessory concerns not members of the M. and A. M., the total number of exhibits of accessories will reach close to the record mark of 300.

L. M. Bradley, Manager of the Motor and Accessory Manufacturers, said yesterday that in all the members of the M. and A. M. took approximately 50,000 square feet of show space for the Grand Central Palace exhibition, which is to be held Jan. 5-12, and for the Chicago exhibition, which will take place Jan. 26 to Feb. 2 in the Coliseum and Armory. The accessories section of the national shows promises to be more interesting than ever before.

TO SERVE TRENCHES IN A PINCH

This new field motor kitchen is designed to deliver food hot direct to the trenches when called upon in an emergency, and in the usual course to serve troops on the march or in camp. Lightness, strength, and speed have been aimed at by Captain F. H. Buzzacott, the inventor. The kitchen has a capacity of 250 meals. It is mounted on an Overland Commercial chassis.

PROPER LUBRICATION OF AUTO BRIEFLY DESCRIBED

By WILLIAM H. STEWART, JR.

There are many things about a car little understood, and therefore neglected, by the average driver. And the car seems to run, nevertheless. But one detail which must be understood, and simply must not be neglected, is lubrication. Most persons simply put some oil here and a little grease there, and let it go at that. It speaks well for the manufacturer that cars do not more quickly depreciate under such care, or the lack of it.

Most important of all is the lubrication of the motor. The oil must be of good grade and made by a reliable manufacturer. It must be able to stand a temperature of 400 degrees Fahrenheit without losing its lubricating qualities. Since the oil cannot be tested without special laboratory apparatus, it is evident one must rely upon the manufacturer. The only test one can apply is to experiment. If the motor loses power, the cylinders become carbonized, and the muffler clogged we know the oil is not a good one. Since this is an expensive test it is better to use a lubricant made by a reliable manufacturer, and, having found same, stick to it.

Another requirement is that the oil should have the right body, neither too light nor too heavy. The purpose being to lubricate the pistons and all the moving parts in the crank case, it is essential that it should reach everywhere. An important part is the top of the piston. Here the oil is subjected to the heat of the explosion, and if it becomes too thin it fails to lubricate properly and the cylinders lose power. Yet it must be thin enough to get by the lower rings and reach the top ones. If it remains too thick it will not reach the top, and again loss of power results. As the rings and cylinders wear it is easier for the oil to work up to the top of the piston, especially on the inlet stroke, when the suction draws it up. A heavier lubricant is needed for this condition. Many a person has discarded a good oil because it carbonized the motor not realizing the mistake lay in using too light a grade. So choose an oil of the right body for your motor.

A good lubricant will burn without leaving any residue. It is filtered by the manufacturer to remove all free carbon, tar, asphalt, and other impurities. These give color to the oil, the rule being the deeper the color the more impurities it contains. Here again the only test one can apply is to see if it will carbonize the motor. If we keep the oil at the right level and choose the grade advised by the manufacturer and it persists in sooting the cylinders, then it must be discarded as unsuitable for the motor.

A very important requirement is that the oil should be free from chemicals, that is, chemically neutral. During the process of refining certain chemicals are used. These are supposed to be removed, as even a trace of free acid will etch the crank-shaft journals, soon causing ruin to the bearings.

Study your oiling system, study your oil, keep track of your mileage, compare notes with other motorists, and you will get best results.

State Auto Bureau in New Quarters.

The State Automobile License Bureau has moved from Seventy-fourth and Broadway to Sixty-fifth and Broadway, entrance at 127 West Sixty-fifth Street. The change was made in order to have larger quarters and because it was thought that a situation lower down Broadway would be more convenient to the motoring public.

GOOD ROADS, BEAUTIFUL SCENERY, MARK THIS TOUR

Mid-Autumn Trip to Ashokan Reservoir Offers Numerous Attractions as Week-End Run—Alternate Routes.

Many motorists are anxious to learn where they can go in order to enjoy the annual display of Autumnal foliage, and at the same time make certain of good roads to travel over. For such as these the Touring Bureau of the American Automobile Association recommends a trip to the Ashokan Reservoir, going up on one side of the Hudson River and returning along the other. This is an ideal trip for the week-end, as it totals only about 200 miles, thus giving plenty of opportunity for occasional stops along the way in order to enjoy at leisure any unusually charming vistas. The roads are in exceptionally good condition all the way.

Leaving New York via Broadway, the Albany Post Road is followed practically all the way to Rhinebeck, running through Yonkers, Tarrytown, Ossining, Peekskill, and Poughkeepsie. Since the upper part of Broadway between Kingsbridge and Yonkers is now rather rough in places, it is advisable to turn left on 230th Street, follow Riverdale Avenue to Yonkers, and then Warburton Avenue to Hastings. From this point the Albany Post Road is in excellent condition all the way to Rhinebeck, and detailed running directions are scarcely necessary.

At Dobbs Ferry a turn to the left is made and the road then runs direct through Irvington to Tarrytown. After crossing Main Street in Tarrytown continue north for about three-quarters of a mile, where take the left fork at a church. The road then passes the historic Sleepy Hollow Cemetery on the right, and Phillipse Manor.

From this point the road is unmistakable, passing in succession through Scarboro, Ossining, Harmon, Croton, and Buchanan, entering Peekskill via Washington Street. Upon reaching the end of this street, turn right on South Street and follow the trolley into Division Street. About one-quarter a mile further on, take a left fork, leaving the trolley, and continue on Highland Avenue through Annsville and McKeel Corners to Fishkill. Here turn left and a short distance beyond turn right on Church Street, then run direct to Wappinger Falls, where continue on Main Street to Poughkeepsie. Leaving Poughkeepsie via North Avenue direct through Hyde Park and Staatsburg to Rhinebeck, where a left turn is made to the ferry at Rhinecliff. After leaving the ferry continue up Broadway to the centre of Kingston.

To reach the Ashokan Reservoir from this point, run out Washington Avenue over a road which has recently been under construction, but is now finished and in excellent condition to Stony Hollow. Here the road branches, one fork running around the north side of the reservoir, and the other along the south side. This circuit of the reservoir may be made in either direction, as the road is in excellent condition all the way. The famous Ashokan Dam, which confines the waters of the reservoir, is located about two-thirds of the way from the eastern end on the south side and the road runs along the top of it. After returning to Kingston, the return trip to New York may be made along the west side of the Hudson River, although at no point does the road approach the river closely.

There are two alternative routes for reaching Newburg from Kingston, both of which are good. The shorter of these follows approximately the course of the river through Highland, but at the present time ... on this road between Highland and Milton. While this detour is not serious, it may nevertheless be avoided entirely by following the slightly longer alternative via New Paltz.

Leaving Newburg via Mill Street, the road runs first to Vails Gate; then turns left and continues through Mountainville and Highland Mills to Central Valley. At present there is some construction work in progress just south of Central Valley, and a detour will probably be required. If so, it would be best to turn right at Highland Mills and run to Monroe, where turn left on the trunk line to Harriman. From this point the road is practically unmistakable, passing in succession through Southfield, Tuxedo, Sloatsburg, Suffern, Ramsey, and Hohokus to Arcola. Here the motorist will notice on the right the historic Arcola Water Wheel flanked by an attractive pond.

Hackensack is entered via Passaic Street, and a right turn made on to Main Street. Just before reaching the Court House, turn left and follow an unmistakable road through Bogota, and cross the meadows to Leonia. This stretch of road crossing the meadows has recently been repaired and is now in excellent condition. The route then runs to Fort Lee and Edgewater, crossing via the 130th Street ferry to New York.

Committee to Solicit Autos to Assist Army and Navy Work.

"Automobile Row" in Manhattan and Bedford Avenue Row in Brooklyn are lending support to the United States Army and Navy Bazaar to be held in Grand Central Palace, Oct. 27 to Nov. 3, under the auspices of the Army and Navy Field Comfort Committee. The bazaar is for the purpose of raising funds to purchase comfort kits, containing tobacco, cigarettes, pipes, tooth paste, shaving cream, chocolate, shoe laces, &c., for our soldiers and sailors at the front and in cantonments, and an Automobile Committee has been formed to assist the General Committee.

Several days before the opening of the bazaar dealers along the row will lend cars which, filled with patriotic young women, will invade Wall Street and other sections of the city at the noon hour to sell tickets for the bazaar. Other cars are needed, and private owners of cars who would like to assist in this sale by lending their autos should communicate with the Automobile Committee, 12 East Forty-sixth Street, telephone Murray Hill 8660.

The Automobile Committee is headed by Elmer Thompson, Secretary of the Automobile Club of America; William C. Poertner, President of the Motor Dealers' Contest Association; Charles P. Larson, President of the Motor Club, Inc., and W. J. Morgan.

Auto Men Indorse Military Highway Bill.

A. A. A. FAVORS LICENSING.

Convention Would Place All Drivers Under System.

The New York State Automobile Association Convention in annual session at Corning, N. Y., last week decided that, as there is much confusion existing in regard to complying with the present automobile glare head light law, the Secretary of State should be authorized by law to pass upon and license use of such lenses as will comply with the law. Member associations are called upon during the continuance of the war to conserve gasoline in every way possible.

One of the most important features of the convention was the passage of the resolution authorizing the Law and Legislation Committee to draft a bill compelling every driver of an automobile in the State to be licensed without examination or fee, with power of revocation of license by the authorities for cause after hearing and conviction. The following officers were elected:

President, Frank M. Baucus, Troy; Vice President, Herbert G. Andrews, Brooklyn; Second Vice President, E. H. Maloney, Canton; Third Vice President, Peter G. Ten Eyck, Albany; Treasurer, Ray C. Parsons, Cortland.

Members of Executive Committee: A. J. Deer, Hornell; Fred D. Cribb, Canandaigua; Directors at Large: Arthur H. Brown, Auburn; Harry W. Robbins, Medina; E. B. Hague, Utica.

Long Island Club Receives.

The Long Island Automobile Club will hold its first reception of the season, at the clubhouse, 1,217 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, Wednesday evening, Oct. 17. More than two thousand invitations have been sent out to the club members and their friends.

Give Carbon half a chance to accumulate, and it will encrust your valves, plugs, cylinder heads and piston heads till the motor can't run properly. No pleasure in driving when your motor begins to knock, miss and backfire.

CARBON

will clean thoroughly a badly carbonized motor, but its best use is as a preventive to remove the carbon as its forms, heading off trouble, saving your motor from the permanent damage of scratched and pitted metal.

HART-BELL is connected to your water-jacket and intake manifold. Every now and then, when your car is standing idle, leave the motor running for ten or fifteen minutes, with your HART-BELL'S water valve open. A thin stream of water, drawn in with the gas, is converted into live steam as it enters the cylinders. By the familiar water-gas process ($H_2O + C = CO + 2H$), the Oxygen in the steam unites with the incandescent Carbon to form Carbon Monoxide gas, which is carried off by the exhaust. Simple, easy, quick, thorough; no expense beyond the small first cost, and your motor always clean as new.

Unqualified Money-Back Guarantee
After 30 days' use if your HART-BELL has not come up to expectations in every way, you can have your money back for the asking.

Factory Representative Here
For the next 3 days, a special factory representative will be here to explain and demonstrate HART-BELL. Come in and ask him some questions.

WHITMAN PLEDGES VOTE TO MITCHEL TO BEAT TAMMANY

But Asserts "There Is No Hohenzollern Issue" in the Municipal Campaign.

DEFINES PARTY ATTITUDE

Says Republicans Won't Violate Regularity if They Support a Nonpartisan City Candidate.

MAYOR WELCOMES SUPPORT

But Upholds His Contention That Loyalty Will Sway Voters—Bennett Derides Governor's Action.

Governor Charles S. Whitman last night openly declared his support of Mayor Mitchel in the municipal campaign and said he expected to vote for him. In a statement which he issued at the St. Regis Hotel, the Governor said that the only issue in the campaign, to his mind, was, "Shall Tammany Hall rule New York?" The Republican Party, he said, was committed to nonpartisanship in municipal elections, and the Governor added that he believed that Republicans might properly support the Mayor, although William M. Bennett was the choice at the party primary, and "maintain their party regularity, too."

The Governor said that there was no "Hohenzollern issue" in the campaign; that he had no reason to doubt the Americanism of Judge John F. Hylan, the Tammany Mayoralty candidate, while he believed that Mr. Bennett "is as loyal to the country and the flag as is the Mayor or the Governor." As Governor of the State, he said he resented the suggestion that the election or the defeat of any one of the present candidates would indicate any lack of patriotism on the part of the people of the greater city, asserting that they do more than half of the population of the State. The people of the city and of the State are sincere and enthusiastic in their support of President Wilson at this critical time and they are loyal to the country and to the cause, and they will continue so to be, whatever the result of the election.

Mayor Mitchel last night expressed his gratification at the offer of the Governor's support, but emphatically asserted that the Governor was mistaken in his opinion that there is no "Hohenzollern issue" in the campaign. The assertion that the issue of loyalty and disloyalty, "Americanism and Hohenzollernism," was not of his making, but had been forced upon him by those who had attacked and opposed him because of his support of President Wilson and the National Government in the war. Mr. Bennett's comment was that the Governor had "hit Mr. Mitchel over the head with a club in his right hand, and wipes the blood away with the left hand."

Governor Whitman's Statement.

Governor Whitman's statement was as follows:

"During the recent primaries I urged Republicans in New York City to support the Fusion movement at the polls, because I believed that it offered the only hope of saving the city from the control of Tammany Hall. I see no reason to change my mind. Mr. Bennett carried the Republican primaries, and is the regular Republican candidate. He is entitled, legally and morally, to the Republican name, the Republican emblem, and the use of the Republican machinery.

"I refer especially to the organization watchers, challengers, and workers at the polls named by the Republican County Chairmen. It is their duty to protect his interests, and in the light of recent events I do not blame him for feeling that his interests at the polls need protection. Such officials will be named by the Democratic Party for the benefit of Judge Hylan, and by the Fusion Committee for the benefit of Mr. Mitchel. Any effort by resolution of any County Committee to deprive Mr. Bennett of the assistance of these organization representatives, numbering several thousand in the greater city, would be, in my opinion, essentially as dishonest as the effort in certain quarters to steal the nomination at the primaries.

"There is no Hohenzollern issue in the campaign My acquaintance with Judge Hylan is slight, but I have no reason to doubt his Americanism. I have known Mr. Bennett for twenty years and I believe that he is as loyal to the country and the flag as is the Mayor or the Governor.

"As the Governor of this State I resent the suggestion that the election or the defeat of any one of these candidates would indicate any lack of patriotism on the part of the people of the greater city, asserting as they do more than half of the population of the State. The people of the city and of the State are sincere and enthusiastic in their support of President Wilson at this critical time and they are loyal to the country and to the cause, and they will continue so to be, whatever the result of the election.

Sees "Only One Issue."

"There is only one issue. There is but one question which the people are called upon to answer on Nov. 6: Shall Tammany Hall rule New York? No one knows better than I do what Tammany rule means to New York City, and I am against it just as hard as I know how to be. The Republican Party is committed to nonpartisanship in municipal administration and in municipal elections. Such a declaraton has been repeatedly made in the platforms of the party, city and State.

"There is no party irregularity involved in a Republican's supporting a nonpartisan anti-Tammany movement in New York City. It is plainly impossible to elect a Republican. The only hope of defeating Tammany Hall lies in the candidacy of Mr. Mitchel.

"I expect to vote for him, and I believe that Republicans may properly support him and maintain their party regularity, too. But, even if such were not the case and the choice were between the obligation of partisanship and the obligation of citizenship, our duty would be entirely clear.

"I see reference in some of the newspapers to former statements and speeches of mine relative to Tammany, Fusion and nonpartisanship in municipal affairs. I desire to reiterate everything I have ever said on these subjects. My statements were true when they were made, and they are true now."

Asked if he intended to take an active part in the campaign, the Governor said:

"The statement speaks for itself. I expect to vote for Mr. Mitchel."

Mayor Mitchel's Comment.

This is the Mayor's comment upon what the Governor said:

"I am gratified and not surprised that the Governor has declared himself for

Potatoes Germany's One Hope In Face of 40% Cut in Grain

LONDON, Oct. 14.—The Press Association publishes a review of food conditions in Germany and Austria. It says that an investigation ordered by the German Chancellor shows that the 1917 yield will be 40 per cent. lower than in normal years for wheat and 45 per cent. lower for rye, oats, and barley.

The total harvest of wheat and rye is 7,500,000 tons, as compared with 13,000,000 tons in 1915. The shortage will be partly compensated from Rumania.

The reviewer thinks the food situation in Germany the coming Winter will depend mainly on the potato harvest. Potatoes are now being delivered with fair regularity, but should frost, lack of labor or other reason cause a shortage, it may well spell disaster.

The situation in Austria-Hungary, it is stated, is worse than in Germany.

APPEALS TO FLEET TO HALT GERMANS

Kerensky Says "Hour of Trial Has Arrived" with Foe on Oesel Island.

KRONSTADT IS WEAKENED

Germans on Oesel Press On, but Attempt to Seize Island Toward Mainland Fails.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 14.—In consequence of the occupation of Oesel Island at the head of the Gulf of Riga by German forces, aided by a huge fleet, Premier Kerensky has issued an urgent appeal to the Baltic fleet to defend the Fatherland "in this hour of trial." His statement divulges the fact that the garrison of Kronstadt, chief fortress and military port of Russia and the station of the Baltic fleet, twenty miles west of Petrograd, has already by its attitude weakened the defensive resources of the fortress.

Kerensky's appeal, which is addressed to the Commander in Chief of the northern armies, reads as follows:

"Tell the redoubtable Baltic fleet that the hour of trial has arrived. Russia expects for her safety a valiant effort by the navy, and I, as Generalissimo, demand that the sailors make sacrifices.

"The hour has come when the Baltic fleet can defend the honor of the Fatherland and the great traditions of liberty and of the revolution. It is time to reflect seriously and to cease to cooperate involuntarily with the cause of the enemy. The garrison of Kronstadt has by its attitude already caused the defensive resources of the fortress to be incomplete.

"Let all remember that the Fatherland will not forgive criminal levity. Let the abominable crime of the battleship Petropaviosk be redeemed. Let the fleet repulse the enemy under command of its officers, whose patriotism is well known to all Russia."

The German forces which landed on Oesel Island had occupied up to 10 o'clock yesterday morning the whole northern and eastern part of the island and were within twelve versts, (eight miles) of Arensburg, the capital, on the southern shore, according to an announcement made today by the naval General Staff.

Fighting between the Russians and German troops continues, and the Germans are pressing the Russians toward the southeast. The Russians still occupy Sorel Point and the Sworb Peninsula on the southwestern coast.

New German Move Defeated.

An attempt made by a German force to capture a pier on Moon Island, between the island of Oesel and the mainland of Esthonia, was repulsed.

Ninety German vessels participated in the landing on Oesel. These included eight dreadnoughts, a dozen light cruisers, forty torpedo boats, and thirty mine sweepers.

It now develops that the German movement against Dagö Island, north of Oesel and at the head of the Gulf of Finland, was a demonstration rather than an attack. A small detachment was landed, following the destruction of a Russian battery by the German warships, but according to the Russian War Office bulletin this force was later compelled to return to the ships. "Four German torpedo boats were sunk by the battery before it was silenced, says the bulletin.

Russian warships are resisting German attempts to enter the waters between Oesel and Dagö Islands.

The War Office statement reads:

Baltic Sea.—On Friday the enemy who landed on Oesel Island succeeded in occupying part of the island. Toward evening it was observed that enemy motorcyclist detachments were approaching Orrishat in the eastern part of the island, and they attempted to capture a pier on Moon Island, but were repulsed.

The fight with enemy troops which landed still continues. Enemy advanced detachments are pressing our troops in a southeasterly direction.

The landing of German troops on Oesel Island continued yesterday. The region where the debarkation is taking place is guarded from the sea by very large enemy naval forces.

Simultaneously with the landing on Oesel Island several enemy ships engaged our shore batteries on Dagö Island. According to the information to hand, four enemy torpedo boats were sunk by the fire of this battery, and one enemy cruiser which was firing at this battery ran aground.

Our battery was completely destroyed by the overwhelming gunfire from the enemy ships. This enabled the enemy to land a small detachment on Dagö Island, which, however, was unable to maintain its position, and the troops promptly returned to their ships.

Since yesterday morning our ships have successfully hindered the enemy's naval forces entering our waters between Dagö and Oesel Islands.

In the course of the engagements of the last two days our ships suffered no appreciable damage. While he has landed troops, the enemy also continues the usual mine sweeping along the Courland shores of Irban Strait.

During numerous aerial reconnoissances and engagements in the region

MILITARY TRIALS FOR OFFICERS WHO CABLE TROOPNEWS

Washington Aroused by Publication of Arrival of Forces in France.

GOVERNORS GOT MESSAGES

Colonel and Lieutenant Colonel as Well as Censors Must Explain.

OFFICIAL REQUEST IGNORED

Dispatches Heralded in Many Newspapers Despite Department's Plea.

Special to The New York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., Oct. 14.—Connecticut's former National Guardsmen are safe in France, and the cheerful information was widely heralded in practically every Saturday evening and Sunday morning newspaper in the State. This in spite of the fact that the War Department refused to countenance such infraction of its regulations. Several private cablegrams had been received by Connecticut relatives of guardsmen on Saturday, followed by one which read like this:

"Governor, Connecticut, Hartford: All safe and mill, [well.] Publish.
"ISABELLE."

As finally corrected by the telegraph company this was made to read:

"All safe and well; publish.
"ISABELLE."

Senator Isabelle of New Haven is the Colonel of the 102d United States Infantry, which is composed of the Connecticut National Guard regiments. When this message, which had passed both the French and American censors, was given out by the Governor's office, with the significant special request for publicity, the Connecticut newspapers felt justified in going ahead in printing the news.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The Colonel of a New England National Guard regiment and the Lieutenant Colonel of a Western National Guard regiment probably will be tried by court-martial for cabling to the Governors of their respective States that the New England regiment and the Western regiment had arrived in France. The Colonel cabled his Governor to give the widest publicity to the news.

An investigation is being made by the War Department, and it was made known tonight that the Navy Department had begun an inquiry to ascertain why the American cable censors passed the two dispatches without notifying the authorities in Washington. It was from the New England Governor that the department learned of the Colonel's cablegram.

The War Department was concerned when it learned tonight that the Governor of the New England State had given out the Colonel's message for publication. Officials were indignant, because they had requested the Governor not to give out the news. It was said that this request had been made by both the department and George Creel, Chairman of the Committee on Public Information, and that the objections had been laid before the Governor in the most positive way.

The Governor was told, it was said, that when the commanding general of the division to which the Colonel's regiment was attached learned of his action the Colonel was likely to be detached immediately and perhaps ordered to trial. Officials pointed out that the New England regiment and the Western regiment were in the Federal service and were not in any way under the command of the Governors of the States concerned.

Predicts Drastic Action.

An official of the Committee on Public Information said: "You may quote this committee as saying that the War Department feels this matter very keenly. Officials of the department think the information should not be published. The case of the New England Colonel is the most flagrant case of the kind yet brought to their attention. Instant and drastic action will be taken."

Why the Governor of the New England State should have given out the information about the arrival of troops in France in the face of the emphatic request from the War Department caused amazement among officials. Some of them said that the New England Governor was informed that the court-martial of the Colonel was practically certain to follow the publication.

The New England Governor had brought the matter to the department's attention, they said, and the deduction was drawn from this that he was doubtful of the propriety of giving the news to the press. One of the highest officers of the army, who is officially attached to the War Department, said that the action of the Colonel and the Lieutenant Colonel in sending the information, and particularly the request of the Colonel that the widest publicity be given to it, was "almost criminal."

The Navy's interest in the matter comes from the fact that it has charge of the administration of the censorship over cable dispatches. The department's investigation has not been completed, but officers said tonight that it was probable that the censors had been misled into believing that, as the messages were addressed to Governors of States, they were official and therefore not liable to the censorship.

This, however, does not explain how the censors overlooked the request that the news of the arrival of National Guard troops in France be published. It is known in official circles that the policy of the Government not to publish news of the arrival of troops in Europe until General Pershing has sent a cable message suggesting that this be done.

The War Department and the Committee on Public Information objected to the publication of the present dispatches telling of the arrival in France of the first American contingent of General Pershing's army. A considerable period elapsed after the publication of the press dispatch on the subject before General Pershing was willing that the fact of the arrival of the expedition should be announced officially.

It was explained at the department that when the first press account reached this country the entire contingent had not landed, and the publication of the statement that the expedition had arrived was virtual notice to German submarine commanders that American

Germans Assail Swiss Champion of Belgium

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 14.—The Berliner Lokal-Anzeiger has started a campaign against Gustave Ador, head of the Swiss Political Department, because of his remark that, as a condition for a just peace, Belgium must be restored and compensated.

The Lokal-Anzeiger demands the retirement of Ador, and suggests that the Ministers at Berne of the Central Powers sever relations with the Swiss Political Department until he resigns.

HOLLAND STOPS SHIPS TO ENGLAND

Step Taken Because of Embargo and the Cutting Off of Cable Communication.

DUTCH PRESS DENOUNCES US

Condemns Our Refusal to Give Coal to Ships Now Here—Fears Seizing of Cargoes.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 14.—The Maasbode says it learns that all Dutch shipping to England has been stopped on account of the pending differences between Great Britain and Holland.

Cornelius van Aalst, President of the Netherlands Overseas Trust, in an interview printed in the Handelsblad, describes the restriction placed by Great Britain on cable communication between Holland and other countries, including the Dutch colonies, as a very serious measure which could only have been devised by persons unacquainted with the situation and with feeling in Holland.

Herr van Aalst declared that Dutch commercial men would never yield to such a measure or try to influence the Government to yield. The United States, which in part, he said, boasted of Dutch origin, owed a tremendous lot to Holland and, therefore, was under moral obligation to help her. In conclusion he said that the American Government was playing a high hand.

Great Britain on Oct. 11 stopped all commercial cable communication with Holland until such time as the Netherlands Government placed absolute restriction on the transit of sand, gravel, and scrap metals from Germany to Belgium by rail at Heimel. The British Government contended that this material was being used by the Germans in the construction of dugouts.

The Netherlands Government replied by saying that it would satisfy the British desire to stop the transit of sand and gravel to Belgium only when the British Government showed despite the declaration of the German authorities and the investigations of Dutch officers, that the materials were being used for war purposes.

Dutch Press Greatly Incensed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Oct. 14.—The Dutch press is considerably incensed at the latest restrictions imposed upon Holland by America and her allies. The pro-German Vaderland, referring to the cutting off of commercial cables by Great Britain, says that the longer the war lasts the worse it is for Holland, adding that the situation is daily becoming more dangerous.

"America," says this journal, "prevents our ships, laden with cargoes that have been paid for, from leaving her ports, and cuts off all connections with our colonies, and England cuts our cable connections. Certainly America and England have the right to do so; but are we to bear it in silence?"

Commenting on America's refusal to furnish coal to Dutch steamers, the Vaderland asks if this is a proper attitude for a country which champions the rights of little nations. It also asks if America and England will force Japan, Australia, New Zealand, and even China to hold Dutch ships, as America is doing, and whether Dutch merchantmen will be kept in British ports, as those of Sweden have been. It looks, says the Vaderland, as if the Entente permitted itself to take any action toward neutrals, and as if America and England wished to convince the world of their might, and it sarcastically asks if this is a sign of strength.

The Handelsblad says that England has been pursuing bullying tactics, remarking that this appears to be an Anglo-Saxon word, and that America is adopting the same policy of economic pressure in the matter of bunker coal, and asking if President Wilson's phrases regarding the rights of humanity are only empty phrases.

The Handelsblad admits the President's legal right to pursue these tactics, but asserts that his refusal to allow Dutch vessels to coal is not due to the fact that there is a scarcity of fuel or that America needs the coal herself, but to his desire to commit an unfriendly act. It argues that similar action on the part of the Netherlands—for instance, refusal to sell rubber to America—would be considered hostile.

Dutch ships, it says, sought hospitality in American ports, counting on the protection accorded by international law. It speaks apprehensively of the report that America may seize their cargoes, and says that such action would be hostile, and might lead to a declaration of war. It concludes by saying that, whatever the consequences of the allied abuse of power, the Dutch people will back the Government in any step it may take.

The semi-official Nieuwe Courant says:

"While the statesmen of the belligerent powers are hurling reproaches and insults over the heads of the small neutrals, the difficulties of these latter are becoming increasingly great. Communication with our colonies has been severed by the refusal of the Allies to allow us to coal in America and South Africa, and now the economic oppression has been increased by England's severing cable communication."

PRESIDENT ACTS TO SUPERVISE ALL TRADING WITH FOE

New Law's Sweeping Powers Delegated to Agencies of Government by Executive Order.

ERECTS A LICENSE SYSTEM

War Trade Board Succeeds Export Administrative Board, with Transfer of Members.

CENSORSHIP PROVIDED FOR

Alien Property Custodian to be Appointed—Term "Enemy" Officially Defined.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14. — President Wilson issued an executive order tonight by which he put into effect practically all of the great powers vested in him by the Trading with the Enemy act, one of the most drastic pieces of legislation ever passed by Congress.

By the regulations set forth the President took over control of American commerce, both as regards exports and imports, and prescribed the conditions on which trading with enemy interests might be carried on. One provision is that none of the money involved shall be permitted to be contributed to the welfare of enemy countries.

Provisions of far-reaching consequence are made for the taking over, when deemed advisable, of enemy property in the United States by an Alien Property Custodian, to be named by the President. It is further provided that enemy-held patents may be used to aid in the winning of the war.

To throw every possible safeguard around information which might get to the enemy, the President created a Censorship Board, with full powers to censor cable, telegraph, radio, and mail communication of every sort passing between this country and any foreign nation. Censorship of the foreign language press is vested in the Postmaster General.

Machinery Reorganized

Some of the war-time machinery already in existence was reorganized by the terms of the order. The Exports Administrative Board goes out of existence and is replaced by the War Trade Board, which will supervise exports and imports and consider applications for licenses to trade with enemy firms, thus making it possible to shut off coal from South American public utilities now in German hands if it is deemed expedient.

Foreign insurance companies in the United States will be subject to a licensing system which will be controlled by the Secretary of the Treasury, who also will retain control of shipments of gold, silver, bullion and currency.

Vance, McCormick, Chairman of the Exports Administrative Board, will remain as Chairman of the War Trade Board, and the present personnel will not be changed. A representative of the Treasury Department will be added. A War Trade Council will be organized to act in an advisory capacity, and will include the present members of the Export Council and Chairman Edward N. Hurley of the United States Shipping Board.

The additional powers thus vested in the various branches of the Government's war machinery, it is believed, will make it possible for the United States to cut off absolutely the last vestige of hope of German agents to get aid to their nation. The law provides heavy penalties for the punishment of those engaged in such traffic.

Text of Executive's Order.

Here is the President's order:

Executive order vesting power and authority in designated officers and making rules and regulations under Trading with the Enemy act and Title VII. of the act, approved June 15, 1917:

By virtue of the authority vested in me by "an act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy and for other purposes," approved Oct. 6, 1917, and by Title VII. of the act, approved June 15, 1917, entitled "an act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States and for other purposes," (hereinafter designated as the Espionage act,) I hereby make the following orders and rules and regulations:

WAR TRADE BOARD.

1. I hereby establish a War Trade Board, to be composed of representatives, respectively, of the Secretary of State, of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the Secretary of Agriculture, of the Secretary of Commerce, of the Food Administrator, and of the United States Shipping Board.

2. I hereby vest in said board the power and authority to issue licenses under such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law, or to withhold or refuse licenses, for the exportation of all articles, except coin, bullion, or currency the exportation or taking of which out of the United States may be restricted by proclamations heretofore or hereafter issued by me under said Title VII. of the espionage act.

3. I further hereby vest in said War Trade Board the power and authority to issue, upon such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law, or to withhold or refuse, licenses for the importation of all articles the importation of which may be restricted by any proclamation hereafter issued by me under Section 11 of the Trading with the Enemy act.

4. I further hereby vest in said War Trade Board the power and authority not vested in other officers by subsequent provisions of this order to issue, under such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law, or to withhold or refuse licenses to trade, either directly or indirectly, with, to, or from, or for, or on account of, on or behalf of, or for the benefit of, any other person, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that such other person is an enemy or ally of enemy, or is conducting or taking part in such trade directly or indirectly for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an enemy or ally of enemy.

5. I further hereby vest in said War Trade Board the power and authority, under such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law, to issue to

WILSON PROCLAIMS LIBERTY LOAN DAY; SETS OCT. 24 FOR NATIONAL CELEBRATION; $358,000,000 DAILY NEEDED IN DRIVE

President's Liberty Loan Proclamation Calling On the Nation for Subscriptions

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

The second Liberty Loan gives the people of the United States an opportunity to lend their funds to their Government to sustain their country at war. The might of the United States is being mobilized and organized to strike a mortal blow at autocracy in defense of outraged American rights and of the cause of liberty. Billions of dollars are required to arm, feed, and clothe the brave men who are going forth to fight our country's battles and to assist the nations with whom we are making common cause against a common foe. To subscribe to the Liberty Loan is to perform a service of patriotism.

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do appoint Wednesday, the 24th of October, as Liberty Day, and urge and advise the people to assemble in their respective communities and pledge to one another and to the Government that represents them the fullest measure of financial support. On the afternoon of that day I request that patriotic meetings be held in every city, town, and hamlet throughout the land, under the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and the immediate direction of the Liberty Loan Committees which have been organized by the Federal Reserve Banks.

The people responded nobly to the call of the first Liberty Loan with an oversubscription of more than 50 per cent. Let the response to the second loan be even greater, and let the amount be so large that it will serve as an assurance of unequaled support to hearten the men who are to face the fire of battle for us. Let the result be so impressive and emphatic that it will echo throughout the empire of our enemy as an index of what America intends to do to bring this war to a victorious conclusion.

For the purpose of participating in Liberty Day celebrations all employes of the Federal Government throughout the country whose services can be spared may be excused at 12 o'clock Wednesday, the 24th of October.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia, this 12th day of October, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and seventeen, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-second.

WOODROW WILSON.

By the President.
(Signed) ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State.

TREASURY CURB PUT ON BOND SLUMP

Bank Examiners Ordered Not to Charge Good Securities Down to Market Value.

PRICES INJURE PROPERTIES

Controller Williams Repeats Action Which Stayed a Decline at Outbreak of War.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—Treasury officials have determined to check the downward tendency of the bond market and prevent, so far as is consistent in Governmental action, the further shrinkage of gilt-edge securities.

With this in view, John Skelton Williams, Controller of the Currency, has instructed the national bank examiners not to require banks holding high-grade bonds of unquestioned value and merit to charge them down to the present low figures, but to exercise an "intelligent and conservative discretion" as to the prices at which the banks may continue to carry such securities.

In explanation of his action the Controller issued this statement tonight:

After the outbreak of the European war in 1914, the Controller of the Currency instructed national bank examiners that national banks need not be required to charge down the values of their high-grade bond to meet the abnormal and sacrifice quotations which for awhile were being made on the outside markets, (the Stock Exchanges being closed,) on securities which at that time were being unknown overcard regardless of real worth.

This office also earnestly endeavored to prevent the sacrifice by national banks, while the Exchanges were closed and there was no general market for securities, of bonds and shares held as collateral for customers' loans.

The policy pursued proved fortunate at that time. After the first pressure was over and money conditions relaxed, the security market was reestablished; the grave losses which were threatened by the temporary shrinkage in values were averted, and borrowers from banks were enabled to meet their obligations without sacrifice of their collateral.

Since the commencement of the war between this country and Germany there has been a heavy depreciation in the quoted values of securities generally, including those of the very highest grade, which have heretofore found a ready market in competition with Government issues; and in many cases prices have shrunk to figures which are manifestly far below the prices which would prevail under any normal conditions. This shrinkage or marking down of values is partly due to the efforts of investors to sell other high-class securities for reinvestment in Government bonds.

In view of all conditions, the Controller of the Currency has instructed National Bank Examiners that they need not at this time require national banks holding high-grade bonds of unquestioned intrinsic value and merit to charge such investments down to present abnormal figures; but an intelligent and conservative discretion will be exercised as to the price at which national banks can safely and reasonably be permitted to carry such high-class securities and as to what proportion of the depreciation should be charged off in any six months' period.

This action, it is thought, will tend to prevent undue tightening of the money

SPEED UP TODAY IN LOAN DRIVE

New York City to be Canvassed by Blocks by Salesmen for Patriotism.

CLOCKS TO TELL PROGRESS

Viscount Reading to be a Speaker at Great Rally in Closing Campaign.

The third week of the four weeks' Liberty Loan campaign opens today with the New York Federal Reserve District short approximately $1,200,000,000 of the $1,500,000,000 which it is expected to contribute. Applications for the bonds must come in at the rate of $100,000,000 a day if the desired total is to be reached in the remaining twelve business days of the campaign.

There is every indication that the solicitation of subscriptions will be pursued more vigorously from now on than during the last fortnight. The 100,000 workers, many of them volunteers, who are devoting their time to the loan have received the signal to turn on more power and to speed things up. Public meetings are to be held everywhere throughout the district, and special attention will be directed to systematic canvasses, both in the cities and in rural communities. This morning, for the first time, the actual bonds of the new 4 per cent. Liberty Loan will become available to cash purchasers, and it is expected that the appearance of the securities will greatly aid in the task of getting the public to subscribe.

The entire strength of the Home Defense League will be employed in canvassing New York City for subscriptions. The work will be undertaken by police precincts under the direction of the Liberty Loan Committee Chairman of each. All drills and other exercises will be suspended, and every one of the 25,000 members of the league will devote his whole time to the work. The city will be canvassed block by block. Not only will every house be visited, but sentries will be posted so that every person entering or leaving the area which is being visited at any given time will have the Liberty Loan brought to his attention. The canvassing will be under the general supervision of Deputy Police Commissioner A. M. White, commanding the Home Defense League, with James C. Auchincloss for Manhattan, Bronx and Richmond, and W. W. Pickard for Brooklyn and Queens as his principal assistants. Commissioner White sent telegraphic orders yesterday to all precinct commanders, as well as the Captains of companies recruited from the employes of business houses, to place their entire available force on the work at once.

W. L. Markham, County Agricultural Agent, in charge of the New York State Co-operative Extension Work in Agricultural and Home Economics, sent word yesterday that his bureau had started a personal Liberty Loan canvass among each of the division's 1,300 members in Erie County. Similar activity is reported from Sullivan County.

To promote the sale of Liberty bonds the Allied Clothing Trades Committee has erected "clocks" at the southwest corner of Astor Place and Broadway, the southwest corner of Fourteenth Street and Broadway, the northwest corner of Fifteenth Street and Fifth Avenue, and the southwest corner of Twenty-third Street and Fifth Avenue. Each clock will show how much of the expected $1,500,000,000 of subscriptions has been raised, and how much the clothing trades have contributed to their allotment of $5,000,000.

Viscount Reading, Lord Chief Justice of England, will be the principal speaker

PLEA MADE TO LABOR ALSO

Secretary Wilson Says Workers Have More at Stake in the War Than Any Others.

TOTAL ABOUT $650,000,000

Latest Official Figures and Estimates Show Only 14% of the Maximum Subscribed.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The American people were asked today by President Wilson to subscribe to the second Liberty Loan and thus "strike a mortal blow at autocracy in defense of outraged American rights and the cause of liberty." By proclamation the President set Oct. 24 as Liberty Day and expressed the hope that patriotic meetings would be held throughout the country.

The Treasury Department announced tonight that the amount which had been subscribed was estimated at $650,000,000 to $700,000,000, as advices from New York, Cleveland, Chicago, and San Francisco districts alone added $180,000,000 to the $390,654,900 actually received and tabulated. Other districts, it was said, probably had collected $100,000,000 not reported officially.

"In other words," the statement continued, "the latest official figures and most careful estimates of unreported sales make it appear that not more than 14 per cent. of the maximum quota has been subscribed. If it is to be attained, $358,000,000 worth of bonds must be sold every day between now and the close of the drive.

Many Regions Below Quota.

"With the hardest kind of work the goal may be accomplished. Committees are determined. Many prospects are in sight. There is not a single weak spot in the country where it can be said positively that failure is probable, despite the fact that many sections are far below their quotas."

Many encouraging reports were received today from the Middle West and South, where the showing has not been up to expectations. In the Minneapolis district it was stated that 60,000 solicitors would take the field tomorrow. The actual money paid in represents a shade under 8 per cent. of the maximum figure of $5,000,000,000 which Secretary McAdoo is striving for.

The latest official returns and the allotments made to each district by the Secretary at the outset of the sale follow:

| | Reported. | Allotted. |
|---|---|---|
| Boston | $38,460,000 | $350,000,000 |
| New York | 250,310,000 | 1,500,000,000 |

Secretary Wilson's Appeal.

Secretary William B. Wilson of the Department of Labor made a strong appeal today to the workingmen of the country to participate in the Liberty Loan. He pointed out that "the workers have more at stake in this great conflict than any others," because it was a fight for democracy. His appeal follows:

TO THE WAGE WORKERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

"The great European war in which we are now involved came to the people of the Western Hemisphere as a terrible shock, and to no portion of the people did it come as a greater shock than to the wage earners of the United States. They believed in and wanted international peace, but they wanted it on a basis of international justice which would insure the right of our people to govern themselves. When the Imperial German Government undertook to destroy the lives of our people and to impose a rule of conduct upon us without our consent in places under the jurisdiction of the United States Government, there was no course left but to resist.

"The workers have more at stake in this conflict than any others, because it is only in a democracy that the common people can come into their own. The great privilege is not given to all of us to serve our country on the battlefield or in the trenches, but there are other ways in which we can serve and assist those who are privileged to carry our flag on the battlefields of Europe. The impulse of sacrifice for the common good is sending the youth of our country into the trenches in defense of liberty, humanity, and democracy.

Points Way to Serve.

"To those of us who must of necessity remain at home to till the soil, harvest the crops, man the factories, mines and mills, the way is open for additional service. We too must make sacrifices. The men who go forth to do battle in the field must be equipped and sustained. Funds must be forthcoming to furnish the food, the firearms and other supplies for the fighting forces of the nation. Finances for that purpose must be secured immediately from the sale of bonds. The workers can help by contributing their mite.

"I am reminded of the fable of a great drought when the crops were wasting for the want of water, and one little raindrop said to another in the clouds, 'I would like to go down to the relief of the farmer and his perishing crops, but I am so little it would be useless,' and another little raindrop replied, 'It would be useless for you to go down alone, but let us all go down and our combined effort will bring the needed relief.' The advice was accepted and a beautiful shower poured down on the land and the crops were saved for the harvest.

"And so it is with the workers. The fund each has available is but a drop, but all of the drops together can make a shower of funds that will furnish the needed supplies, bring joy to the hearts of the boys at the front and consternation to our enemies.

"WILLIAM B. WILSON,
"Secretary of Labor."

URGES LOAN UPON GERMANS.

Henry Weismann Tells Brooklyn Affiliance Duty of Patriotism.

More than 3,000 persons gathered last night at Schwaben Hall, Knickerbocker and Myrtle Avenues, Brooklyn, to attend the annual Fall Festival of the Brooklyn Branch of the National German-American Alliance, greeted enthusiastically a letter written by Henry Weismann, President of the New York State German-American Alliance, in which he urged them to participate in the Liberty Loan and to give active encouragement and aid to American soldiers in the field.

The festival was principally devoted to a celebration of the anniversary of the landing in Pennsylvania, in 1683 of the first German settlers in this country, who came at the invitation of William Penn and founded what is now Germantown. Mr. Weismann, who is President of the Brooklyn Branch as well as of the State organization, was to be the principal speaker. Instead his letter was read by Otto C. H. Mayday, Secretary of the Brooklyn Branch, who acted as Chairman. The letter follows:

My Dear Mr. Mayday:

I greatly regret that owing to the quite recent death of my dear wife I shall not be able to participate in your exercises. Rest assured, however, that I am with you in spirit and kindly convey to our friends my hope that this celebration will result in two important things.

First, to emphasize the great patriotism of the Americans of German stock ever since, on that memorable October day, 1683, the first German pioneers arrived in Pennsylvania, in response to the invitation of William Penn and founded the settlement known later as Germantown. Let the glory of Pastorius, of Muhlenberg, De Kalb, von Steuben, Schurz, Sigel, and the countless others who became a living and proud part of our beloved country shine forth in your thoughts and words, an example, an inspiration to the German-Americans of today in their endeavor to serve their adopted country with equal zeal.

Secondly, may the evening's exercises be the staring point of a new and still greater devotion to our country's cause, a devotion not in words but in deeds no less important than those which our boys have now been called to perform on the field of battle. Painful as the struggle against the men and women of our kin must necessarily be to thousands of our race, we can hesitate as little as did the patriotic men of North and South who fifty years ago fought brother against brother, so that the institutions of the republic could survive and the home for the oppressed could be saved for your benefit as well as that of all mankind.

Active participation in the Liberty Loan is the watchword of the hour, as is also the active encouragement and aid to the boys in the field. Service such as this will be the test of our usefulness as a patriotic American alliance in a period of great national danger and will become a badge of honor for the years to come, such as will entitle us to promote with greater zeal than ever the patriotic American purposes for which the alliance has been formed.

May the flame of patriotism burn brightly tonight, a beacon light to those who would bring their offerings to the altar of American freedom and a warning to those who would fain believe that the Americans of German stock are not a unit with the forces of our nation in the present struggle, no matter who the foe and what the cost.

With this ardent wish, I remain,
HENRY WEISMANN.

The exercises at the celebration consisted of singing by the United Singers of Brooklyn and the German-American Boys' Chorus, gymnastic exercises by the Eastern District Turn Verein, the presentation of medals to pupils of the high and elementary public schools for excellence in the study of the German language, and the production of a set of historical tableaux. The first tableau represented the purchase of Manhattan Island from the Indians. The second was a reproduction of the reception of the first German settlers, headed by Daniel Pastorius, by William Penn, and the third showed Baron von Steuben drilling Continental troops in the presence of General George Washington.

TANK TO FIGHT FOR LOAN.

Land Battleship from French Front to Parade New York Streets.

Through the courtesy of the British Government the British tank which is being brought here directly from the western front, where it has seen active service, together with the tank's gun crew, are to be lent for one day to the Liberty Loan Committee of the New York Federal Reserve District. It will be used in a parade through the city streets. Speaking of the tank, a British officer said last night:

"The tank weighs twenty-six tons, and it is being brought here in seven sections. It is the largest size made, and the crew accompanying it comprises one officer and seven men.

"The tank that is coming has seen good, hard service, but fortunately it has never been struck by a German shell. A German shell striking a tank directly is the one thing that can knock a tank out. Over the western front you can see many tanks abandoned.

"Tanks are getting to move faster and faster. They are being developed rapidly. Their efficiency is enormously increasing. Now they can keep up with infantry. They can move at the rate of three miles an hour. This tank you will see in the streets of New York is one of the newer types, not, of course, the very latest, but fully up to date.

"There is no more uncomfortable place in the world than the interior of a tank, especially when it is in motion. The greatest difficulty is to see out of it, and this is done by a periscope."

Harvard's Campaign Opens Today.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 14.—In the Liberty Loan campaign which will open at Harvard University tomorrow a committee of 100 undergraduates will try to sell from $50,000 to $100,000 in bonds by asking each student having a parental allowance to lay aside each week a part of it for the purchase of bonds on the installment plan. Harvard clubs also will be asked to divert their surplus money to Liberty Bonds.

Camp Devens Subscribes $423,250.

AYER, Mass., Oct. 14.—The national army cantonment at Camp Devens today had subscribed a total of $423,250 to the Liberty Loan. The amount represents an increase of $25,600 over yesterday's total.

RESERVE BANK HAS $8,000,000,000 CREDIT

Accession of Great Trust Companies Lifts District's Lending and Currency Limit.

GEARED FOR LIBERTY LOAN

Tremendous Resources of New York Banks Insures That Any Government Need Will Be Met.

Benjamin Strong, Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank in New York, and Chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of this district, issued a statement last night explaining to what extent the bank was being strengthened by the added membership of six trust companies, and declaring that the Federal Reserve Bank had such tremendous resources that it could increase its loans by $1,100,000,000 should there be demand for it. Such an increase in the Reserve Bank's loan would expand the lending capacity of the banks of this district by at least $8,000,000,000. Governor Strong's observations are intended to reassure the banks and the public that the financial machinery of the Federal Reserve System is so well adjusted that it can supply billions and billions of credit and currency in the event of need, for successfully floating huge Government loans.

Mr. Strong points out that the Federal Reserve mechanism is geared to take care adequately of loans made by banks to their customers for the purpose of financing the purchase of Liberty Loan bonds, and urges the public "to borrow and buy: to save and pay." Governor Strong's statement follows:

"One of the most important developments in the entire history of the Federal Reserve system and one of the most vital in its immediate bearing on the flotation of the Second Liberty Loan is the decision of a number of the larger New York trust companies to become members of the system.

"The bearing which this has upon the success of the Second Liberty Loan, and, in fact, upon the Government's entire financial program, is not fully understood by the public as yet.

"Applications for membership now include six companies with total resources of $1,536,000,000. As a result of their admission the cash reserve of the Federal Reserve Bank will be increased from about $630,000,000, as of Oct. 10, to about $720,000,000.

"Upon this reserve base, and without impairing the minimum required by law to be held against note and deposit liabilities, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York could increase its loan and deposit accounts by no less than $1,100,000,000, which amount could be correspondingly increased as other State institutions join the system.

"But that is far from expressing the full strength of the banking situation. Every loan made by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York to its members is, in fact, creating new reserve money for the member banks, and in turn increases the lending power of the banks as a whole in the ratio of about 100 to 15.

"Of course, no such huge demands will be made upon the reserve and member banks. But should the Federal Reserve Bank of New York in fact increase its loans by the sum of $1,100,000,000 the lending capacity of the banks of the second district would thereby be expanded by no less a sum than about $8,000,000,000. The increase in their reserves through borrowings from the Reserve Bank would inevitably give them this added lending power if they cared to exercise it.

"While expansion of such volume is neither necessary nor desirable, still to the extent that expansion does take place, the provisions of the Federal Reserve act are such as thoroughly to safeguard the country's financial system.

"The New York Clearing House Association has recommended that its members make advances to subscribers for Liberty bonds at 4 per cent. Interest and the Liberty Loan Committee of this district has made a similar recommendation. The Directors of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York have stated that they see nothing in the present situation or outlook which would require increasing the present rate of 3½ per cent., at which such loans may be rediscounted at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. There should, therefore, be no hesitation on the part of any subscriber to borrow from his bank at these reasonable rates in order to subscribe for bonds which his expected savings will enable him to pay for, nor need there be any hesitation on the part of banks to make these loans when they can, directly or indirectly, resort to the Federal Reserve Bank to rediscount them, in case their reserves become impaired.

"If a subscriber to Liberty bonds sells property and securities for the purpose he performs a patriotic service, but, of course, the purchaser of the property or securities will himself thereby invest cash which otherwise he might invest in Liberty bonds. This is simply a shifting of credit, and while it probably results in an increase of subscriptions, it does not necessarily do so.

"On the other hand, a subscriber who is willing to commit himself to future economies by buying bonds for which he must borrow a portion of the purchase price is directly contributing to increasing the fund available for the purchase of bonds as well as contributing to national economy.

"This statement applies to individuals and institutions of large income with just as much force as it does to wage earners who are urged to buy $50 bonds by paying $1 a week. And the men and women of means should also not hesitate to pledge a part of their incomes for fifty weeks as the wage earners are doing. The banking power of the country is entirely adequate to take care of all such loans, no matter what they may aggregate, and it is being rapidly increased by the admission of these new institutions to the Federal Reserve system.

"Consequently, the patriotic action of the trust companies in joining the system lends a new point to the slogan which should be adopted by all subscribers to the Liberty Loan bonds: 'Borrow and buy; save and pay.'" at a Liberty Loan rally which will be held at Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening. Dr. Butler of Columbia University will preside, and addresses will be delivered by Secretary Lane of the Department of the Interior, George Wharton Pepper of Philadelphia, and Captain R. Hugh Enyvet, of the Australian army.

Governor Whitman will speak at noon today at the Liberty Bank in Madison Square, which is being operated by the Woman's Liberty Loan Committee.

Howard Hayne, Vice President of the Columbia Trust Company, issued the following statement discussing the various features of the new Liberty Loan bonds and showing that they fully measured up to the "ideal investment":

"I do not know whether the business of investing money should be classified as an art or a science, but I do know that there are investment measurements which are as useful as the slide rule of the engineer. And if you will study the Liberty Loan bonds in the light of these investment measurements, I believe you will quickly realize that they are the most satisfactory security ever offered in any market.

"I believe that some one has classified the elements of an ideal bond investment as ten in number—security of principal, stability of income, fair income return, marketability, value as collateral, tax exemption, exemption from care, acceptable duration, acceptable denomination, and stability of market price.

"Certainly you can accept it as axiomatic as to the safety of the principal and the stability of the income from Liberty bonds. Certainly every banker and student of investment knows that 4 per cent., year in and year out is a fair income return. As to marketability this factor ordinarily depends with any security upon the size of the issue, and this will be the largest issue of bonds ever offered. As to the value as collateral, the collateral value of a Liberty bond will be almost the same as that of a banknote. For the tax exemption measurement, which is now becoming a factor of tremendous importance, the investor has the provision that all of the bonds are exempt from most taxes and the first $5,000 exempt from the others. Certainly the holder of Liberty bonds has exemption from care, and the duration of the bonds from ten to twenty-five years is neither too long nor too short.

"To meet the requirements of acceptable domination the Government has provided for every type of investor from the $50 man to the $1,000,000 corporation. Bonds may be had in coupon form or registered, and registered bonds may be later exchanged for coupon bonds or vice versa.

"The last requirement, 'stability of market price,' to me appears the simplest of all because of the convertible feature. If the Government has to increase the rate on some future war issue, prices of nearly all other bonds will tend to decline, but the Liberty bonds will stay up, as they can be converted into the new bond bearing the higher rate. I believe there hardly exists a plausible argument against investment in Liberty bonds, no matter how small or how large may be the funds of the investor."

WANAMAKERS GIVE $2,500,000.

Father and Son Aid Philadelphia Women's Loan Drive.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Oct. 14.—John Wanamaker and his son, Rodman Wanamaker, gave impetus to the Women's Liberty Loan campaign, which opened today in Philadelphia, by subscribing $2,500,000. Announcement of the subscription was made this morning in the Wanamaker advertisement. There are 8,000 women in the local drive for $138,000,000 in subscriptions which they have pledged themselves to obtain.

"We intended to give our subscription today to the Philadelphia National Bank," says the Wanamaker announcement, "but to start the ball rolling we will give it instead to the Emergency Aid to go through the Third National Bank, where we have an account, and this is to authorize the Emergency Aid to enter the subscription for $2,500,000 as follows: John Wanamaker, $1,250,000; Rodman Wanamaker, $1,250,000; total, $2,500,000.

"Twenty-five hundred men or women subscribing $100 each can easily double this amount in the next two days and give the Emergency Aid a good go-off.

"For our country and for the hastening of the end of the war."

Hopeful Signs in Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Oct. 14.—Cleveland sets out tomorrow morning to raise $60,000,000 to complete the Liberty Loan quota of $80,000,000 in twelve days. Few large corporations have subscribed, and no wealthy Cleveland residents have as yet announced their subscriptions. These are regarded as signs favoring success in the campaign.

Camp Custer's Men Invest.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., Oct. 14.—Liberty Loan subscriptions at Camp Custer, near here, at noon today totaled $965,450, according to official announcement. Army officers predict the camp will exceed its quota, which has been set at $1,000,000. There are approximately 17,000 men in the camp.

Broome County Increases Quota.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Oct. 14.—Broome County, with the campaign yet scarcely under way, has subscribed $2,250,000 of its quota of $3,470,000 in the Liberty Loan. The committee has voluntarily raised its quota to $5,000,000.

GERMAN PRESS CALLS FOR NEW LEADER

Michaelis's Position Admitted to be Very Shaky, Even with von Capelle Retiring.

CONSERVATIVES MUDDLED

Some Still Hope Chancellor Will Adopt Their Position and Stay in Office.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Oct. 14.—There is still considerable tension in German parliamentary circles, and conservatives are relieved that the Reichstag has adjourned for so long. The conservative Tägliche Rundschau says:

"Thank God the Reichstag has adjourned. The crisis is not yet over, it is true; Hausmann has prophesied that the July crisis leads the Fall crisis, and Gothein utters threats for the future, but sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof and the Reichstag adjourned today."

Most of the other newspapers, however, are indignant at the Reichstag adjournment and the dilatory Government methods in view of the critical political situation. The Tageblatt remarks:

"The Reichstag has taken a recess at a most critical period, and it looks almost as if it had fled before a decision. The press, however, cannot participate in these tactics of procrastination or take a vacation." Now we ask, is there really so much difference in this question between Asquith's attitude and von Kühlmann's statements? In characterizing the solution of the Belgian problem as the most essential peace condition, Asquith certainly admits that Alsace-Lorraine is of secondary consideration so far as England is concerned. He himself emphasizes the distinction between those two questions, and this might cause suspicion of himself as trying to sow distrust between France and England."

The Tageblatt quotes from English papers to prove its contention that Belgium's freedom is England's first peace condition and Alsace Lorraine is only of secondary importance to her. The newspaper does not, however, withhold censure on German diplomacy for making such a clear statement regarding Belgium that all further misrepresentation is impossible, if only for the sake of preventing further confusion in Germany on the question.

Peace negotiations, it goes on, are no potato deal such as the East Elbian Junkers are used to, and who think it extremely clever to keep their trump cards under cover. At the same time, it adds, Asquith was obviously wrong in his contention that von Kühlmann remained silent on the question. The German answer to the Pope's note, as well as the speeches of the Foreign Secretary, has proved clearly at least that Germany does not intend to keep Belgium. The newspaper goes on:

"The essence of Asquith's speech is that he wants no peace but wants to fight to the bitter end, because any patchwork, as he calls it flippantly, is undesirable. We ask, What is England fighting for?"

Most of the other papers publish long articles on the same subject, the dominant idea being that Asquith and others in England purposely obscure the situation to their countrymen because they do not want them to see that today they are continuing the war solely for the purpose of satisfying France's lust of revenge and to reconquer Alsace-Lorraine.

In his speech at Liverpool Thursday Mr. Asquith made no such assertion concerning Belgium as the first peace condition, such as the Tageblatt credits to him. The paragraph of Mr. Asquith's speech as cabled to this country read:

"I have formally asked whether Germany was ready to restore Belgium in the only real sense acceptable to the Allies, but I have received no answer, and von Kühlmann, who can be bolstered from the best possible source that the present Cabinet hopes to clear up the political muddle by von Capelle's retirement, asserts that this optimism should not be justified by subsequent events, Michaelis is fully determined to draw the necessary conclusions.

MISQUOTES ASQUITH TO POINT AN ATTACK

Tageblatt Seeks to Prove Belgium, Not Alsace, Is England's First Peace Condition.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Saturday, Oct. 13.—The Berlin, Tageblatt comments editorially at some length on former Premier Asquith's speech of Thursday, wherein it quotes him as saying: "I have repeatedly asked the question whether Germany was ready to consent to Belgium's restitution in its sole and real sense, which is the most essential condition of peace. I have received no answers."

The Tageblatt then continues:

"Herr von Kühlmann has certainly made a statement regarding Belgium that ought to be intelligible to all who can read and hear. He has stated that there was no longer any reason why an agreement should not be reached on the question which is considered the most essential peace condition by Asquith. The only obstruction in the way of peace was France's unacceptable demand for the recession of Alsace-Lorraine.

"Despite his statement that he has never received any answer to his question, Asquith in the same speech seizes upon these utterances of von Kühlmann and calls them a clumsy and transparent attempt to estrange England and France. Now we ask, is there really so much difference in this question between Asquith's attitude and von Kühlmann's statements? In characterizing the solution of the Belgian problem as the most essential peace condition, Asquith certainly admits that Alsace-Lorraine is of secondary consideration so far as England is concerned. # REICHSTAG COALITION UNCHANGED ON PEACE

Erzberger Thinks Recent Events Will Not Retard Parliamentarization Movement.

BERLIN, Oct. 13, (via London, Oct. 14.)—Mathias Erzberger, leader of the Centrist Party in the Reichstag which has demanded greater deference to that body from the Government, told The Associated Press today that the developments of the last week would not interfere with the majority parties' peace attitude as based on the resolution of July 19 or in any way retard the movement for parliamentarization. If anything, he asserted, the latter would be more likely to be accelerated as the result of the Government's predicament growing out of events at Tuesday's session of the Reichstag.

Herr Erzberger asserted that the majority bloc, which is now made up of Socialists, Centrists, and Progressives, continued to present itself in a solid phalanx behind the issues for which it stood, and that it was not improbable it would be augmented by substantial support from the National Liberals in connection with some of the more pertinent issues growing out of the present situation. Even without that support the coalition would have an ample working majority.

The fact that the Centrists and Progressives did not join the Socialists in the vote on the resolution of censure and that the Far Left Party declined to support the measure creating the post of Vice Chancellor did not signify an absence of complete concord among the coalition parties on the major issues, Herr Erzberger declared.

In spite of the situation, which is being described in the Liberal press as being more than a "latent crisis," it is not expected the Reichstag will convene before Dec. 5, the date set at Thursday's adjournment. The Emperor is expected back on Oct. 22 from his trip to the near East, and it is assumed he will confer with the factional leaders of the Reichstag.

Dr. Gustav Streuemann, floor leader of the National Liberals, in a signed statement, accuses Chancellor Michaelis and Admiral von Capelle of failure to gauge correctly the effect of their speeches abroad.

"The form and contents of the Government's declaration and its manner of procedure were positively depressing for friends of the Government and a reaction most naturally will result," Herr Stresemann said. "It would have been a simple matter to strike a sharp blow at the Independent Socialists in connection with their followers. Thanks to the inexpedient procedure, the opposite result was achieved, and even partisan quarters extending far to the Right share this impression."

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 14.—There seems to be a growing movement in South Germany against the non-annexation and non-indemnity basis of the Reichstag peace resolution.

The Bavarian Centrum recently proclaimed opposition to the attitude of the Centrists in the Reichstag, and now Herr von Casselmann, the Liberal First Vice President of the Bavarian House of Deputies, has made a speech rejecting the idea of a renunciatory peace. He favors the idea that a resolution should be adopted not inconsistent with such territorial alterations as are necessary to the security of the German frontiers.

Michaelis on Trip to the East.

market, with the further decline of bonds, a process which, if continued for a considerable period of time, might lead to heavy losses by the investors in such securities and to the consequent detriment of the properties upon which they are issued.

For months past virtually all securities have been steadily diminishing in quoted values. High-grade bonds of unquestioned value have shrunk until they are at the present time almost as low, in many cases, as they were when the New York Stock Exchange was closed in the early days of the European war. Railroad and industrial bonds paying 5 per cent., and in some instances 6, are selling at below par—a situation virtually without precedent, with this single exception, in the history of the issues involved.

"Liberty bond financing" has resulted in crowding the bargain counters with these securities. Banks lending money upon them as collateral have been consistently compelled to reduce the amounts which they could lend borrowers. The Controller's action, it is thought, will go far toward checking this tendency.

NEW SLOGAN IN BOSTON DRIVE.

Better Subscribe Than Pay Indemnities, Says Allan Forbes.

BOSTON, Oct. 14.—"Better pay the United States Government for Liberty Bonds than the German Government a war indemnity," said Allan Forbes, a member of the New England Liberty Loan Committee, in a statement tonight.

A daily average of $36,000,000 for twelve working days must be subscribed, he said, if New England's maximum quota of $500,000,000 was to be reached. For the first two weeks of the campaign only $59,157,000 in subscriptions has been tabulated.

"Although 3,000 miles separate us from the battle front," said Mr. Forbes, "we must not forget that we are in this war, and unless we are on the winning side this apparently safe distance from danger will in no way prevent our enemies from levying a large indemnity on the people of the United States.

"Every one wants peace, but the best way to get it on the right terms is to subscribe generously to the bond issue. In fact, it is a case of subscribe or surrender."

WEATHER BALKED FULL YPRES VICTORY

British, Floundering in Mud, Couldn't Keep Up with Friday's Barrage.

CHECKED AT POELCAPPELLE

Drove the Germans from Brewery Stronghold, but Withdrew Before Counterattacks.

By PHILIP GIBBS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS' HEADQUARTERS IN BELGIUM, Oct. 14.—Today there was a fine spell, though yesterday it was still raining and looked as if it might rain until next March or April. The British soldiers cursed the weather—cursed it with deep and lurid oaths, cursed it wet and cursed it cold, by day and by night, by "duckboards" and mule tracks, by shell holes and swamps, by Ravelbeek and Broenbeek and Lekkerboterbeek—for it was the weather which robbed them of a great victory on Friday, made them suffer the worst miseries of Winter warfare, and held them in the mud when they had set their hearts upon the heights.

It was the mud that beat them. Man after man said that to me on the day of the battle and yesterday. "It was the mud that did us," said an English officer, sitting upon a stretcher and speaking wearily. "We got bogged and couldn't keep up with the barrage. That gave the German machine gunners time to get to work on us. It was their luck."

"Whenever we got near to Fritz he surrendered or ran," said a young Sergeant of an English battalion. "We should have had him beaten with solid ground beneath us, but we all got stuck in a bog, and he came out of his blockhouses and machine-gunned us as we tried to get across the shell holes, all filled like young ponds, and sniped us when we could not drag one leg after the other."

No proof is needed of the valor of the British. It would be idle to speak of it, because for three years they have shown the height of human courage in most damnable and deadly places. But I have known nothing finer in this war than the quality of the talk I heard among the men who fought all Friday, after a night of exposure in wild rain, and lay out all that night in water pools under gunfire and came back again yesterday, wounded.

They were spent, bloody and muddy, cramped and stiff, cold to the marrow bones, and tired after the agony of the long trail back across the barren fields. They did not despair because they had not gained all they had hoped to gain. "We'll get it all right next time," said man after man among them.

That faith, that confidence in their own fighting quality, was not dimmed because on Friday they did not go far. The fire of it, the beauty of it, the simplicity of it, shone in the eyes of these men who were racked by aches and shot through with pain, all befouled by the mud which was in their very pores, and seared by the rememorances of tragic things. Napoleon's Old Guard was not of better stuff than these boys from English farms and factories, Scottish homesteads, and Australian and New Zealand sheep runs.

Watched British Preparations.

I told in my last message how the enemy was ready for a British attack and tried to prevent it before it started by violent shelling over the back areas all through Thursday night, mixing his high explosives with gas shells and trying to catch the troops on the move and the batteries deep in the mud.

It is probable that his airplane observers, flying low through the mists, saw great traffic behind the British lines and thousands of men laying down new tracks and getting forward supplies that could not be hidden from them. The British did not attempt concealment, but worked in the daylight under the eyes of the hostile observers in Passchendaele and on the high ground above Poelcapelle; so that they could see the tide of all this energy when gunners, pioneers, engineers, transport drivers, mule leaders, and the long, varied columns of troops surged up the arteries of the battlefield and choked them about the Piccadilly Circus of crater-land.

It was a supreme defiance of the enemy's power, a challenge louder than any herald's trumpet, announcing the beginning of the battle. The enemy accepted the challenge, although not, as we know, with any gladness of heart. Behind his lines there were disorder and dismay. His organization had been horribly strained by the rapid series of blows which had fallen upon him and by his great losses. His local reserves had been flung together anyhow to meet the pressure the British put upon him. Remnants of battalions were mixed up with other remnants, and the German prisoners are from many units.

Those divisions of his which bore the brunt of this recent fighting, like the 150th, 180th and Twenty-seventh, were horribly mauled and broken, and other divisions coming up to relieve them were caught by the British long-range guns far back from the lines and lost their way in the swamps which are on their side of the battlefield as well as on the British and struggled forward in the darkness and shell fire to positions hard to find by troops new to this ground.

Their high command issued new orders hurriedly and made desperate efforts to strengthen their lines. They put up new apron-wire defenses around their blockhouses, all the machine guns of the supporting troops were sent forward to the front lines to reinforce those already in position in their blockhouses, and they organized the shell holes between the blockhouses and the narrow sheets of concrete along the slopes of the Goudberg Spur and around the strong part of Bellevue and on the road that goes north from Poelcappelle from the brewery building and round by Passchendaele itself, where there are little hills and hummocks.

Brave German Riflemen.

Never before had the enemy massed so many machine guns on his front for a continuous barrage over a wide region as to defend the last spurs of Passchendaele. He had machine guns up trees, as well as on the ground, and scattered his riflemen among the shell craters with orders to shoot until they were killed or captured. It is fair to these men to say that they obeyed orders and fought on Friday with the fiercest courage. It was only here and there that small bodies of German troops, caught in the British barrage and nerve-broken by the long agony of lying in water under a ceaseless shellfire, ran forward as soon as the first brown lines appeared out of the mud and surrendered.

The men behind the machine guns opened fire at the moment of the attack, and it was the noise of this light artillery—the long-drawn swish of its bullets whipping the ground and the devil's tattoo of groups of machine guns hidden up the slopes—that broke upon the British as soon as they began to make their way through the mud.

I have already told how many of them had spent the night. In spite of all the frightfulness of the darkness, cold, weariness, and beastliness of this floundering in mud and hellfire, they went forward into battle with grim, set faces, and attacked the places from which the machine gun fire came in blasts. They attacked many blockhouses and strong points immediately in front of their first objective, on the left above the Ypres-Roulers Railway, and on the way to Marsh Bottom and the rising slope of the Goudberg spur, where, at Bellevue, the enemy's machine guns were thickly clustered.

Below that, by Heine House and Augustus, the troops were trying to work their way forward to the hummock of Crest Farm, barring the way into Passchendaele, and up on the left centre from the crossroads and cemetery of Poelcappelle they assaulted the brewery, which had been captured twice and twice lost, and a row of buildings in heaps of ruins on the Poelcappelle road, which the Germans used as cover for their machine guns.

Many of these outposts were captured in groups. The British worked around them and rushed them in spite of the streams of bullets which pattered around them, so that many fell in the first attempts here and there. The enemy fought fiercely to the last and fell under the British bayonets.

Under Deadly Machine Gun Fire.

At some points on the open ground to the right of Poelcappelle and on the ground below Passchendaele batches of German soldiers made little resistance, but came rushing out of their holes with hands up, terror-stricken. But the machine gun fire never ceased from the higher ground, from the tall masts of branchless trees, and from shell craters beyond the reach of the assailants.

The British barrage traveled ahead of them, and, slow as it was, I saw it creeping up the lower slopes of Passchendaele Ridge for the second objective. On Friday morning the British could not keep pace with it. They were stuck in the swamps at Marsh Bottom, in Lekkerboterbeek, below Poelcapelle, and in the bogs below Crest Farm. They plunged into these bogs fiercely, cursing and struggling to get through them to the enemy, but they could do nothing but shout to their comrades to drag them out. While they struggled German snipers shot at them with cool aim, and the machine gun bullets of the deadly barrage lashed across the shell craters.

The Anzac troops on the right made good and reached the edge of the hummock called Crest Farm. Some of them swarmed up it and fought and killed the garrison there; but byond was another knoll with machine gunners and riflemen, and as the British came up to the top of Crest Farm they were under a close and deadly fire.

They would have held their ground here if they could have been supported on the left, but other Anzac troops were having a stiff time in Marsh Bottom and Bellevue and could not make much headway because of the deadly fire which came down from the spur on which Bellevue is perched.

All this time it was raining hard, making the ground worse than before, and the wet mists deepened, preventing all observation by the aviators working with the guns. Orders were given not to continue the second stage of the attack because the weather was too bad, and the Anzac troops on the right centre withdrew their line something in order not to have an exposed flank.

In the afternoon the enemy's heavy artillery, which had been hesitating and uncertain during the first stages of the attack, began to barrage the ground intensely and continued this fire all night.

Meanwhile close and fierce fighting was all about Poelcappelle. English and Scottish troops entered the ruins of the village in spite of the waves of machine gun bullets which girdled it, drove the Germans out of the brewery buildings for a time, fought their way among the brick heaps and ruined houses, killed many men who held out there and with bayonet and rifle defended themselves against the counterattacks which came down Poelcappelle Road.

It seems to have been as savage and desperate fighting as any in this war, at close quarters, without mercy on either side, one man's life for another's. The British were fierce and reckless. They fought in small parties with or without officers. Ground was gained and lost by yards, men fought like wild beasts across the broken walls and ditches and shell craters which go by the name of Poelcappelle.

It was 5 o'clock in the evening when another strong counterattack by the enemy came down the Poelcappelle road and drove in the British advanced posts. The brewery then became a sort of No Man's Land—an empty shell between the opposing sides. The British were spent after all that night and day in the mud and all this fighting, and now dusk was creeping down, and it was hard to see who was a friend and who was an enemy among the figures that crawled about in the slime.

Sniped British Stretcher-Bearers.

It was the turn of the stretcher-bearers—those men who work behind the fighting line and then come to gather the human wreckage from it. With great heroism they had worked all day under heavy fire and now went on working without a thought of self. They were visible to the enemy, and their Red Cross armlets showed their mission. Away on the slopes of Passchendaele his stretcher-bearers could be seen working, too. One body of 200 men came out, waving a Red Cross flag, with stretchers and ambulances, and were gleaning in those harvest fields, and no British shot went over to them; but on the British side shots from German snipers were still flying, and British stretcher-bearers were hit.

Three of them carrying one stretcher were killed, and an officer with them directing this work near Poelcappelle was fired with a flame of anger.

He seized a Red Cross flag and made his way quickly over the shell holes toward the enemy's position, and, standing there, this officer of the Royal Ambulance Medical Corps shouted out in words which rang above the noise of gunfire and all the war of the battlefield—I do not know the exact words he shouted out in his fine fury, but he cursed men so lost to all humanity that they would shoot the rescuers of the wounded; he cursed them as cruel beasts worse than savages, and he raised his flag and pointed to it, and then to the German stretcher-bearers beyond, and spoke other flaming things.

Perhaps what he said was quite incoherent and wild; perhaps no man who heard him could understand a word of what he said; but there in the shell holes, hidden from him in the mud, were listening men with loaded rifles, and they may have raised their heads to look at that single figure with the flag. They understood what he meant; his accusing figure was a message to them. After that there was no deliberate sniping of stretcher-bearers, though they still had to go through shell-fire.

It was hard for the wounded that night. The lightly wounded made their way back as best they could, and it was a long way back, and a dark way back, over that awful ground. God knows how they managed it—these men with holes in their legs and mangled arms and bloody heads; they do not know. They fell, not once, but many times. They crawled through slime and then fell into deep pits of water with slippery sides, so that they could hardly get out. They lay down in the mud and believed they must die. But some spark of vitality kept alive in them, and the great desire for life goaded them to make another effort to go another hundred yards. They cried out incoherently and heard other cries around them, but were alone in some mud track of these battlefields with great loneliness of soul.

They came back to the field dressing stations, where there was warmth for them, and hot drinks and clean bandages for their wounds, and groups of men who had fought with the same courage and now, in spite of all they had endured, spoke words of love said it was not the enemy that had checked them, but only the mud. Their spirit had not been beaten, for no hardships in the world will ever break that.

A Despairing German Captive.

But while I was talking with these men a figure came and sat on a bench among them, speechless, because no one understood his tongue. It was a wounded German prisoner among all those Englishmen who spoke with fine hopefulness of what they would do next time. He was hopeless. "We are lost," he said. "My division is ended; my friends are all killed."

When asked what his officers thought he made a queer gesture of derision with one finger under his lower lip, as a French gamin flicks his nose when he says, "Zut!"

"They think we are 'Kaput,' too; they only look to the end of the war."

"And when do they think that will come?" he was asked.

"God willing, before the year ends."

ONLY ARTILLERY DUELS IN FLANDERS

Infantry Rested Sunday, but British Won Skirmishes on Saturday Night.

TOOK 943 PRISONERS FRIDAY

Successful in Trench Raids Near Lens and Arras—French in Belgium Capture German Patrols.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—The infantry on both the British and German sides rested in Flanders today, but there was considerable artillery activity, according to the official report from Field Marshal Haig tonight. The British last night repulsed German reconnoitring detachments north of Poelcappelle and west of Becelaere.

The text of the night report reads:

Eastern county troops raided the enemy's trenches in the afternoon southeast of Monchy-le-Preux (southeast of Arras) and captured several prisoners.

On the battlefront there has been considerable activity today on the part of both artilleries, but no infantry action. The total number of prisoners captured by us Friday is now ascertained to be 943, including forty-one officers.

Owing to the weather, very little flying was done Saturday. In the fine intervals a certain amount of artillery and photographic work was accomplished, and the enemy's new positions were reconnoitred. One of our patrols encountered an enemy formation of double the number of machines, and a determined fight ensued, from which four of our airplanes failed to return. Owing to the close nature of the fighting the number of hostile machines accounted for could not be determined by our pilots. Other allied machines, which arrived too late to share in the fight, saw from a distance several machines falling out of control.

Following is the afternoon statement:

The enemy's artillery was active during the night northeast of Ypres. Hostile reconnoitering parties were repulsed west of Becelaere and north of Poelcappelle.

We carried out a successful raid in the neighborhood of Hulluch.

French Capture German Patrols.

PARIS, Oct. 14.—French scouting parties last night attacked the German patrols along the new French battlefront in Belgium and took thirty prisoners. On the Aisne front the artillery duel reached a lively pitch at various points, according to today's War Office statement.

The text of the afternoon announcement reads:

In the course of the night our reconnoitring parties attacked enemy patrols on our new front in Belgium, and brought back about thirty prisoners, including one officer.

On the Aisne front the artillery duel was lively at times, notably in the region of the Panthéon, and on the Plateaus of Vauclerc and Californie.

On the rest of the front there was intermittent cannonading.

Gun Duels on the Aisne Front.

The official report issued by the War Office tonight says:

Very spirited artillery activity was maintained by both sides along the Aisne front, particularly in the region of the plateau between Ailles and Craonne, as well as on the right bank of the Meuse. There was no infantry action.

In the Vosges an enemy surprise attack against our small posts south of Hartmanns-weilerkopf failed. The day was calm everywhere else.

HAVRE, Oct. 13 (Delayed.).—An official statement issued this evening by the Belgian War Office says:

"On the day of Oct. 12 our artillery directed a destructive fire on the German works at Dixmude and to the south of that town.

"To-day the enemy artillery was very active. German batteries bombarded our trenches, principally in the region of Ramscapelle. We again took under our fire enemy works near Dixmude and Woumen.

"On the morning of Oct. 12 one of our aviators, while flying at a height of 5,000 or 6,000 meters over Staden, attacked an Albatross belonging to a German squadron. The enemy machine was disabled and fell. Today an enemy machine was engaged in battle near Terwaete and defeated by one of our aviators, who then went in pursuit of another battleplane in the direction of Dunkirk.

Berlin Reports French Repulsed.

BERLIN, Oct. 14, (British Admiralty Per Wireless Press.)—Strong British and French reconnoitring detachments which advanced yesterday against the German positions at some points on the Belgian front were repulsed, says today's War Office statement.

French troops yesterday delivered five strong counterattacks against the trenches captured by the Germans north of Vauclerc Mill, on the Aisne front. All the attacks failed, the statement adds, under heavy losses. The text of the statement reads:

Army group of Prince Rupprecht—On the battlefield of Flanders the drumfire between the Rivers Lys and Deule was not followed yesterday morning by attacks.

Throughout the day firing activity on the coast and from Houthulst Wood as far as Gheluvelt was increasingly lively, notably in the evening. Strong French and English reconnoitring detachments advanced at some points against our lines. They were repulsed.

In the Artois and north of St. Quentin there was a temporary revival of the reciprocal firing in connection with reconnoitring engagements.

Army Group of the German Crown Prince—On the western portion of the Chemins des Dames and on the Soissons road there was a strong artillery duel at times.

The French yesterday launched five strong counterattacks against the trenches taken by us north of Vauclerc Mill. All were fruitless and failed under heavy losses.

The supplementary statement issued by the War Office tonight says:

There was an artillery duel of varying intensity in Flanders and northeast of Soissons.

TO TRY OFFICERS GIVING TROOP NEWS

troops were being sent across the Atlantic. Since that time the War Department and the Committee on Public Information have emphasized that the Government deprecated publication concerning the movements of any American expeditionary force until the department announced the fact officially.

Why News Is Kept Secret.

According to the explanation offered by an official tonight, the Government's objection to the publication of the news that certain American troops had reached France was mainly that if this news came into the possession of the Germans U-boats might be sent out in the hope of being able to attack transports that had lagged behind.

Another objection that embodies a general policy of the War Department is that the publication of information that more troops had reached France would suggest to the Germans that troops were being sent constantly from this country to Europe. The department was glad to announce the safe arrival of the first expeditionary force for its psychological effect upon both the Germans and the allied nations.

It would be notice to the Germans, the department pointed out, that the United States was to take an active military part in the war, and would, by the same token, cheer the people of the Entente governments. But the department contended that as a matter of military policy it would be unwise to announce further movements of American troops across the Atlantic.

The belief in the soundness of this position is so strong among department officials, from Secretary Baker down, that the action of the two National Guard officers is looked upon as a very serious offense.

How the War Department learned that the Lieutenant Colonel of a Western regiment had cabled his Governor of the regiment's arrival in France was not ascertained tonight. While the Lieutenant Colonel's course is viewed with concern officials showed that they regarded the action of the Colonel of the New England regiment in asking that publicity be given to the information he conveyed to the Governor as deserving of drastic treatment. The facts will be cabled to General Pershing when the War Department's investigation has been completed.

REPULSE TURKS' ATTACK.

Russians Throw Back a Battalion Near Erzingan.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 14. (British Admiralty per Wireless Press.)—Turks, about a battalion strong, attacked the Russian positions southwest of Erzingan, in Turkish Armenia, on Thursday. The Russian War Office says that the Turks were repulsed by rifle fire and hand grenades in front of the Russian trenches. The statement reads:

Caucasian Front: On Thursday in the direction of Kemak, in the region twenty-five versts southwest of Erzingan, Turks, about a battalion strong, launched an attack. Despite the fire of our advanced troops the attackers approached close to our trenches, but were repelled and dispersed by our fire and hand grenades.

In the Merivon Valley, southwest of Zeribar Lake, there were skirmishes between our advanced detachments and enemy scouting parties.

Black Sea: Our torpedo boats destroyed eleven laden schooners near the Anatolian shores. Twenty prisoners were taken.

DISORDERS GROWING AMONG THE PEASANTS

Russian Masses Discouraged by Results of New Order—Forces of Reaction Busy.

By HAROLD WILLIAMS.

Copyright, 1917, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Thursday, Oct. 11.—The new Government has published its program and gone to work. The Provisional Council or ante-Parliament is to meet Oct. 19. The Bolsheviks of the Petrograd soviet have openly declared war on the Government, and are mobilizing their forces and preparing for the struggle. Other Socialist groups are hesitating and debating, troubled and depressed by a sense of disunion and irresolution.

Two mopths remain until the meeting of the constituent assembly, and this will be the most difficult of all. The Bolsheviks think they are gaining the upper hand among the masses. This is true and untrue. It is true so far as meetings, votes, and resolutions are concerned. It is untrue if it means that the great masses of the people sympathize with the Bolsheviks or are prepared to support them actively. The prevailing feeling is one of apathy, weariness, disillusionment.

In the workmen's committees the Bolsheviks are strong, but most of the workmen have ceased to attend the meetings. In the villages the peasants ignore the elections and express disgust for all committees and have gone back to the old system of having simply an elder and a clerk.

The masses of the people have lost faith in the new order. This does not mean as yet that they desire the restoration of the old régime, but they are baffled, depressed, and disappointed. They see no guiding hand. They have lost faith in extravagant promises. They cannot understand the perpetual strife of parties. They are accustomed to authority and they see no authority. They have been promised a new heaven and a new earth and they see only increasing disorder.

During the last few weeks agrarian disorders have become serious. Whereas earlier the peasants quietly appropriated for their own use the land of neighboring proprietors, they now pillage and plunder, kill valuable livestock, burn corn in the proprietors' barns, and wreck houses and furniture.

The wave of agrarian disorders is spreading from the Central Governments down to the Volga, and the released convicts and undisciplined soldiery are taking a prominent part in the riots. Restraining influences have been removed. The peasants, seeing no evidence of system or order, seeing no authority to guide or restrain, consider that they may as well take advantage of the situation. The wilder spirits among them are breaking loose, and the more sober peasants, who still form a majority, are bereft of force or argument to oppose them.

The disorders are serious. They are symptomatic of a very grave state of affairs, but their possible consequences must not be exaggerated. Russia is a very big country, and the proportion of disorder is still comparatively small. The marvel is, considering the complete absence of real and effective authority, that the country is as quiet as it is.

Tashkent, the capital of Turkestan, has been cut off from the rest of Russia for ten days by a local mutiny. Now that the military force has arrived and the veil is lifted it appears that there has not been any wholesale destruction of life or property.

It would be easy to fill a newspaper with a list of the cruel robberies and brutal murders that take place daily in various parts of Russia. Yet these are far less characteristic of the situation than the gloomy patience and slow working passive instinct for self-preservation that now constitute the only guarantee of security in the country. But for the next two months the Government will have an extremely difficult task in asserting its authority and checking the spread of those forces of disorder which threaten to reduce the patience of the people to despair and foster all the tendencies to reaction.

of Oesel Island one of our aviators brought down an enemy airplane.

The Minister of Marine, in a supplementary communication issued this evening, says:

The Russian losses in the two days' bombardment of the Islands of Oesel and Dago were trifling. Our crews gave proof of their courage, initiative, and self-denial.

Petrograd Takes News Calmly.

The people of Petrograd received the news of the occupation calmly. The newspapers publish interviews with some Cabinet Ministers and others, who agree that while the operation seriously affects Russia's strategic position, it does not constitute an immediate menace to the Russian capital.

Commenting on the occupation of Oesel, the Boerse Gazette says:

"On the whole, we must accept as a fact that we have let this whole group of islands fall into the hands of the enemy, and that the enemy will be full master of the Finnish Gulf.

"The Cabinet consulted Premier Kerensky by telephone, asking permission to issue a proclamation, calling on the Petrograd citizens to forget politics and to unite to serve the endangered capital.

"Premier Kerensky's illness, which yesterday kept him in bed, was today pronounced by his physicians to be influenza. The doctor says the Premier is in no danger."

Berlin's Report of Occupation.

BERLIN, Oct. 14, (British Admiralty per Wireless Press.)—German troops which landed on the Russian island of Oesel on Friday quickly broke the resistance of the Russian garrison, the German General Staff announced today, and are advancing toward the southeastern coast. Arensburg, the capital of the island, and Serel, on the Svorb Peninsula, are reported in flames. The statement says:

Eastern Theatre.—After well devised preparation a combined enterprise was commenced in which our army and navy excellently co-operated against the strongly fortified Russian island of Oesel, which is situated at the head of the Bay of Riga.

After extensive mine clearing operations in the coastal waters the fortifications on the peninsula of Sworb, near Kidikond, at the Bay of Tagga, and at Sollesund were taken under our fire on Friday. After the Russian batteries had been overcome troops were landed.

In this operation, as in convoying the transport fleet through the Russian minefields, our naval forces participating excellently proved their spirit of enterprise and the capacity of our navy.

This portion of the operation was entirely successful and was carried through without any loss of ships.

The troops landed in Tagga Bay on the northwest coast of the island, quickly breaking the resistance of the Russians in their vigorous advance. They are now advancing further toward the southeast.

Serel, on the southern point of the peninsula of Svorb, and Arensberg, the capital of Oesel, are in flames.

The supplementary statement, issued tonight, says:

The operations on Oesel Island are progressing in accordance with our plans.

The "abominable crime of the battleship Petropavlovsk," to which Kerensky referred in his appeal followed a misunderstanding that arose on the battleship from the action of the General Assembly of the Democratic Bodies on calling upon officers of the army and navy in Finland to sign a pledge of fidelity to the Russian Provisional Government. Four officers, who refused to sign the pledge, were shot at Helsingfors last month by members of the crew. The action of the men on the Petropavlovsk was condemned later by the Helsingfors Revolutionary Committee and all the sailors who participated in the mutiny were arrested.

UPROOTING RADICAL IDEAS.

Task of Teaching Russian Soldiers Big One, Says Mme. Breshkovsky.

BOSTON, Oct. 14.—Education of Russian soldiers at the front in the meaning of liberty and democracy is occupying the attention of Russian leaders, according to a letter from Catherine Breshkovsky, the "Grandmother of the Revolution," to Alice Stone Blackwell of this city. Many of the soldiers, she says, are "mad with the sole idea of liberty," while others of the uneducated young people imagine that the war must be abandoned immediately now that the monarchy is overthrown, because the people were not consulted about beginning it.

"Some ignorant and some bad persons," she writes, "inspired and enforced these ideas among the recruits, and it took time and effort before the soldiers were convinced that they ought to begin again to do their duty. It is much better now.

"Thank Providence our peasants, fathers and husbands, are reasonable enough to wait and maintain order in their villages. But the young workmen and young soldiers are too inexperienced and ignorant to be mindful and patient. They imagine that all the old wrongs can be undone in a few days and, therefore, they demand new conditions of life that cannot be created in a few months and with a war on our shoulders.

"Happily, we have now a board of Ministers very noble in all senses. Most of them are old acquaintances of mine. All the country is working for the men at the front."

Mme. Breshkovsky inclosed with the letter a photograph of herself, surrounded by flowers, and added:

"The young comrades cherish the grandmother and wish to have her surrounded with flowers. The old woman is always ready to do the will of her children. Sometimes she feels like a fool, but never mind.

"I am to install in many places printing presses to multiply pamphlets and newspapers for the peasants, soldiers, and workmen. I collect the money and choose the most convenient places."

CORRIGAN DEBATES ISSUE WITH RANSOM

Candidates for District Attorney Heckled by Audience at Free Synagogue Forum.

FRIENDS ROAR APPROVAL

Each Accuses the Other of Unfitness and of Seeking Nomination Improperly.

A large crowd that roared its anger or its approval according to the mood of the moment, handclapping, vehement denunciations of the speakers from the audience, charges, countercharges, and a threat by the chairman of the meeting to eject the next person who attempted to start a riot, were some features of the debate at the Free Synagogue Forum last night between William L. Ransom, Fusion candidate for District Attorney, and Magistrate Joseph E. Corrigan, who is making an independent race for the same office. District Attorney Swann had been invited to participate, but had declined because of pressure of other business.

The debate, which had been proposed by Mr. Ransom, was intended to bring into comparison the views of the rival candidates and their personal fitness for the office. Mr. Ransom, who opened the debate, did not limit himself to Magistrate Corrigan's utterances since entering the race, but, going back to the days of the late Mayor Gaynor, accused Magistrate Corrigan of having assailed the then Mayor because "Foley could not get from Gaynor the protection for the peculiar enterprises which were then under Mr. Foley's supervision."

Mr. Ransom, who is very tall, shook his finger at Magistrate Corrigan while he demanded:

"And is this not a fact that those charges, those letters which you gave out beginning in the end of March, 1911, when you were sitting in the Men's Night Court, charging Gaynor with the responsibility for the increase in vice and crime, were framed by yourself in consultation with Tom Foley in Tom Foley's back room, and I ask you if you do not know of the existence in this city today of evidence which proves you wrote the attack which Foley wanted you to make?"

There was a great roar of approval mixed with angry shouts from the audience, and vigorous negative shakes of the head from Magistrate Corrigan, who later demanded with equal vehemence if it were not true that at a recent meeting of the County Republican Committee Mr. Ransom had promised, in case he was elected, to give 95 per cent. of the patronage of the office to Republicans.

"I was told by a man who was at the meeting that he did," asserted Magistrate Corrigan with a smile.

"Name the man!" yelled a man in the audience, the while Mr. Ransom shook his head angrily and said, "It is not true." "That is not fair," persisted the man in the audience at the top of his voice. "Name the man! Name the man!"

Walter S. Heilborn, Chairman of the meeting and of the Free Synagogue Forum, pounded vigorously on the desk in an effort to quell the tumult created by the interruption, and then announced:

"The next man who is guilty of interrupting a speaker will be ejected."

Nevertheless, there were scores of such interruptions later, and there was still greater confusion and turmoil when, according to the custom of the forum, persons in the audience were permitted to put questions to the speakers. Magistrate Corrigan seemed to have slightly the worse of the heckling, and was kept busy answering: "What did you say to Murphy when you tried to get the Tammany nomination for District Attorney?" "What did you say to Governor Whitman when you went to Albany on a similar mission?" "Why did you quit Tammany and then try to get a Tammany nomination?" &c.

"Believe me, if the women ever do get the vote," shrieked one woman who finally won recognition from the Chairman in the midst of the tumult, "no Tammany candidate will ever get my vote."

"What I want to know," thundered a large man in the audience, "is why Judge Ransom criticises Magistrate Corrigan for attacking Gaynor, when Mayor Mitchel said Gaynor was 'slippery,' and why——"

Whack! went Mr. Heilborn's gavel. "That question is not pertinent to this debate," he ruled.

"Yes it is! Yes it is!" retorted the large man.

"Shut up! Boo!" yelled a half-hundred men and women in the audience.

Under the rules each candidate had thirty minutes to state his case. Mr. Ransom opened by asserting that, so far as he was concerned, he was willing to believe everything District Attorney Swann and Magistrate Corrigan said of each other.

"There is an old adage, which is a true one, that when rogues fall out the truth comes out," said Mr. Ransom, "and I think that is very applicable to this campaign. But I say here that if what Judge Corrigan says about Mr. Swann is not true, he is unfit to stand on this platform, and should be driven not only out of the campaign but off the bench, and if what Judge Swann, out of the richness of his knowledge and personal experience, says about Corrigan is not true, then Mr. Swann is unworthy of the nomination of a great party and ought himself be driven from public life, as I think he shortly will be.

"And so if either of my Tammany opponents does not tell the truth about the other, in view of the nature of his language, he is unfit to hold public office. And if they both tell the truth about each other, then both of them are unfit for office. So you can take it either way."

Mr. Ransom said that, although Magistrate Corrigan talked about "taking the District Attorney's office out of politics," Corrigan had never taken anything out of politics in his life.

"Has he taken his court out of politics?" demanded Mr. Ransom. "Has he taken himself out of politics? Was his office out of politics when he sat in Foley's back room and wrote dirty attacks upon Gaynor? Is he doing it now, when he sits on the bench, runs for office, sends for the men who aid Murphy, and sends out promiscuously letters headed 'City of New York, the City Magistrate's Court,' and talks about taking a judicial office out of politics?"

Mr. Ransom concluded by saying that he would take the District Attorney's office out of politics, as well as politics out of the District Attorney's office, and he read a letter he had received from Oscar S. Straus, Chairman of the Public Service Commission, testifying to his fairness and ability as counsel for the commission.

Magistrate Corrigan, when his turn came, offered a letter he had received from Colonel Roosevelt to counteract the effect of the Straus letter. This letter had been written at Sagamore Hill on Aug. 15 last, and expressed surprise that "Mr. Childs (Chairman of the Fusion Committee) and his associates felt that they had to accept a Republican in the place" of District Attorney. Colonel Roosevelt also had commented on Magistrate Corrigan's great ability and his promising future.

"Mr. Ransom was nominated after the Republican bosses had insisted that the office, and the patronage of the office, be given to them," asserted Magistrate Corrigan. "His candidacy was not announced by the Fusion Committee. He himself announced it as he left that room in the St. Regis Hotel in which he had been in secret conference with the Overlord or the Superboss of the Republican machine of this county, the Governor of the State."

Corrigan, after charging Ransom with having pledged 95 per cent. of the patronage of the District Attorney's office to the Republicans, assailed Ransom's record as a City Judge, asserting that he had distributed most of the references of that office among Republicans. This evoked another indignant outburst from Mr. Ransom's friends, and a formal denial from the Fusion candidate when he closed the debate. Mr. Corrigan also said that Mr. Ransom, being a Republican, could not be expected, in case he were elected, to prosecute those who were responsible for the frauds in the last Republican primary. He concluded by asking Mr. Ransom several questions, among them if he would promise to put Sam Koenig, the Republican boss, out of business. He also denied Mr. Ransom's references to Mayor Gaynor.

Then the heckling started, and the next half hour was put in by both candidates answering questions put to them by persons in the audience.

MAYOR LINKS HYLAN AND JERRY O'LEARY

Mitchel Tells Quakers Forces of Disloyalty Are All on the Tammany Side.

DEFENDS PART-TIME PLAN

Denounces Teachers Who Are Trying to Wreck System Because It Entails Extra Work.

Mayor Mitchel spoke last night at the Friends' Meeting House, 144 East Twentieth Street, on the issues of the campaign and laid stress on the work of the Police, Corrections and Charities Departments. He made reference to the candidacies of Morris Hillquit and William M. Bennett, and said: "But, ladies and gentlemen, mark this well, there is an alignment between the forces of Murphy and of Hearst and of Cohalan and of O'Leary, and of all the disloyal crew, of all the plunderbund, as Mr. Hearst aptly termed them in past years, and the forces of a clean and a serviceable government.

"If the people of New York desire a serviceable government, not inspired by Murphy or Hearst, the only opportunity that is left is by support of the administration that has served them for four years and that represents in this contest the only ticket that has a prospect of success against Mr. Murphy's coalition. I know that the great majority in the rank and file of every party and of every group in the city of New York are loyal and patriotic citizens of the United States. I do not claim that we have any monopoly of patriotism, but I do claim and submit that you will find on the other side and chiefly grouped behind the candidacy of Mr. Hylan in partnership with Hearst, Cohalan and O'Leary, every seditious, every traitorous, every disloyal element to be found in the city. You will not find any of the seditious or any of the enemy sympathizers voting for me in this election."

After the meeting questions were put to the Mayor from the audience. The first one was why he favored the Gary system.

"The Gary system does not exist in the City of New York," said the Mayor. "The experiment which has been undertaken and partially installed is an adaptation of certain elements in the Gary plan." He said that the city did not have the money to give full time seats to the 115,000 school children who lacked them, and that the Gary plan afforded a method by which 100,000 of these children, at only one-fourth the cost which would have been necessary otherwise, got full time instruction.

The Mayor outlined and praised the study and play features of the Gary plan, declaring that, no matter how good a candidate's intentions might be, the city did not have the funds to provide sufficient playgrounds for children aside from the schools, and declared that the difficulties in applying the Gary system here had been due "sometimes to ineffective administration at the headquarters of the Board of Education, but a great deal of it to deliberate attempts to wreck this system from inside of the school system. There is not any group in New York that is better treated than the school teachers, and it seems to me that it ill becomes the teaching staff to try to wreck an experiment that means so much in the future lives and the future development of children because that experiment requires an hour or so more work on the part of the teaching staff every day."

In response to another question, the Mayor explained the increase in the budget as due principally to the direct State tax, additional appropriations for the Board of Education, war prices, and the pay-as-you-go plan.

Alfred Busselle, the chairman of the meeting, put two questions, which he said had been brought forward as "oral issues" of the campaign. The first one was: "Do you favor the present high assessment of real estate which in thousands of cases is much greater than the selling price of the property?" To this the Mayor answered: "The relief for the situation does not lie in reducing the assessments except where they are above market value—where they ought to be reduced of course—because if assessments throughout the city are arbitrarily reduced it means that the rate of taxation will go up, and what is the differences? The relief lies in a reorganization of our tax system that will equalize and distribute the burden. I have been in favor of that for years, but nothing has been done in the Legislature."

The second was: "What will be your attitude toward labor agitators who incite and produce strikes among the employes of our street and subway lines, entailing enormous outlay upon the city for extra patrolmen and great hardship and discomfort to citizens?"

"Just what it was when the strikes occurred last year," replied the Mayor.

Question—"Do you favor making orders issued by the Fire Department and Building Department retroactive so as to include fireproof buildings erected during the last ten years, compelling owners to expend thousands of dollars in making changes that apparently benefit no one?"

Answer—"That is a hypothetical question. Generally I do not favor legislation which is designed to lay undue and unnecessary burdens upon the owners of property, but where changes in construction can be demonstrated to be essential to the protection of life and person or of public health I should be in favor of that legislation."

Question.—"If elected Mayor what will be your attitude toward expensive projects already suggested, namely a sunken garden in Central Park and an $11,000,000 courthouse?"

Answer.—"I do not think we can handle any expensive and unnecessary undertakings during the next four years. As to the sunken garden, I do not know enough about the plan yet to express any opinion."

Another question dealt with the primary frauds. "I hope," said the Mayor, "that every man connected with the primary frauds will be indicted, convicted and sent to jail. I don't know what it was that induced any of the people involved to return a wrong count, unless it was the force of habit."

MITCHEL WANTS HYLAN TO FIGHT IN THE OPEN

Fusionists Will Make Every Effort to Force Tammany's Candidate to Answer the Mayor.

Emory R. Buckner, Chairman of the Fusion Mitchel Campaign Committee, said yesterday that every attempt would be made by Mayor Mitchel and his campaign managers throughout the rest of the campaign to force Judge Hylan, the Tammany Mayoralty candidate, into the open and have him answer the questions put to him by Mayor Mitchel early in the campaign.

"Will some one page the Hiding Hylan?" asked Mr. Buckner at the Fusion Headquarters in the Manhattan Hotel. "The Mayor wants to hear him. He wants the Mayor's job, and yet he refuses to meet the Mayor and voters face to face and tell why he should have the job and why the Mayor should not. He is afraid to meet the Mayor and ask and answer questions. He is afraid to say if he believes Hearst to be a patriotic citizen. He is afraid to say if he wants or does not want Bruckner elected.

"He is afraid to try to prove his senseless and baseless slanders. He is afraid to meet the Mayor face to face and discuss the Police Department, the Charities Department, the Department of Correction, the work-study-play schools, and all other departments. He is afraid because he knows little about them; he cannot prove his libels; he would be shown up. If he does not like a crowd, the Mayor will meet him with newspaper men any time at any place—at Good Ground, or at Tammany Hall, or at Hearst's editorial rooms, or at the Warheit office, or at any of the other places where his speeches are 'canned.' The Mayor will answer all questions Hylan asks, and Hylan must answer all questions the Mayor asks. The Mayor will pursue him relentlessly until he drags him out into the open or else Hylan will be exposed as a dummy director of the Murphy-Hearst combination.

"So far as Bennett and Hillquit are concerned, the Mayor asks their co-operation in dragging Hylan's furtive figure into the light. If either Bennett or Hillquit will join this chase and will produce Hylan upon a platform with Mayor Mitchel, the Mayor will gladly meet them also. He is ready for all comers if only Hylan is in the party.

"He will not furnish a cloud of dust in which Hylan can still further hide by debating with Bennett or Hillquit, until Hylan has been dragged into the open and exposed. If they will help accomplish this, they will render the public a great service."

William M. Bennett also continued his attacks yesterday upon the Tammany candidate. He said:

"Mr. Hylan has run away from a debate with Mr. Mitchel and Mr. Mitchel has precipitately fled from the debate with me. I presume that Mr. Hylan will also decline my challenge.

"I again ask Mr. Hylan whether he will run on the same ticket with Mr. Riegelman, who was nominated for Borough President by frauds at the Democratic primary, or will he demand that these frauds be redressed and the rightful nominee be put on the ballot and the Democratic inspectors be punished.

"I also ask whether Mr. Hylan condones the frauds at the Democratic primary in Manhattan, whereby Thomas E. Rush was deprived of thousands of votes.

"Speak up, Mr. Hylan, and do it quickly. A candidate who condones dishonesty at the ballot box will permit dishonesty in the administration of government. Do you stand for honesty or dishonesty?"

Mayor Mitchel will speak at four meetings today and tonight. At noon he will address the Commercial Travelers and Business Men's Mitchel League at its headquarters, 557 Broadway. Tonight he will speak at the Park View Palace, 5 West 110th Street; at the opening of the City Democracy Club House of the Eighteenth Assembly District, 235 West 109th Street, and at the opening of a Mitchel-Fusion headquarters, at 68 West 125th Street. Fire Commissioner Adamson, candidate for President of the Board of Aldermen, will speak at the Park View Palace meeting and at the 109th Street club house. Register John J. Hopper will speak at the 125th Street meeting.

REPUDIATES O'LEARY.

Grover A. Whalen Denies Sympathy with Irish Agitator's Views.

Grover A. Whalen, brother-in-law of Jeremiah O'Leary, and a cousin of Daniel F. Cohalan, who, it was disclosed yesterday, is in charge of the Business Men's League, the organization which was instrumental in bringing about the nomination of Judge John F. Hylan, the Tammany Mayoralty candidate, and at the headquarters of which at 50 East Forty-second Street Judge Hylan has his personal political office, issued this statement yesterday:

"I have always been a Democrat, as was my father, the late Michael H. Whalen. I am not a member of any Irish organization or any society in which Mr. O'Leary is active, nor have I the slightest connection with the movement in which he is engaged. Every one who knows us is aware that our political views are diametrically opposed. He voted for Hughes last year. I voted for Wilson.

"It is true that Mr. O'Leary married my sister, and I resent, and I believe all decent people will resent, the attempt to create a political situation out of family relationship. If there is any good reason for going into my family history and relationship, would it not be just to consider my brother, as well as my brother-in-law? Lieutenant H. Stephenson Whalen of the Sixty-ninth Regiment died while in the active service of his country at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, on July 26, 1916. My father, Captain Michael H. Whalen, was a veteran of the civil war, and for thirty years was Commander of Peter Cooper Post No. 313, G. A. R."

HOPKINS AIDS HILLQUIT.

Treasurer of Progressive Party Will Support Socialist Candidate.

J. A. H. Hopkins, who succeeded George W. Perkins as Treasurer of the Progressive Party and led one wing of that party in the support of President Wilson last year, has sent a letter to Morris Hillquit, Socialist candidate for Mayor, offering aid and support of his candidacy.

"I shall esteem it an honor to stand shoulder to shoulder with you in this battle for constitutional liberty, humane welfare, and the preservation of our democratic ideals," wrote Mr. Hopkins.

The Irish Progressive League was organized yesterday to bring together the progressive Irish vote for Mr. Hillquit. A statement to Irish voters says:

"This year the Socialist Party is the only party through which radicals, independents and all friends of freedom can protest against local and national political conditions."

Officers of the Irish Progressive League are: Chairman, Emmett O'Reilly; Secretary, Patrick J. Quinlan; Treasurer, Nora Connolly, daughter of James Connolly, who was killed in the Irish Revolution. Among those interested in the league are John Thornton, former President of the Gaelic League, and Peter Golden.

WHITMAN PROMISES SUPPORT TO MAYOR

decent and honest city government and has asked Republicans to vote for my re-election. He is right in saying that the choice lies between Mr. Murphy's system of organized public plunder and public prostitution and the present city administration.

"I regret that the Governor has expressed the opinion that there is no Hohenzollern issue in the campaign. If he were acquainted with all the facts I am confident he would feel otherwise.

"The Governor's statement will not deter a single one of the disloyal from voting for Mr. Hylan. They have all made up their minds to do so.

"The issue of loyalty and disloyalty, of Americanism and Hohenzollernism, is not of my making. It was made by those who attacked and opposed me because of my support of President Wilson and the National Government in this war, because of my work and speeches for American preparedness, and because of my frank denunciation of the German militaristic autocracy which we fight.

"Not all patriotic citizens are on my side. I do not claim a monopoly of patriotism. Many patriotic citizens will be deluded into voting for Mr. Hylan. One thing is clear, however—none of the disloyal will vote for me. All of them will be found with Hearst, Cohalan, and O'Leary, behind the candidacy of Mr. Hylan. This is what makes the loyalty issue. The disloyal, better than any one else, know whom they hate, whom they fear and whom they oppose."

Bennett's Views on the Situation.

William M. Bennett, in commenting on Governor Whitman's statement, said: "Governor Whitman hits Mr. Mitchel over the head with a club in his right hand and wipes the blood away with the left hand. There is no comfort in this statement of Governor Whitman for Mr. Mitchel. The sole effect of this statement is to add one vote to the list of Mr. Mitchel's rapidly diminishing supporters. The primary demonstrated that Mr. Mitchel has everything with him except the voters, and even the people he had with him then will have left him by Nov. 6.

"I notice that the Governor offered me the use of the Republican Party machinery in Manhattan. In view of the fact that it is this same machinery that counted me out at the primary, I am not likely to give it a second chance to do the same thing to me on election day. I expect to have some ten to twenty volunteer workers of my own in every election district and the Governor and Mayor Mitchel may rest assured that there will be no crooked work this time.

"Tammany Hall will be kept out of City Hall, but not by Mayor Mitchel. I have been nominated as the result of a direct appeal to the voters, and I expect to be elected Mayor on Nov. 6 by an overwhelming majority in every borough."

Representative Thomas F. Smith, Secretary of Tammany Hall, made this comment:

"To be sure, the Governor knows Tammany. If I mistake not, his Excellency had the distinction of being Tammany's candidate for District Attorney in 1913 and got the largest majority ever given a man on the Tammany ticket. Certain it is that the Governor knows Tammany. He was a very efficient District Attorney and can testify that, notwithstanding the constant abuse of Tammany and the charges made against it, he was never able during his two terms to bring to the door of the organization or to any Tammany man evidence of any official peculation or wrongdoing.

"I might add that his predecessor, Mr. Jerome, could say the same thing. Governor Whitman is familiar with Republican-Fusion campaign methods, the holding aloft of the Tammany bugbear and all the other political foolery. The Governor knows Tammany. He knows its loyalty and regularity. No one knows better than he that Tammany would dissolve tomorrow rather than repudiate a candidate chosen by the Democratic voters at a primary election.

"There is no truth in the charge that Tammany is corrupt. It is made only in campaigns. The falsity of the accusation is shown by the fact that the people of the city invariably turn again to a Democratic candidate, and that no 'reform' Mayor ever succeeded himself."

The City Has Caught Up With Itself

After ten years of inactivity it is time to sit up and take notice. Population has continued to increase steadily at the rate of about 150,000 a year; business especially since 1914 has expanded to unprecedented figures. Meanwhile building has been much curtailed and there has been so little buying of land that prices have remained about stationary.

The normal demand for accommodation for the new people who have joined us and their new business is bound to bring activity to the real estate market in the near future. The first to wake up to the new situation will be the ones to pick up the bargains and to reap the biggest increases of price when the real buying begins.

SEE FUSION VICTORY IN BIG REGISTRATION

Heavy Independent Vote Indicated by Figures, Mitchel Leaders Declare.

REVISED TOTAL 696,809

Mayor to Make Strong Campaign in Brooklyn, Attacking the Tammany Candidate.

Revised figures of last week's registration in all boroughs of the city show that the registration this year was the largest in the history of the city, if the absent soldier vote is included. The total for the city was 696,809. This exceeded by 29,186 the registration of 1913, the last Mayoralty year, while it was only 29,186 behind the figures of 1916, which was a Presidential year, when registration is unusually high. Taking into account the votes of from 60,000 to 70,000 citizens of the city who are now in the draft army, the National Guard, or the Regular Army, either in this country or abroad, the total vote would have far exceeded even that of last year.

The total registration on Saturday, as well as for the six days last week, in all the boroughs, was as follows:

| Boroughs. | Sixth Day. | Six Days. |
|---|---|---|
| Manhattan | 86,803 | 255,291 |
| The Bronx | 54,860 | 99,462 |
| Brooklyn | 91,194 | 254,915 |
| Queens | 29,795 | 70,894 |
| Richmond | 7,429 | 16,417 |
| Total | 250,086 | 696,809 |

The first returns indicated that Brooklyn, which produced an enormous registration, had topped Manhattan by a few hundred. The gain was finally wiped out, however, when a few missing election districts in Manhattan were heard from.

While leaders of all parties expressed satisfaction at the big showing and asserted that it indicated victory for their candidates in the November election, the Fusion-Mitchel forces were especially jubilant. They said it indicated that the voters of the city were aroused to the importance of the campaign, and that it showed that the Independent Democrats and Republicans intended to have something to say on election day. With the registration out of the way, the leaders will begin their campaigns in earnest today.

The Fusion-Mitchel forces will pay particular attention to Brooklyn, where it is admitted Mayor Mitchel is weakest. The Republican organization in that borough is badly split as a result of the Bennett candidacy. Republican leaders admit that Bennett has great strength in Brooklyn, and also agree that Judge Hylan is probably strongest there because it is his home town.

The Mayor intends to keep strictly to attacking his Tammany opponent, whom he considers his most "consequential" rival, and from time to time will have something to say about Morris Hillquit, his Socialist opponent. Bennett will be left to the Republican leaders to handle. The fact that so many prominent Republicans, including Charles E. Hughes, William H. Taft, Governor Whitman and Colonel Roosevelt have openly and strongly indorsed Mr. Mitchel is expected to keep the rank and file of Republicans in line for the Mayor.

Emory R. Buckner, Chairman of the Fusion-Mitchel Campaign Committee, said:

"It was a splendid registration. The thing so discouraging all the week was the independent balance of vote power. This has now been registered. We are delighted with the result of our hard work."

Mayor Mitchel declared that the registration results were "highly satisfactory," while the City Democracy, of which Martin W. Littleton is chairman, also expressed satisfaction at the large figures and took credit for getting out the independent vote. Thomas F. Smith, Secretary of Tammany Hall, said:

"The large registration indicates a large Democratic vote in New York County. During the week the district leaders and the election district Captains had been making a special effort to get every Democratic voter registered."

William M. Bennett's opinion of the large registration was as follows:

"I believe it is the reply of the people to primary frauds which counted me out of the race until the truth became known through an inspection of the ballots. The people have made up their minds that the only candidate in this election is the one who went directly to them for their indorsement and not those foisted off upon them by a Committee of 250 or a Committee of 170."

This analysis of the registration figures was made at the headquarters of Morris Hillquit, the Socialist candidate for Mayor:

"The large registration on the last day was particularly strong in districts where our local leaders and our speakers have reported the greatest increase in the vote for the Socialist ticket this year. In all the strongest Socialist Assembly districts, such as the Third, Fourth, and Fifth in the Bronx, the Fourteenth, Sixteenth, Nineteenth, and Twenty-third in Kings, and the Fourth, Sixth, Eighth, and Seventeenth in Manhattan, the registration figures exceeded our most enthusiastic expectations."

SWANN ANSWERS CORRIGAN.

Denies Beef Trust Retainer and Food Shark Suggestions.

District Attorney Swann sent a letter last night to Magistrate Joseph E. Corrigan, replying to Mr. Corrigan's letter of Saturday, in which the latter asked the District Attorney if he was under retainer by the "beef trust." Mr. Swann said that during the ten years he has held public office, at no time has he in a single instance engaged in private practice. He added:

"In regard to prosecuting the food sharks, you seem unaware of the fact that I collected the evidence and procured the indictment of the combination to raise the price of poultry, and that notwithstanding the fact that last year a Joint Committee of the Senate and the Assembly, known as the Wicks Committee, took volumes of evidence on the milk situation in the city and State and the Attorney General of the State made an investigation of the milk business with a view to prosecution, that no prosecution was had, and that for some time past I have been collecting evidence against the milk combination and have been presenting it to the Grand Jury during the last ten days in order that the Grand Jury may place the blame where it belongs and point the way for the relief of the overburdened consumers of this city.

"You ask that I publish the minutes of the Grand Jury in the Ruth Cruger case. Do you not know that it would be a crime to publish or make public the Grand Jury minutes? Such repeated display of ignorance of the criminal law should dispose of your bid for the votes of well-informed men."

Bus Line Extended to Fort George.

The Board of Estimate having granted a temporary permit, the Fifth Avenue Coach Company extended its service yesterday to St. Nicholas Avenue and One Hundred and Ninety-fourth Street. The extension was the result of an agitation carried on by taxpayers' organizations, including the Harlem Board of Commerce and the Upper Manhattan Taxpayers' Association.

The Alien Property Custodian, to be hereafter appointed, is hereby authorized to take all such measures as may be necessary or expedient, and not inconsistent with law, to administer the powers hereby conferred, and he shall further have the power and authority to make such rules and regulations not inconsistent with law as may be necessary and proper to carry out the provisions of said Section 7 (a,) Section 7 (c,) Section 7 (d,) Section 8 (a,) and Section 9 (b,) conferred upon the President by the provisions thereof and by the provisions of Section 5 (a.) said rules and regulations to be duly approved by the Attorney General.

34. The Alien Property Custodian, to be hereafter appointed, shall, "under the supervision and direction of the President, and under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe," have administration of all moneys, (including checks and drafts payable on demand,) and of all property, other than money, which shall come into his possession in pursuance of the provisions of the Trading With the Enemy act, in accordance with the provisions of Section 6, Section 10, and Section 12 thereof. WOODROW WILSON.

The White House, Oct. 12, 1917.

Explanation of the Order.

The following explanation of the scope and administrative machinery of the Trading with the Enemy act and of the President's executive order was also issued tonight:

The President on Oct. 6, 1917, approved the Trading with the Enemy act, and by an executive order signed Oct. 12, 1917, has established the administrative machinery to carry out its provisions.

This act has conferred on the President war powers of the widest extent. It has added to the power to embargo all exports, which was conferred upon the President by the Espionage act, the power to prohibit all imports into the United States except under such licenses as may be granted.

It has conferred on the President the power to prohibit or regulate all transfers of credits, money, currency, bullion, and securities between the United States and all foreign countries.

It imposes severe criminal penalties on all persons who trade or communicate directly or indirectly with an "enemy" or "ally of enemy," or with any person acting on their behalf or for their benefit.

It creates a definition of an "enemy" and "ally of enemy," with which it is highly important that every citizen of the United States should promptly familiarize himself for his own protection and for the loyal support of the Government in its efforts to wage the war to a successful termination. The act further provides for the use in the United States of enemy-held patents which may be of assistance to us in carrying on the war.

It provides for taking over and administering the property in the United States of "enemies" and "allies of enemies." It confers upon the President complete power to censor all communications of every sort passing between this country and any foreign country.

It provides certain regulations with regard to the foreign-language press in the United States.

These are merely the broad outlines of the act, but it will readily be seen that the act confers power to deal effectively with the abnormal conditions of trade created by the war and the exigencies of the public safety.

Certain of the powers conferred by the act the President has directed to be exercised through the State Department, the Treasury Department, the Attorney General, the Post Office Department, the Commerce Department, and the Federal Trade Commission. As to many of the powers conferred upon the President by Congress in this act, no single existing department is interested, and the President has provided for their joint administration by a War Trade Board composed of representatives of the departments which are most vitally concerned. The new War Trade Board so established is composed of Mr. Vance C. McCormick, Chairman, as representative of the Secretary of State; a representative of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed; Dr. Alonzo E. Taylor, as representative of the Secretary of Agriculture; Mr. Thomas D. Jones, as representative of the Secretary of Commerce; Mr. Beaver White, as representative of the Food Administrator; Mr. Frank C. Munson, as representative of the United States Shipping Board. Mr. Thomas L. Chadbourne, Jr., is counselor to the board. The functions and organization of this board are as follows:

EXPORTS.

The War Trade Board, under the President's direction, succeeds to all the functions which have been exercised by the Exports Administrative Board, which goes out of existence. The proclamations of the President forbidding the export of various articles without a license are continued in full force and effect, but licenses will hereafter be granted by the War Trade Board, instead of by the Exports Administrative Board, and all applications for such licenses and all correspondence with regard to them should be addressed to the Bureau of Exports of the War Trade Board. Its headquarters will for the present continue to be 1435 K Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. It will take over the branch offices at present established and being established in various cities in the country by the Exports Administrative Board, and these branch offices will have the same power and functions as to exports under the War Trade Board that they now have under the Exports Administrative Board. The War Trade Board will deal with exports under the powers created by Title VII. of the Espionage act, approved June 17, 1917.

IMPORTS.

The Trading With the Enemy act confers upon the President the power to prohibit the importation of any article or to impose the terms and conditions upon what may be imported. No proclamation has yet been issued by the President imposing any such prohibition or restriction, but upon the issuance of such proclamation the licensing of such importations will be done by the War Trade Board.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

The Trading With the Enemy act makes it unlawful, under severe penalties, to trade without a license with any person who there is probable cause to believe is an enemy or ally of enemy. The act gives an extremely broad definition of what constitutes trade. It provides that "trade" shall be deemed to mean:

(a) To pay, satisfy, compromise, or give security for the payment or satisfaction of any debt or obligation.

(b) To draw, accept, pay, present for acceptance or payment, or indorse any negotiable instrument or chose in action.

(c) To enter into, carry on, complete, or perform any contract, agreement, or obligation.

(d) To buy or sell, loan or extend credit, trade in, deal with, exchange, transmit, transfer, assign, or otherwise dispose of or receive any form of property.

(e) To have any form of business or commercial communication or intercourse with.

The definition of "an enemy" or "an ally of an enemy" requires careful consideration. In the first place, any person, no matter of what nationality, who resides within the territory of the German Empire or the territory of any of its allies or that occupied by their military forces is expressly made an "enemy" or "ally of enemy" by the act. Even citizens of the United States who have elected to remain within such territory are "enemies" or "allies of an enemy" within the provisions of the act. Further, any person not residing in the United States, of whatever nationality and wherever he resides, who is doing business within such territory, is placed within the definition of "enemy" or "ally of enemy." So also is any corporation created by Germany or its allies. So also is any corporation created by any other nation than the United States and doing business within such territory. Further, for the purpose of this act, the government of any nation with which the United States is at war or the ally of such nation and every subdivision of such government and every officer, official agent, or agency of such government is an "enemy" or "ally of enemy," and the act makes no restriction as to where such officer, official, agent, or agency may be located.

It is important for the public to have clearly in mind that not only is it unlawful to trade with an "enemy" or "ally of enemy" without license, but it is equally unlawful to trade with any person, who, there is reasonable cause to believe, is acting for or on account of or for the benefit of an "enemy" or "ally of enemy," and it makes no difference what the nationality or what the residence of such person may be. On the other hand, in dealing with subjects of Germany who are residents in the United States, it is important to remember that, while other provisions of law make it possible to intern them, the mere fact of their nationality does not make them "enemies" within the meaning of this act, and so prevent persons in this country from having ordinary commercial relations with them.

The Trading With the Enemy act, however, while imposing such stringent provisions, gives power to the President to grant licenses to trade with the enemy. The exercise of this power has been delegated by the President to the War Trade Board. Applications for license to trade with an "enemy" or "ally of enemy," or a person acting on behalf of or for the benefit of an "enemy" or "ally of enemy" should be sent to the War Trade Board.

ENEMIES DOING BUSINESS IN THE UNITED STATES.

The Trading With the Enemy Act provides that a person who is an "enemy" or "ally of enemy," under the definition of that Act, doing business within the United States, may, within thirty days after its enactment, apply for a license to continue to do business in the United States. The main application of these provisions will be to German or ally of German concerns which are doing business in the United States through branch houses or agents, such as insurance or reinsurance companies. Such an "enemy" or "ally of enemy" may continue to do business within the United States until such applications are acted upon, but under the restrictions, in the case of insurance companies, of the President's proclamation of July 13, 1917.

It will not be necessary under these provisions, however, for a German subject or the subject of an ally of Germany who is reident in this country to apply for a license unless for some other reason he falls within the definition of "enemy" or "ally of enemy," as explained above. If a license is granted to an "enemy" or "ally of enemy" to do business within the United States it is then lawful for any one within the United States to trade within the United States with such "enemy" or "ally of enemy" without himself applying for a license. Such "enemy," however, even if it is granted a license to do business within the United States, is prohibited from the time the Act takes effect from transmitting out of the United States any money or property, or using such money or property as a basis for the establishment of any credit within or outside of the United States for the benefit or on behalf of an "enemy" or "ally of enemy" Applications for license by an "enemy" or "ally of enemy" in the United States to continue to do business in the United States should be sent to the War Trade Board, except in the case of "enemy" or "ally of enemy" insurance companies, in which case they should be sent to the Treasury Department.

CHANGE OF NAME.

No "enemy" or "ally of enemy" doing business in the United States, or a partnership in which an "enemy" or "ally of enemy" was a member at the beginning of the war, can make a change of name during the war without a license. The War Trade Board is empowered by the President to receive and act on applications for such licenses.

COMMUNICATING WITH THE ENEMY.

The Trading With the Enemy act prohibits and imposes severe penalties on taking or sending any communication in any form out of the United States intended for any enemy or ally of the enemy, and also makes it unlawful to bring in or take out of the United States any form of communication except by mail. Power is given by the act, however, to relieve from these prohibitions by license, and the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered by the President to receive applications for and grant such licenses.

WAR TRADE COUNCIL.

In adition to the War Trade Board, the President has created a War Trade Council, composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Food Administrator, and the Chairman of the United States Shipping Board. This War Trade Council will take the place of the Exports Council and will act in an advisory capacity in such matters as may be referred to it by the President or the War Trade Board.

PATENTS.

The act contains various provisions as to the application for patents by citizens of the United States in enemy and ally of enemy countries during the war, and for the use in the United States by citizens of the United States of enemy-held patents during the war, and also for the suspension of information as to certain patent applications made in the United States, secrecy as to which is necessary for military reasons. The Federal Trade Commission is empowered by the President to deal with all these matters, receiving applications and granting licenses with regard to them.

CUSTODY OF ENEMY PROPERTY.

Among the most important and far reaching of the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy act are those dealing with the taking over by this Government of the custody and control of "enemy" property within the United States.

The property affected by these provisions is that which is located in the United States and belongs to any person or corporation that is an "enemy" or "ally of enemy" within the definitions of the act referred to above, except those licensed to continue doing business in the United States. German subjects and the subjects of her allies resident in the United States do not, from the mere fact of their nationality, fall within these definitions. The act makes it the duty of every concern within the United States issuing shares or stock, within sixty days after the approval of the act to report to the Alien Property Custodian the names of such of its officers, Directors, and stockholders as are known to be or reasonably believed to be "enemies", or "allies of enemy" and the amount of stock or shares owned by each.

The act provides, in addition, under severe penalties, that any person in the United States holding any property for an "enemy" or "ally of enemy," or for any person whom he may have reasonable cause to believe to be an "enemy" or "ally of enemy," must report the fact to the Alien Property Custodian within thirty days after the passage of this act. So, also any person in he United States indebted in any way to an "enemy" or "ally of enemy," or to a person whom he may have reasonable cause to believe to be an "enemy" or "ally of enemy," must make a similar report.

The Alien Property Custodian may, under the provisions of the executive order, require a transfer to himself of any property held for or on behalf of an "enemy" or "ally of enemy," or the payment of any money owed to an "enemy" or "ally of enemy" by a person in the United States. In addition, any person in the United States so holding any property or so owing any money may transfer such property or pay such money to the Alien Property Custodian with his consent.

Property or money transferred to the Alien Property Custodian will be held until the end of the war and then dealt with as Congress shall direct. All funds or ready money may be invested in Liberty bonds and held in such form.

The President has delegated to the Attorney General the power to direct the payment of claims against enemy property in the hands of the Custodian, upon the consent of all persons interested.

The President will hereafter name an Alien Property Custodian.

CONTROL OVER FOREIGN EXCHANGE AND TRANSFERS OF GOLD.

The President by his Executive order has committed to the Secretary of the Treasury the executive administration of the broad powers conferred by the act as to the prohibition and regulation of transfer between the United States and foreign countries of coin, currency, bullion, credits, and securities. The Secretary of the Treasury will continue, with the assistance of the Federal Reserve Banks, to pass on applications for leave to export bullion, coin, and currency. No prohibitions or regulations have as yet been made as to the transfer of credits or securities between the United States and foreign countries.

CENSORSHIP BOARD.

The President has created a Censorship Board to administer such regulations as he may prescribe as to the censorship of cable, telegraph, and mail communications between the United States and foreign countries. This board is composed of representatives respectively of the Postmaster General, of the Secretary of War, of the Secretary of the Navy, of the War Trade Board, and of the Chairman of the Committee on Public Information.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE PRESS.

The Trading with the Enemy act provides that every paper printed in a foreign language shall furnish translations to the Postmaster General of the matter concerning the war printed by it, unless a permit to omit doing so is granted to it. The administration of this provision is committed to the Postmaster General, and applications for such permits should be made to him.

TRANSPORTING AN ENEMY.

The act provides that it shall be unlawful for any person without a license to transport or attempt to transport into or from the United States, or for any American vessel to transport in any part of the world any citizen of an enemy or ally of an enemy nation. The administration of this provision is vested in the State Department, and authority is given the Secretary of State to grant the necessary licenses for such transportation.

CLEARANCE PROVISIONS.

Collectors of Customs are given the right to refuse clearance to vessels which are transporting cargo in violation of the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy act. Power to review such refusal of clearance by the Collector is vested in the Secretary of Commerce by the executive order of the President.

TAILORING,

MOST clothing marketed in New York is manufactured in bulk "somewhere in America," and sold by middlemen. In producing such clothing time of operation is considered of more importance than quality of tailoring. More thought is concentrated on the cutting of minutes than of materials.

¶ Saks Clothes are made right here in New York by our own tailoring organization. Each model, each garment, is the handiwork of our highly specialized staff of tailors—men who have been trained to consider superiority of workmanship of prime importance.

¶ The man who selects his Fall suit or overcoat at Saks is sure of that personal touch in the tailoring which is talked of in most clothing announcements, but which is seldom seen in the clothing; he will be sure of all-wool materials and he will choose from models drafted to out-point any alternative choice on the Isle of Manhattan.

The Investor's Opportunity

To patriots no appeal need be made for subscription to the Liberty Loan. They will do what they can and do it promptly.

Shrewd business men also will take all they can afford. They recognize that an obligation of the United States bearing interest at the rate of 4% per annum, with conversion privilege that may largely increase this rate and after the war show a substantial profit, is a gilt-edge investment.

The general public alone must be coaxed and cajoled to subscribe, but if they do not subscribe directly out of their pocket, they will yet subscribe in a more costly way. We are reminded of the story of the pacifist who vehemently declared that the Government could not make him fight. "No," said his friend quietly, "but they can put you in the trenches and you can make your decision there."

Americans are not investors in securities, and it is difficult to make them understand that they are not giving away their hard earned dollars, but loaning them to the Government with safety of principal and surety of interest beyond all question. The English understand securities. That is why they are rich.

We urge every depositor of the Harriman National Bank promptly to enter his subscription. In deference to our shareholders we must take the business point of view, and we believe it to be no less a question of business than of patriotism.

HIGHER WAGE PLEA FOR LIBRARY WORK

Committee Will Ask Board of Estimate to Increase Budget for Increased Salaries.

POORLY PAID PROFESSION

Employes Have Been Quitting Service for Better Positions at Rate of Seventeen a Month.

A committee, headed by Henry W. Taft, will appear before the Board of Estimate this morning to plead that provision be made in the budget for raising the salaries of employes of the city public libraries. The Bureau of Personal Service has found the present wage scale too low. By raising salaries it is hoped to check disorganization of the city library staffs by the resignation of employes, who have been quitting the library service recently at the rate of seventeen resignations a month.

In addition to a repetition of the statement that librarians belong to the poorest-paid profession in the world, the argument will be made that, if the city desires to continue library service, it must pay salaries which will stop resignations.

There are fifty-five vacancies in the Circulation Department of the City Library, according to Harry J. Grumpelt, Accountant of the New York Public Library, and scores of positions abandoned by trained and qualified librarians have been filled by untrained and often ill-equipped applicants, because it has been impossible to maintain the former standards of educational qualifications at the present salaries. Formerly the circulation department of the New York Public Library accepted employes only after they had passed examinations. These tests recently have been dropped almost entirely, and, even with this letting down of entrance requirements, it has been found impossible to fill fifty-five vacancies, according to Mr. Grumpelt.

During the year 1916, 110 persons left the circulation department of the New York Public Library. In the first six months of this year forty employes left. In the months of July, August, and September of this year fifty-two quit.

"The result has been that less skilled staffs have been in charge of branches," Mr. Grumpelt said. "The service has been impaired considerably. The public has been inconvenienced and is complaining. The situation is likely to get much worse. If the present rate of resignations continues, those using the libraries will be served a year from now by staffs composed almost entirely of new and untrained help.

"Many of our best employes, some of whom have spent many years in training themselves, have resigned, and have often stepped at once into positions paying twice the salaries which they received in the library service. The Guaranty Trust Company alone has taken fifteen of our employes. Other employes receive offers every day. Those who have studied this profession, as a rule, would like to remain in it, and many will continue if they are assured of a bare living at present and a moderate betterment in the future, but they cannot stay while they receive less than a bare living and have opportunities of earning far greater salaries elsewhere."

Points to Danger in Letter.

The danger that the increased cost of living, together with the demand in commercial offices for men and women skilled in filing and library work, will practically wipe out the entire profession in this city, is indicated in the following letter from John Forster Carr, Director of the Immigrant Publication Society, Inc., to Controller Prendergast:

"An alarming condition has arisen in the New York Public Library that calls for a prompt remedy from the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. Within fourteen months 115 assistants have left the graded service of the library, and if the year ends as it has started, within the two years, 37 per cent. of the staff will have resigned. It is, first of all, a question of high qualifications exacted and exceedingly low salaries paid, beginning at $10.38 a week and rising only very slowly by small and fractional increases. On investigation by the Bureau of Personal Service and the Committee on Education of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, it appeared that 256 employes, or 59 per cent. of the cases covered, received less than the appraised minimum of their positions. Considering the work done and the cost of living in this city, it is believed that the salaries paid to these library workers are lower than those paid in any other public library in the country. The inevitable fact follows that three-fifths of those who leave the library service go to much better paid positions in other libraries or into business, with its fairer chances of making a living.

"Two recent cases lie within my personal knowledge. A Jewish assistant of rare ability and extremely successful work with her own people in an important east side branch library, after the highest training and six years' service, facing the iron limits of a $900 salary a year, was suddenly offered a business position paying $1,500 to begin with. She waited a month before accepting it, trying her best to get paying work outside library hours to increase her income. She told me she was willing to work 'even twelve hours a day' if she could only keep on at her loved library. She needed the money to pay a family debt, and in the end accepted the business offer. It was from a banking house that is ambitiously planning Russian connections.

"There was the case of an able librarian in charge of one of the branches, who has just gone into the library service of another city. Again it was a question of money—only $300—but again the increase was needed.

"It is not merely a question of justice to these hard-working and poorly paid employes. The city suffers in the loss of the money spent in their training—spent in so many instances only to the advantage of the libraries of other cities, that, without cost, are obtaining our fully trained librarians. The city also suffers in the progressive disorganization of the library service, which is forced to fall back upon incompetent, untrained, and often uneducated helpers. As a consequence public complaints multiply. Meanwhile the work has been growing by leaps and bounds until the annual total of books circulated has almost doubled within a decade, and now numbers nearly 10,000,000 volumes.

Work With Foreign Born.

"Of almost equal importance is the new and rapidly developing work with our foreign born. In this our American libraries are winning a success that is almost unique. Where many other agencies, both public and private, are treating the immigrant as a menace or a problem, stirring up unbelievable, though unexpressed, bitterness, the library welcomes him as a friend; trusts him; respects the nationality of his origin; helps without patronizing him; surrounds him altogether with the best influences of American life. It is Americanization work, patriotically effective, that stirs no antagonisms.

"In teaching English and the duties of citizenship, in fitting the immigrant for the larger opportunities of our life, the New York Public Library is doing a splendid work that is too little known—work that in many respects is a model. The need of this work has been impressively brought home to us in these last weeks. But buildings, books, trained helpers are lacking. The Board of Estimate should generously provide for the larger development of these capacities for public service and education."

Members of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment have agred to some of the raises asked for by the Trustees of the New York Public Library and by the librarians, but have refused to grant others, and if their present plan is not changed, twenty per cent. of the library employes will still be receiving less than what the Board of Personal Service hold to be a minimum. Mr. Taft and other representatives of the library Trustees will argue for the retention in the budget of $8,520, which is required to bring all salaries up to the appraised minimum and to grant small increases to other salaries now above the minimum.

SOLDIER'S PLEA STIRS BIG BOND MEETING

Sergt. Empey, American Regular Home from Front, Urges Support Behind Lines.

SEES BITTER TIME AHEAD

Veteran Says It's a Mistake to Believe We Are Not Fighting German People as Well as Kaiser.

An audience that packed Carnegie Hall to capacity last night greeted Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, the American regular who went to Europe in 1915, enlisted in the British Army, took part in the great battles of 1916 and part of 1917, and stopped only when he was invalided home as a result of wounds. The little soldier, for Empey misses being a "bantam" by only an inch or two, appeared in the uniform of the British Army, steel helmet, gas mask, and everything. Some of the stories he told are to be found in his book, "Over the Top."

Despite his service in the British Army, Empey is still an American regular. He walks like a regular and he talks like a regular. Likewise he is a good actor and a mimic, and can speak the language of the British "Tommy" like the real thing when the occasion demands. When he appeared on the stage he found every seat in the house from parquet to top gallery occupied.

Scattered through the audience were many officers and soldiers of the United States Army and they were applauding from the time their former comrade started at about 8:30, until he said "Good night, I hope you buy a Liberty bond," two hours later. Empey was not introduced. He simply walked out on the stage and when the applause that greeted him ended waved a swagger stick and said "How do you do."

Sergeant Empey began by calling attention to what he termed an error which is common throughout the United States, namely the impression that the United States is not at war with the German people, but with the Kaiser and his Government.

"We are at war with Germany, the German people, and everything connected with Germany from the Kaiser down," he said, "and I know what I am talking about, for I've been there, and the sooner we realize this fact over here at home the better it will be for all concerned. Over there you don't meet the Kaiser, the Crown Prince, the Chancellor, or any of the other big German figures in the trenches. What you do see is the German people themselves. The Kaiser orders that hospitals be bombed, prisoners be maltreated, and other things done which are against the laws of God and man, and the German people carry those orders out.

"We don't realize what we are up against yet. We are still letting them print German newspapers, and men like Thompson and La Follette are still talking against the United States. Now take La Follette—

"He's a traitor," a man in the gallery shouted.

"Rightо," answered Empey.

"Now I know there are lots of people in this country who were born in Germany and who are ready to fight for the United States against their fatherland, and those fellows are all right. They are the right kind of citizens. But they are not German-Americans. There are no such people as German-Americans. They are either Americans like the rest of us or Germans. In 1918 our casualty lists will be coming home, and the newspapers will print the names of good American lads under the captions killed, wounded, and missing, and then America will begin to see things as they are.

"Now our boys are going over there. Some are there and others are on the way and others are going to follow. It is up to us back here to back these boys up to the limit. And there is just one place for the German who interferes, and that is the internment camp, a camp with barbed wire around and sentinels with fixed bayonets guarding them.

"American soldiers will need rifles and cannon, clothing and food, and good care and everything, and those who stay back can do their bit by giving our Government the money needed to provide these things. And the way to give that money is to buy Liberty Bonds. Every man and woman in America owes it to his country to be a Liberty Bond owner, for every bond means just that much liberty for the United States. A fifty-dollar bond is $50 worth of liberty. Make no mistake about that."

MRS. BRYAN ON SUFFRAGE.

Tells Advantages She Thinks Would Follow Votes for Women.

Mrs. William Jennings Bryan, who is to speak at the Woman's Suffrage meeting at Cooper Union tonight, pointed out yesterday what advantages, in her opinion, would follow a suffrage triumph. Mrs. Bryan is at the Henry Street Settlement House.

"Suffragists," said Mrs. Bryan, "have already won the battle for equal rights along the lines of abstract argument. The right of women to vote is now conceded in nearly all countries. The discussion has reached the ground of expediency and men are now asking what influence will ballots for both have upon our homes, our families, and our communities.

"The first great advantage which comes to the homes as a result of equal suffrage rights is that of increased companionship, and anything which tends to broaden the base of common interest between husband and wife makes for happiness. More domestic troubles arise from lack of comradeship than from any other one cause. Husband and wife must learn to pull together and suffrage helps them to do this. With equal rights granted the minds of women turn to more serious matters. The children in the home are better trained for the duties of citizenship, and the dignity of the mother increases when the family feels that she knows the essential things. Money will be more wisely expended by women when they better understand the hardships of earning and the value of these earnings.

"The benefits outside the home, which follow the adoption of equal suffrage, are too numerous to give in detail. The thoughtful woman has no desire to usurp the place of man in the business and industrial world. She sees a broad and legitimate field in which she may work doing the things which need to be done and which men fail to do. Experience shows that women are particularly fitted to serve along educational lines, to serve in those places where the care of the aged and children is necessary to the public welfare, and in various other positions of somewhat similar nature. Again a crying need for woman suffrage is found in the industrial world, where millions of women wage earners are powerless to organize an effective opposition to unjust conditions, unless that opposition is supported by the ballot.

"In States that have equal suffrage the percentage of women seeking public office is exceedingly small. There are many women County Superintendents of Schools in the West, and an occasional Alderman or Mayor and sometimes minor officers. Every man who casts a ballot does not seek an office and the percentage of women seeking office is much smaller.

"Miss Rankin has been elected to Congress. She has been elected because she has a fitness for the place and because the men of Montana wished her to have the office. It is safe to say that no woman will get an office for which she has not the qualifications.

"It seems to me office holding is a local matter. Each State should be permitted to use its own judgment. Why should the State of New York bother about what the State of Montana chooses to do and vice versa?"

STRAUS SUPPORTS DOWLING

Sends Contribution and Bespeaks Success for Democratic Ticket.

Frank L. Dowling, Democratic candidate for Borough President of Manhattan, received a contribution to his campaign fund yesterday from Nathan Straus, as well as a letter from Mr. Straus, in which he wished Mr. Dowling as well as his associates on the Democratic ticket overwhelming success.

"I will do everything possible for your election," wrote Mr. Straus.

The Kosher Butchers' Association held a meeting yesterday and declared for Mr. Dowling, because of his support of the small business men on the East Side.

AUTOS IN CRASH KILL WOMAN ON SIDEWALK

Trolley Wrecks Motor Ambulance and Injures Driver and Surgeon.

While returning home after purchasing groceries for the family dinner early yesterday, Mrs. Sarah Kreps, 39 years of age, of 659 Gates Avenue, Brooklyn, was pinned under an automobile that had been hurled on the sidewalk after a collision with another car and the iron fence outside of a police station at Gates and Throop Avenues. She died several hours later at St. John's Hospital. Mrs. Carrie Austin, 44 years of age, of 134 Reid Avenue, and her 8-year-old son Arthur, occupants of one of the cars, were also taken to the hospital suffering from shock and contussions. They were caught under their own car.

The automobiles were operated by Percy Austin of 134 Reid Avenue and Joseph Eisen of 1,187 Eastern Parkway, in Mr. Austin's car were his wife, two children, and his brother. The car was proceeding west on Gates Avenue. Mr. Eisen was headed south on Throop Avenue. At the intersection of the two streets the cars came together. Eisen's car, being the lighter, was thrown to the sidewalk just as Mrs. Kreps was passing. Captain William Sullivan and reserves from the station house released her by lifting the car back from the fence.

Both Eisen and Austin were arrested but were released under $2,500 bail by Coroner Ernest C. Wagner for appearance in the Coroners' Court.

Nicholas Dilacci, a retired wine merchant, of 64 Jackson Street, Brooklyn, received probably fatal injuries yesterday afternoon when he was knocked down by a touring car near New Springville, Staten Island. The car was occupied by five men, who hurried on. Dilacci was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital, and the police started in search of the car.

A trolley car on the Thirty-ninth Street ferry line in Brooklyn demolished a motor ambulance of the Norwegian Hospital yesterday at Fifth Avenue and Forty-sixth Street, Brooklyn, and Dr. John M. Tamraz and Roy Hall, the chauffeur, received painful injuries. The street car was filled with passengers, but none was injured, and it went on as soon as the wrecked ambulance had been dragged from the track.

LEADERS OF SOUTH MEET HERE TODAY

One Session of Commercial Congress Will Show How War Emergencies Were Met.

WILSON TO SEND A MESSAGE

Thousands of Delegates Expected to Attend the Meetings—Mayor Mitchel's Proclamation of Welcome.

New York City is host this week to the ninth annual convention of the Southern Commercial Congress, which opens at 10 o'clock this morning and continues through Wednesday. Meetings are at the Hotel Astor and convention headquarters at the McAlpin. One session of the congress will be devoted to presenting a picture of the response of Southern business to the war emergency, with speakers from half a dozen States telling of the way problems were met in their own commonwealths, and other topics to be discussed will treat of banking, good roads, cotton, general agriculture, engineering, and natural resources, education and insurance.

The first session, held at the Astor this morning, will be opened by invocation by the Rev. Dr. Randolph McKim. The congress will be welcomed by Oscar S. Straus, General Chairman of the New York Committee; William A. Barber, President of the New York Southern Society; Mayor Mitchel, and Governor Whitman. George W. Wickersham will speak on "Standardization of Commercial Law." Senator Duncan U. Fletcher of Florida, President of the congress, will respond for the body, and a message will be read from President Wilson.

The thousands of delegates from all over the South who will attend will have an opportunity, through the holding of simultaneous sessions, to attend the meetings treating of the particular topics in which they happen to be most interested.

On Tuesday night comes the principal social feature of the conference, the dinner at the Astor, at which the diplomatic representatives of the countries allied with the United States will be the guests of honor. Senator Fletcher will introduce Mr. Straus as toastmaster, and the speakers will include Secretary of Commerce William G. Redfield, United States Senators Robert L. Owen and James Hamilton Lewis, and J. J. Jusserand, the French Ambassador, who will respond for the Allies. The diplomatic guests of honor include Ambassadors Jusserand, Sir Cecil Spring-Rice of Great Britain, Count V. Macchio di Cellere of Italy, Almaro Sato of Japan, and Boris Bakhmeteff of Russia; Ministers E. de Cartier de Marchienne of Belgium, Viscount de Alte of Portugal, Phya Prabha Karavongse of Siam, Dr. Carlos Manuel de Cespedes of Cuba, V. K. Wellington Koo of China, Don Belisario Porras of Panama, and Lioubomir Michailovitch of Serbia, and Chargé d'Affaires G. Roussos of Greece. The diplomats will be received by the Mayor at the City Hall in the afternoon of the same day, in a program arranged by the Mayor's Committee on National Defense, with speeches by Mayor Mitchel, Mr. Straus, Senator Fletcher, and Ambassador Jusserand.

Mayor Welcomes the Congress.

Mayor Mitchel's proclamation of welcome to the congress says:

The congress has made good its slogan, "For a Greater Nation Through a Greater South." And now, with its history of definite achievement, and with the vital power of genuine service, the congress comes in this historic hour exemplifying the unity of the United States and demonstrating the relation of the South to the national program in this period of crisis—calling the nation to the exertion of its full strength in the organization and mobilization of the material resources of the country, in answer to the President's war message, and with statesmanlike vision pointing to the hour of international reconstruction, when new duties, new obligations, and new responsibilities will devolve upon America.

The ninth congress of the present series is hereby proclaimed to the citizens of the City of New York, and citizens and officials are urged to receive and welcome the agricultural, industrial, commercial, and financial South when it comes to the commercial metropolis of the nation.

After the introductory meeting there will be a luncheon at the McAlpin, at which the editors and publishers of 30 newspapers will be guests of the Information Committee of the congress, of which Herbert S. Houston is Chairman. The speakers will be Stephane Lauzanne, editor of The Matin of Paris; Melville E. Stone, General Manager of The Associated Press, and Dr. Toyokichi Iyenaga, Managing Director of the East and West News Bureau.

There also will be several afternoon meetings at the Astor. One of these will discuss the response of Southern business men to war problems; another will deal with advertising, and a third will be held by the engineering and research section.

At eight o'clock the House of Southern Governors will meet at the Astor, with Governor Richard I. Manning of South Carolina, chairman of the House, presiding. Addresses will be made by Governors Emerson J. Harrington of Maryland, Carl E. Milliken of Maine, Walter E. Edge of New Jersey and Samuel W. McCall of Massachusetts, and by Director General John Barrett of the Pan American Union. There will be a reception for the Governors and members of the congress at the Waldorf after the meeting, given by the New York Southern Society.

To Discuss Good Roads.

The Tuesday afternoon meetings include conferences on cotton, good roads, and general agriculture, with State commissioners of roads and agriculture and cotton experts of national reputation on the program, and a general meeting.

The evening will be set aside for the dinner. On Wednesday morning agricultural topics will be discussed, some of the speakers being George W. Norris, executive officer of the Federal Farm Loan Board, Governor Henry C. Stuart of Virginia, and Senator Gore of Oklahoma. There will be a reception at Columbia University from 12:30 to 1:30 with Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler at the head of a reception committee composed of representatives of Southern universities and colleges, and a luncheon at the McAlpin in honor of W. P. G. Harding, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and George W. Norris. In the afternoon there will be six conferences at the Astor, taking up respectively education, agriculture, banking, engineering, women's work, and insurance.

At the night session problems of banking and trade will be discussed by Boris A. Bakhmeteff, the Russian Ambassador; W. P. G. Harding, John Claussen, President of the Crocker National Bank of San Francisco; Hamilton Holt, and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury L. S. Rowe. This will close the formal program of the convention, but at 3:30 on Thursday afternoon there will be a concert at Wanamaker's auditorium given by Southern artists now resident in New York.

Women's work will have considerable attention in the session of the congress. The woman's auxiliary will meet this afternoon in the Rose Room of the Astor at 2:30, and again in the Astor Conservatory on Wednesday afternoon. Miss Louise G. Lindsley, President General of the auxiliary, will make the introductory address this afternoon. Other speakers will be Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Chairman of the New York Woman's Auxiliary; Mrs. Moultrie Mordecai, President of the South Carolina Branch, and Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett of Virginia.

The Marchioness of Aberdeen and Temair, President of the International Council of Women, will be the chief speaker at the meeting of Wednesday, and will discuss the work of that body in co-ordinating all activities of women. William D. Upshaw of Atlanta, will also speak, and the women of Alabama, Virginia, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Louisiana will be represented respectively by Mrs. Charles H. Henderson, Miss Alethea Sperell, Mrs. Cora Lucas, Mrs. Rutledge Smith, and Miss Kay Gordon.

MORE COAL MOVING.

Fuel Administration Reports Show Increased Shipments.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—As further evidence that there had not been a severe shortage of anthracite coal in several of the larger cities, the Fuel Administration tonight announced that the combined shipments of anthracite to New England States, New York City, Philadelphia, Buffalo, and Erie, during the first eight months of the present year, have been heavier by 2,593,817 tons than during the corresponding period last year.

"New York received 12,666,650 tons last year and 13,912,384 this year, a gain of 1,245,734 tons," the statement read. "The figures for Philadelphia are 4,186,698 and 4,027,692 for 1916 and 1917, respectively, a gain of 741,294 tons.

"New England, last year, got 3,438,242 tons by rail and 2,351,995 by barge, a total of 5,790,237 tons. This year the figures are 4,105,576 by rail and 2,260,365 by barge, a total of 6,453,941 tons, showing a gain of 665,704 tons.

"In only one case among the cities named is there a loss. Buffalo and Erie, taken together, got 4,346,917 tons last year and 4,288,002 this year, showing a loss of 58,915 tons. This is attributed to the cold, late Spring, which permitted little or no coal to be carried over, and the Fuel Administration's policy to ship coal past the lake points to the needy Northwest before the close navigation. The deficiency will be made up later and special emergency calls for coal, if authentic, will receive prompt consideration at Washington."

COAL SHORTAGE ACUTE.

Cut in Staten Island Train Service Said to be Due to It.

Officials of the Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad Company, the only steam operated road in the Borough of Richmond, declared yesterday that the recent cutting of trains from the daily service is harmful to the income of the company as well as an inconvenience to the commuters. It is said that the real reason for the curtailing of the service is coal shortage. It is claimed that there is a shortage of 90,000 tons on Staten Island. Dealers are refusing orders from many customers and are filling orders to their regular trade in quarter to one-ton deliveries at $8 a ton.

One philanthropic dealer has notified all his poorer customers to strive to have a delivery of one ton of coal before Nov. 1, after which it is expected that the price will not only be prohibitive for the poor, but that it may be impossible to obtain coal at any price.

DAIRYMEN SELECTED ADVISER FOR HOOVER

But Head of League Says $5,000 for Expenses Never Was Drawn Upon.

R. D. Cooper, President of the New York State Dairymen's League, issued a statement last night in which he admitted that the Directors of the organization he heads appropriated $5,000 at a meeting in Utica, in July, to defray the expenses in Washington of a representative of the producers who would act as an adviser to Herbert C. Hoover, the Food Administrator. He described as "absolutely false," however, the statement of Attorney General Brundage of Illinois that the money was to be used "to place a man friendly to the League in the National Food Administration."

Mr. Cooper explained that the Directors voted the appropriation about a month after George Haskell of Chicago had been designated by Mr. Hoover to act as his adviser.

Mr. Cooper admitted that he had written to W. J. Tittle, Secretary of the Milk Producers' Association of Chicago, as reported in dispatches from Chicago, but asserted that his letter contained no reference to the appointment of a "friend" on the Hoover committee, as charged in testimony presented to Federal investigators.

It was understood, he asserted, that whoever was named to represent the producers would be required "to act without expense to the Government or the Food Administration," and after the subject was discussed with the conclusion that it would be a financial burden on the individual, the Directors voted the $5,000 fund. No part of the money had been used, Mr. Cooper said, as Mr. Haskell was a man of means and use of the fund was not necessary.

Mr. Cooper said that a conference of representatives of the various branches of the milk industry was called in Washington on June 26, and at that meeting a committee was selected to act as an advisory committee. This committee decided to offer a man to Mr. Hoover who should act in an advisory capacity, and selected Mr. Haskell, who later was designated by Mr. Hoover as a member of the National Dairy Industry War Council.

"As far as we have had to do with any other organization," Mr. Cooper said, "we have been above board, and we will show any court or any kind of investigation that our whole activity has been to assist in the work of cooperation with the food administration."

PERKINS SEES FOOD PERIL.

Says New York Thoughtlessly Faces a Winter of Danger.

Declaring that this country would be faced with an economic struggle after the war as tremendous as the military one she was now engaged in, George W. Perkins, Chairman of Mayor Mitchel's Committee on Food Conservation, speaking to a large audience at St. Denis's Church in Yonkers last night, urged all business men to give the food problem as much time as their sons were now giving the military problem, and the same intelligence and vision with which they were now conducting their business.

He was certain, he said, that the struggle would be an all embracing, far-reaching one, but whether or not it would also be a bloody one depended very largely on these men and what plans they made to solve the food problem. He deplored their present apathy.

The fight he was at present conducting, he said, was against an industry whose combined capital was $500,000,000, and, of course, "the men are not going to see any change take place without a bitter fight."

Mr. Perkins said that more trusts had been organized than had ever been dreamed of since the passage of the Sherman anti-trust law. "Instead of openly co-operating to form a monopoly," he said, "the law has forced most to do it in secret. The dealers in food are doing it today, and one of the most powerful of these is the Dairymen's League."

The people of New York were permitting themselves to face the Winter without a thought of how they would be able to feed themselves, he said. A curious blight, he pointed out, had reduced the potato crop to 40 per cent. of last year's yield. The only way to solve the food situation, he advised, was to give the municipalities power to buy direct from producers and sell to the consumers through such channels as were necessary.

STORE OF BEEF INCREASES.

Eighty Per Cent. More in Storage on Oct. 1 Than a Year Ago.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—Eighty per cent. more frozen beef was in stock on Oct. 1 than a year ago.

Reports from 293 storages to the Bureau of Markets, made public tonight, showed holdings of 137,806,501 pounds. Stocks of cured beef amounted to 32,644,559 pounds on the same date, an increase of 46.4 per cent., while a decrease of 3.6 per cent. in the amount of lamb and mutton in storage was shown, the stock totaling 3,221,234 pounds. Small decreases also were reported for dry salt and pickled pork and lard, but frozen pork increased 12 per cent.

HOSPITAL DEFICIT $1,000,000

United Fund Reports 46 New York Institutions in Urgent Need.

Conditions created by the war menace the forty-six hospitals belonging to the United Hospital Fund of New York, formerly the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Association, with a deficit of $1,000,000.

Estimates compiled by the Fund show that in 1917 the expenses of these forty-six prominent hospitals will be at least 10 per cent. greater than in 1916. Hospital expenses have increased more than 25 per cent. since the beginning of the war.

In 1916 the expenses of these forty-six hospitals were $6,862,330 and their total income only $6,371,882, leaving a deficit of over $490,000. For the year just ended there was a further deficit of approximately $700,000, due to rise in labor and supplies. At this rate the deficit for the current fiscal year will be more than $1,000,000.

The New York Hospital reported a deficit of $96,812 for the year ended on Sept. 30; the German Hospital, $52,724; the Volunteer, $40,377; the Nursery and Child, $30,539; Polyclinic, $21,450; Lying-In, $10,416. Full returns have not been received from Mt. Sinai, St. Luke's and Roosevelt, but the deficit in each is said to exceed any in their history.

White Slavery flourished and the newspapers almost daily referred to the "Vice Trust."

These conditions existed under the protection of well-known politicians and a few corrupt police officials.

Mitchel changed all this.

No longer does there exist a partnership between organized vice and corrupt police officials who brought disgrace to the entire force.

The "Vice Trust" is only a memory.

All vice has not been abolished. But it has been compelled to hide its evil head and it has been driven out of politics by the Fusion Administration.

Efforts to bring back the "Red Lights" have been made from time to time.

But they have been promptly suppressed by the police.

The "Vice Trust's" only hope for a return of the old conditions is a change of administration.

These facts show how wonderfully far we have come in four years from those old Tammany days with their huge wastage of ruined women and poisoned men.

This proves that the Mitchel Administration has been sincere and energetic in its effort to rid New York of vice.

If Mitchel stays in office another term the town will continue to grow cleaner and more decent.

Have you a boy growing up in New York City? Or a girl?

Then keep Tammany out!

Remember—

—that Mitchel in order to make good must have behind him a working majority of the Board of Estimate.

Here is the Fusion ticket and the number of votes each will cast in the Board:

Contributions Urgently Needed

The expense of this campaign is being met by voluntary contributions. Advertising is the most economical way of getting the facts before the voters. For example, $1.00 will pay for an advertisement like this in approximately one thousand copies of a newspaper; $10 will pay for ten thousand; $100 for one hundred thousand, and so on. If you want to keep Mitchel and Fusion on the job send a contribution to

CUTS SIGNAL CABLES TO EQUIP WIRELESS

Brooklyn Boy Blocks Subway Trains While Getting Material for Experiment.

STRIPS SYSTEM AT NIGHT

Admits the Theft of Fixtures After Threatening a Tube Employe with a Revolver.

When Leslie Evers, 16 years old, ran out of wire and other material used in experiments with his wireless apparatus in the basement of his home at 417 Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn, he did not ask his parents for money to buy equipment. Instead, he waited until all the other members of the family were asleep and went to the Seventy-seventh Street station of the Fourth Avenue subway, where he stripped wires from the signal system in the tube only a few feet fro mthe station platform.

As soon as Leslie stuck his pliers into the cables the lights in all the signals in the subway went out and trains stopped, because motormen could not tell whether it was safe to proceed. There was congestion of traffic at the terminus of the subway at Eighty-sixth Street when he made his first cut into the signal wires on Feb. 3 last, and a collision was narrowly averted. It was several hours before repair men on the signal system could find the break, and then they discovered that wires and fixtures had been taken.

Watchmen and track walkers were instructed to watch sharply for any person tampering with the signal system, but Leslie returned for wireless equipment six times without leaving a clue. Men were sent from other branches of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company to aid in guarding the signal system, but the boy's wireless apparatus and extra equipment grew rapidly.

John Farrelman, an employe, was in the Seventy-seventh Street station last night with George C. Schlesinger and John E. Cane, detectives from the Hamilton Avenue Police Station, when the signal lights went out. Farrelman told the detectives some one was tampering with the signal system, and the three men started down the tube. Farrelman, who was leading, saw Leslie at one of the signal posts, but the boy "covered" him with a pistol and told him to stop. Farrelman halted, but the detectives seized the boy before he could shoot.

Leslie had a hammer, a saw, pliers, and other tools, as well as extra cartridges for his pistol. In the basement of the Evers home the detectives found signal equipment, and the boy admitted that he had stripped parts of the signal system six or seven times since Feb. 3. His father, Byron, Leslie, chief draftsman for the Lidgerwood Manufacturing Company, makers of heavy machinery, was astonished when detectives told him what Leslie had done. None of the family knew that Leslie had been leaving the house at night.

Leslie was held in $1,500 bail by Magistrate Reynolds for examination today to answer charges of felonious assault, malicious mischief, violation of the Sullivan law, and having burglar tools and stolen property in his possession.

JEWISH SEMINARY OPENS.

Dr. Cyrus Adler Makes Loyalty to Country the Keynote.

The formal opening of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America took place last night, when exercises were held in the Seminary building, 531 West 123d Street. In an address in which he urged the undivided loyalty of every citizen of this country, Dr. Cyrus Adler, Acting President of the Seminary, said that the time had come when those who are not for America are against her. There is no middle ground, he added, and he appealed to all to get behind the Government in the successful prosecution of the war.

Dr. Adler said that while ministers are exempt from taking an active part in the war, they can help by ministering to the needs of the soldiers and by strengthening them in their loyalty and devotion to the cause.

Louis Marshall, Chairman of the Board of Directors, and Professor Louis Ginzberg also spoke. There were present about 250, and these included the student body, the Faculty and members of the alumni. It was announced that two more instructors had been added to the teaching staff.

SAVES 2 FROM DROWNING.

Policeman McCauley Pulled to Ship's Deck Unconscious After Rescue.

An engineer officer on the Dutch ship Cornelius, tied up at Pier 4 in the Erie Basin, South Brooklyn, stumbled on the gangplank yesterday and fell into the basin, where an outgoing tide quickly carried him beyond reach of the ropes thrown by sailors on deck. Policeman Harry R. McCauley heard the cries of the sailors, and ran to the edge of the pier. He could see the drowning man about 100 feet from the ship. The policeman took off his coat, swam out, and seized the officer. McCauley saw that both would drown if he had to struggle with the officer and swim too, so he struck the man in the temple and made him unconscious.

Dragging the officer with one hand the policeman was swimming back to the pier, when he ran into a floating log, partly submerged. He was unable to get over the heavy piece of timber and was calling for help, when Joseph Keyes of 405 West 125th Street, a customs guard on the pier, started to swim to his assistance. Meantime McCauley got away from the log, and was within a few feet of the customs guard when Keyes threw up his hands, and cried that cramps had made his legs helpless. McCauley was almost overcome, but he seized Keyes by the collar with his one free hand and treaded water, while sailors continued efforts to reach the men with ropes.

Finally the policeman caught a rope and tied it around the waists of the ship's officer and the customs guard, who were hauled to the deck of the ship. He had enough strength to tie another rope around himself, but he was unconscious when he was pulled to the deck. McCauley regained consciousness at the Holy Family Hospital, but surgeons had to work more than an hour over the other men. All will be discharged from the hospital today.

AGAIN DENIES MAYO PREDICTS A BATTLE

Admiral Brought No Such Word From Europe About German Fleet, Daniels Insists.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14. — Secretary Daniels tonight emphasized, by reiteration, his statement of late last night to THE NEW YORK TIMES that there was no foundation whatever for printed statements that Admiral Mayo had returned to this country with the prediction that the German High Seas Fleet was about to emerge for a big naval battle in the North Sea.

The Secretary insisted that so far as the Navy Department was concerned it had no information indicating when the Germans might come out to seek battle, or whether they intended doing so at all. But it was learned that the British fleet and its naval allies in the North Sea were constantly ready to go after the German fleet any time it was ready to try conclusions. The prediction that the German fleet would "soon" try conclusions has been battledored around Washington and London for the last six weeks, but the German fleet has not backed up the prophets by "emerging" from its base at Wilhelmshaven.

There has been no real foundation for the predictions, according to information reaching the Navy Department, and most of the predictions have been based on speculation. The German Emperor visited the fleet base at Wilhelmshaven about six weeks ago, and that was when the recent crop of predictions of another big fleet action began. It has since developed that about the time that the Kaiser was at his fleet base, or shortly thereafter, there were mutinous conditions on some of his vessels, although the Kaiser spoke of the ability and readiness of his high seas fleet.

Admiral Mayo, it may be asserted, on the basis of what was learned from a high navy official tonight, did not return with any information indicating that a big naval battle would soon be fought.

"If the Germans intend to come out," said one high official tonight, "it is likely that there are two men in this world whom they would be the very last to take into their confidence in advance. One of them is Henry T. Mayo, Commander in Chief of the Atlantic fleet, and the other is the commander of the British main battleship fleet. The Germans now realize, after the battle of Jutland, that if the commander of the British battleship fleet had known in advance, only twenty-four hours, that the German fleet was going into the North Sea, the result of that battle would have been wholly different. As it was, the British fleet of dreadnought battleships arrived almost in time to wipe out the Germans.

"We do not know whether or when the German fleet is coming out of its hole, and do not expect the Germans to scatter that information in advance. On the contrary, they will naturally try to conceal the movements of the fleet, as well as the intentions of the Admiralty, as much as possible."

Hudson is Again the Mode In Fine Closed Cars

The leadership long held by Hudson as a builder of fine closed cars is more pronounced than ever this Fall. The new models just received from the factory are beautiful, faultless in finish and design—correct in every detail.

The individuality and smartness of the Hudson Limousines and Town Cars are reflected in more expensive custom-made bodies, for Hudson sets closed car mode.

This year the body lines are slightly changed, not extreme, but sufficiently different, so as to never appear commonplace. Rich, quiet colors with costly fittings of exquisite design characterize the interiors.

There is none of the sluggishness in Hudsons so generally found in cars of the closed type. The powerful Super-Six motor with its great flexibility and smoothness gives Hudson closed cars buoyancy, and a reserve strength that is sufficient for any emergency.

Reasonably prompt deliveries can be guaranteed if selections are made early.

Triangle,—

An Essay in Unscrambling

One of these days, I suppose, I may meet a man who doesn't confide to me the fact that his business (whether it be tinned peas, pianos or ships) is "different from other business."

For the life of me I can't see why my business is in any sense different from yours—whatever yours may be.

Each of us succeeds in just the measure to which he finds what most people want or what people want most,—and gives it to them. Sometimes,—as with electric light,—phonographs and moving pictures—the people didn't even know they wanted it—till the thing came. Yet, simple as the whole thing is, scarcely a day goes by that someone doesn't say to me:

"What a wonderful business you are in! How I wish I understood it!"

Well, here is the A B C of it, if you are interested. And, somehow, it doesn't look to me any more complicated than the candy business!

Similes are dangerous, but I'll try one; for that word "candy" is irresistible.

From the moment I yielded to the temptation pretty nearly everybody has had, and put money into a picture company (I think it was the Majestic Motion Picture Corporation) I set out to find the reason some pictures were so much more successful than others.

It was positively crude! The picture makers were making pictures to suit themselves, rather than their audiences. Fancy a man with a predilection for cocoanut going on and on with cocoanut cakes in a strongly chocolate community. Or the gum drop crank trying to crush the market in peppermints!

But it was worse than this; suppose the cocoanut man with a wry face made chocolates which he hated, because the chocolate candy shop across the street was making a hit!! Or, the gum drop maker wondering why a copy of the peppermint box and wrapping didn't hold the peppermint trade.

A Western picture, full of the big outdoors, would make a success. Promptly every producer sent out for revolvers and chaps; and Jersey City, Staten Island and Hohokus were "shot up, proper" for the screen.

Or a sweet faced girl in a pathetic little piece got the sympathy of the public.

Off went the chaps,—revolvers were at a discount and ginghams and curls were priceless.

Incidentally, the particular young lady who had "done it first" denied that it was either gingham or curls, and said, "Lo, it is I."

And the public—which likes to believe—(especially sweet young ladies in ginghams and curls) agreed.

Now the meat of all this is here. That it isn't the looks of the candy, nor its flavor, nor whether it chews or bites—it's the sugar the public wants.

So it isn't the West, its chaps and guns, nor even the sweet young girl.

Even the production (like the package in the candy case) isn't vital. I thought I had found what the sugar in the motion picture candy consisted of. So I got interested in another company; and the sugar theory worked.

There were quite a number of us by this time—two years ago—controlling a lot of successful "brands." They all belong to Triangle now—and the sugar is still busy.

To which you say:—

"Well, what of it?—So is the Steel Corporation."

This of it:

That one error of the motion picture business has been the superlative and explosive sale, for cash in advance, of hope, based either on the flavor or the package.

Triangle announcements are statements—after the fact.

UNDAUNTED BY DEFEAT IN CHICAGO, GIANTS FACE TODAY'S GAME CONFIDENTLY

Umpires—O'Loughlin, Klem, Evans, and Rigler.

The Giants rattled back to their native land late yesterday afternoon, glad to get among friends once more after the tumultuous, tempestuous baseball upheaval in Chicago on Saturday. If the White Sox believe that their sudden rally of the fifth game has disheartened the New York players they are only fooling themselves, for the Giants have never been more confident of winning the series than they are right now. McGraw and his men admit that they were easing along too confidently when they had such a big lead over the Sox. It was simple carelessness and too great assurance which upset all their plans in that last game. Even when the Sox were slamming Sallee in the seventh the New York players say that they never had the slightest fear that the Sox would come through.

Those who saw the thrilling drive of the Sox are still talking about it. There seems to be a whole lot of unnecessary hysteria in Chicago about the aggressiveness which was exhibited by both clubs in the exciting battle. There is a certain element of the Chicago fans who have tried to paint a bad case against McGraw's men on the charge of riding rough-shod over the White Sox players. Naturally the players were all under a severe strain. There were wordy battles and jumping on the base paths as in any close game, but no more. Both teams were fighting and fighting hard.

No Case Against Fletcher.

And, under the stress of such competition, the men did not handle each other with kid gloves. Chicago fans have tried to build a mountain out of a mole hill when they accuse Fletcher of trying to pick a fight with Manager Clarence Rowland after the eighth inning. The players had a few words and Umpire Evans told them to end it, and they did.

Before Saturday's game the Chicago players received orders to go into the bases for all they were worth. When Happy Felsch slid into second in the eighth he was faithfully carrying out these instructions, for he rode high toward Fletcher with his spikes gleaming. When Fletcher tagged him with the ball he tagged him good and hard as any player naturally would when such an attack is made on a base by a runner. Felsch was a pretty mussed up individual after Fletcher slapped the ball on him. Rowland made some remark about it to Fletcher after the inning, and that is all there was to the argument. One was as much to blame as the other.

If the White Sox are going to jump into the bases with feet flying, naturally the Giants are going to protect themselves. Before the hostile Chicago crowd, however, every move of the Giants is construed as a belligerent act, and they conduct themselves accordingly. This series is such a close, hard-fought battle that no one who knows anything about baseball is looking for child's play. But the cry which has gone up from Chicago about the Giants' rough tactics is inopportune and unfair.

White Sox Have No Criticism

The White Sox also got back to this town yesterday and after their wonderful assault on the Giants on Saturday Rowland's men have an abundance of confidence that they will take today's game and win the series. It was noticed that none of the criticism of the alleged rough play by the Giants has come from the White Sox players. They know that they have done their share of the nagging and have gone cut of their way to try to rattle the rival players. They have succeeded against Heinie Zimmerman, for the third baseman's play has been decidedly poor in this series. Zim has tried to take the hostile jeers of the Chicago crowd with fortitude, but the tough ordeal is plainly affecting his play.

Dave Robertson of the Giants has been the shining light of the series thus far with his great batting. Robbie has hit safely in every one of the five games of the series, a feat which has not been equaled by any other player in either club. Robertson's work has been a pleasant surprise for the Giants, for all season long the Southern slugger has been inclined to be indifferent in his batting performances.

Heading the list of players batting in runs stands Benny Kauff. Benny and his bat have driven four runs across the plate. Happy Felsch, McMullin, and Chick Gandil are next with three each. Eddie Collins, Joe Jackson, George Burns, and Bill Rariden have each driven in two runs, while John Collins, Buck Weaver, Sallee, Schupp, Holke, Robertson, and Risberg have each driven in one. The third-base play of McMullin has been a big surprise to the Giants, for they never ranked him as a player of the first order, and in this series he has been playing rings around Heinie Zim. On neither team has there been any more polished, more graceful, or more sportsmanlike playing than the second-base work of Eddie Collins.

Benton Will Probably Pitch.

Rube Benton, who shut the Sox out in the first New York game, will undoubtedly be McGraw's selection in today's game and, as the southpaw is in the best of condition, the Giants confidently anticipate another victory. Benton has had a good rest and by using him today McGraw seems pretty sure of carrying away the game and evening up the series. The New York leader gathered his players together on the trip back to this city and told them no matter how far they got in front in the future game or games, not to take it for granted that the contest was won. He laid down the old axiom of the game, "Take nothing for granted in baseball."

Rowland will send Red Faber against the Giants because the cascade twirler showed in fine form in the short time he pitched against the Giants in the last innings of Saturday's game. He had a world of speed and his fast one was breaking with a tantalizing hop. Faber believes that he can beat the Giants again, and in the event of his not being able to live up to his own and Rowland's expectations Chicago will still have Eddie Cicotte to send back at them Tuesday in the event of the Giants' winning.

No Fear of Cicotte's Twirling.

While Chicago seems to have unbounded faith in Cicotte, the Giants do not regard him any longer with the least bit of fear. While he was in the game Saturday McGraw's men had no trouble in hitting him. They were not pounding his mysterious knuckle ball very much, to be sure, but they were hitting him enough to push an occasional run over the plate.

McGraw now feels that his players have hit their batting stride and that nothing can stop them. For the last three games they have been pounding the ball hard and have been tearing their way through the White Sox pitching with long hits. This they expect to continue in the next two games. Far from being unduly chagrined over their defeat on Saturday, the Giants blame it on their own overconfidence, and when they go against the Sox today McGraw has advised every one of them to regard the Sox as the most dangerous of contenders until the last man is out.

If the betting can be taken as anything of consequence in this world's series, the Giants will carry off the honors this afternoon, for they are favorites at 5 to 4. Betting, however, has gone awry in several instances as being a forecast of results.

Whatever may have happened to the Giants in the first two games, no matter how silly they looked in the Windy City, they awoke to sound and sure baseball here, and the Sox, by the way, looked no better here than the Giants did in Chicago. There is a feeling on the part of the fans that there will be a repetition today. But, on the other hand, there is not to be found a world of confidence in the talking of money as far as the seventh game is concerned, even should the Giants win this afternoon.

The series still shows the Sox favorites at 2½ to 1, which bespeaks a lack of confidence in the Giants to continually play an uphill struggle to a successful conclusion.

HAYES DRIVES SQUAD HARD.

Columbia's Hill and Dale Candidates Have Workout Daily.

Captain Al Huelsenbeck of the Columbia cross-country team has had about thirty men reporting for the daily grind on the track at South Field. With four of last year's harriers—Huelsenbeck, Larson, Shepard, and Knox—the outlook is quite promising, for, in addition to this quartet, Moss, Sarlin, and Ward have shown good form in the first practices.

Johnny Hayes, the Olympic champion, is again in charge of the squad. He expects to enter a strong team in the Intercollegiates as well as in the several dual meets that are being planned with Pennsylvania, Colgate, Rochester, City College, Lafayette, and others.

The freshmen are now represented by ten candidates, and will have a team that will meet a number of prominent high and prep school distance men.

At present the squad is running daily on South Field and down Riverside Drive, but beginning next week they will journey each day to Van Courtlandt Park to get the actual hill and dale practice.

PLAN TO RIG AMERICA.

Boston Yachtsmen Want to Test Old Craft Against Modern.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 14.—Local yachtsmen are planning to fit the old America, the yacht that brought the America's Cup to the United States from England, with a rig such as she had in her palmy days and test her speed against modern creations of the sailing craft designer.

Saved from a lowly career as a freighter by C. H. W. Foster and other members of an Eastern yacht club syndicate, the America is destined eventually to be laid up as a marine museum. In recent years she has been at South Boston. The syndicate that bought her, to prevent her from carrying lumber, is anxious to see her under sail again, as she was when her speed thrilled two nations.

After she won the Queen's Cup she was bought by a titled Englishman because of her speed and her lines remained unaltered. Her hull was reconstructed so that the form might not be changed. Again when the yacht was rebuilt by the United States Government after being raised from a Southern river, great precautions were taken to preserve the original design.

In the eighties, however, great changes were made in hull and rig by Edward Burgess, but the old lines were taken off and preserved by Arthur Binney, whose plans have been furnished to the syndicate.

GIRL HARRIERS TO RACE.

Co-Eds at Penn State to Compete in Cross-Country Contest.

STATE COLLEGE, Penn., Oct. 14.—Girls of the sophomore and freshman classes at the Pennsylvania State College are to meet in a cross-country run. The co-eds will cover a two-mile course over hill and dale, selected by C. W. Martin, the Penn State 'Varsity track team coach. A permanent trophy has been offered for the contest. The name of the girl winning the race, and her time, will be engraved on the silver cup, as well as the numerals of the victorious class. No limit has been placed on the number of entries, but only the first twenty of each team to finish will count in the scoring. With the meet fixed for Oct. 27, the candidates for the interclass contest are training daily for the event.

RACING FOR NEW ORLEANS.

Word has been received from New Orleans that the Winter race meet is assured. Joseph A. ## IRVIN COBB AVOIDS PREDICTING RESULT

Bring Ambulance if the Giants Lose, Wine if They Win, He Says.

By IRVIN S. COBB.

SOMEWHERE IN NEW YORK, EN ROUTE, Oct. 14.—To a writing person, conscientiously intent on handling the assignment to the best of his humble abilities, the job of covering a world's series offers this complicated situation:

During the games there is so much happening to write about that ye scribe almost brings nervous collapse upon himself trying to tell the tale and tally of the shifting proceedings, and between the games there is so little to write about that he almost brings on nervous collapse trying to find something with which to fill up his allotted space and prove to his cruel taskmaster, the editor of the sporting page, that he is neither a trifler nor a professional flirt nor yet a slacker.

Now you take, for fit example of the latter condition, the scene aboard this train as it goes flitting through the peaceful Sabbath landscape of the Mohawk Valley headed toward New York, the Polo Grounds, and the sixth game. Almost without exception the passengers are persons connected temporarily or permanently with the game—baseball writers, baseball players, and baseball officials. Is baseball the prevalent topic? It is not.

In the club sleeper the White Soxs mainly lie curled up in languid heaps with windrows of discarded Sunday newspapers piled about them. The officials who are connected with Mr. Comiskey's plant have shut themselves up in staterooms to smoke and doze. The newspaper men are scattered through the cars, some engaged in that phase of literary endeavor so dear to the heart of true newspaper men—making up expense accounts—and the rest deeply concerned with industriously doing nothing at all, absolutely whatsoever. The fonts of inspiration have run dry as bones.

None is talking about baseball, past or impending. None apparently is thinking about baseball. Seemingly all have ceased to wonder why McGraw should have permitted Sallee to stay in the box yesterday at Chicago after the White Legs began to pound the earth out from under Slim's long and slender feet. It would seem that this is destined to remain one of the unsolved puzzles of the ages. The ways of a great manager are past finding out.

The one outstanding fact for consideration of today's Eastward-hoing travelers is that tomorrow will be another day and another game. Not being a seventh son of a seventh sunfish like Hughie Fullerton and other readers of the tea-grounds, the constellations and the dope, I shall not undertake at this time to prophesy the outcome of the sixth encounter.

I merely reiterate that tomorrow afternoon, weather permitting, there will be a game of baseball at the Polo Grounds between the Chicago White Socks and the New York Giants. Game called at 2 o'clock. Umpires called whenever Shortstop Fletcher loses his temper. Ambulance called at four-thirty or thereabouts in case the Giants lose. Wine clerks called all along Broadway from 6 P. M. until further notice in case the Giants win and make it a tie again. Police reserves called the next afternoon at 2, provided there is a seventh game.

SOCCER TEAMS IN TIE.

New York F. C. and Scottish-Americans Hold Each Other Scoreless.

A record crowd of soccer enthusiasts, in which were many American and Canadian soldiers in uniform, saw the New York Football Club eleven and the Scottish-Americans of Newark battle for ninety minutes yesterday without scoring in the National League fixture at Lenox Oval. James Ford, the international player, came over from Camp Dix to help out the Scots. Good defensive work by the Scots in the last half of play saved them from defeat. In the excitement at the close New York missed two chances and the Scots one at open goals.

Clan MacDuff's redoubtable soccer team scored a handsome 2—0 victory over Greenpoint in the State League game at Flood's Oval in Brooklyn, yesterday, despite the fact that they lost the services of John Reilly, their goalkeeper, for the last twenty minutes of the game. In a desperate rally by the losers, Reilly had his arm badly dislocated, and this may keep him out of the game for two or three weeks. Stahl and Shannon shot the goals in the second half.

The lineup:

| Greenpoint, 0. | Positions. | Clan MacDuff, 2. |
|---|---|---|

Playing their second State League match at the City College Stadium, the Overseas Wanderers defeated the Continentals by the score of 2 goals to 0, yesterday. Irvine tallied in the first half and McCrickard in the second.

A hard-fought game in the Metropolitan League series was played yesterday at the Prospect Park Parade Grounds between the La Sultanas of Astoria and the Longfellows. The Sultanas won by 4 goals to 3. Lee shot three of the victors' goals and Captain Duffy one. Jacklin was the first to score for the Longfellows in the opening half, at the close of which the score was 1-1. Lomas negotiated two penalties for the losers in the last ten minutes of play.

The Clan MacDonalds journeyed to Yonkers for their State League game with the Yonkers Caledonians yesterday and came back with a clean-cut 4-1 victory. Diekman shot three of the goals for the clansmen and Craig one. Salmond tallied for the home team. At half time the visitors led by 2-0.

Paterson won the National League fixture from the Disston A. A., at Tacony, Philadelphia, by 2 goals to 1, after having established a 1-0 lead in the first half. Morrel opened for Paterson and Lynch equalized from a penalty. Gradwell shot the winning goal with only two minutes to play.

EVANS LOSES AT GOLF.

Although of Beaten Pair He Makes Two Remarkable Rounds.

DETROIT, Oct. 14.—Charles Evans, Jr., of Chicago, was on the losing end of a golf match played here today for the benefit of the Red Cross. Paired with Hugh Vaughn, of Detroit, he was beaten by Wilbur Oakes and Jimmy Standish of Detroit, 5 and 4, in a 36-hole match. Evans' play, however, was splendid. On a strong course he equaled or bettered par on 27 holes.

PAT McDONALD IS VICTOR.

Gathers 13 Points in Weight Events at Irish Federation Meet.

A total of 13 points for the three tests comprising the event gave Pat McDonald of the New York A. C., Olympic and national champion with the sixteen-pound shot, first prize in the all-around weight-throwing competition, which served as the feature of the track and field sports of the Irish Federation of the U. S. A. at Celtic Park yesterday. McDonald carried off first honors in the shot-put and fifty-six-pound weight event, and finished second in the sixteen-pound hammer throw to Pat Ryan, Irish-American A. C., who holds the record for this competition. Ryan was second in the all-around score with 11 points, and following him came Pat Conway, a clubmate, with 6 tallies, and Pat O'Connor, unattached, with 5.

The event was somewhat of a disappointment to many of the 3,000 spectators who turned out to see the country's leading weight men in action. Matt McGrath, weight-throwing champion, was another contestant for the honors, and it was with his efforts that the disappointment came. McGrath did not try for the honors of the shot-put, but in the other two events the champion with the "56" made an effort and all his attempts went foul, so that he failed to score any points for the test.

McDonald showed best at his favorite event, the 16-pound shot, in which he made a winning heave of 47 feet, 6 inches. This was nearly seven feet better than the distance credited to his nearest competitor, Pat Ryan, who had 40 feet, 8 inches. In the 56-pound weight event McDonald, in gaining first place, tossed the weight for a distance of 37 feet, 2½ inches, and five and one-half inches behind him came Ryan with 36 feet, 9 inches. Ryan carried away chief honors in the hammer throw with an effort of 176 feet, 6 inches easily out-throwing McDonald who was second with 151 feet, 9 inches.

The four track events failed to come up to expectations, in that the prominent runners who were advertised as starters in the 1,000-yard special scratch race, failed to appear. The efforts of the athletes in the other events, however, furnished the large crowd with a deal of interesting competition. Jack R. Sellers of the New York A. C., showed his ability in the 1,000-yard event, coming from behind on the last lap to win from George Buttner, Jersey Harriers A. A., by a small margin.

The summaries:

220-Yard Dash, Handicap.—Won by M. Voelke, Morningside A. C., (10 yards;) Walter Powe, Alpha P. C. C., (5 yards,) second; F. McLoughlin, Pastime A. C., (11 yards,) third. Time—0.24.

SCHIPPELL LEADS HARRIERS

Wins Catholic A. L. Road Race from a Large Field.

A large field of harriers competed for the first prize in the Catholic Athletic League's three and one-quarter mile road race over the St. Anslem's A. C. course yesterday. The winner was W. Schippell, unattached, who got away with an allowance of two minutes and covered the distance in 19:20. Schippell was closely pushed over the entire journey by J. McAvoy, St. Anslem's A. C., who had the same handicap allowance and finished second right on the heels of the victor.

The order of finish follows:

McNEIL FINISHES IN VAN.

Presentation Club's Representative First in Road Race.

James McNeil, the Presentation Club's fleet road runner, annexed the place of honor yesterday in the five and one-half mile road race of the Brooklyn A. A., held through the streets of Brooklyn. McNeil judged his pace well from the start of the race, and, although he was followed closely by L. Kaufmann, Brooklyn A. A., during the early stages of the event, the Presentation Club runner's superiority became manifest about a mile from the finish, when McNeil increased his pace and easily slipped away from Kaufmann, who finished second. The victor's time was 31:13.

The order of finish follows:

James McNeil, Presentation Club, 31:13; L. Kaufmann, Brooklyn A. A., 31:30; M. Gross, Brooklyn A. A., 31:47; B. Finkelstein, Brooklyn A. A., 32:23; B. Moore, Brooklyn A. A., 32:31; J. S. Sheehan, Presentation Club, 33:14; L. Salome, Newton High School, 33:41; A. Colombo, Brooklyn A. A., 34:02; E. Deneroff, Sonine Club, 34:14; C. Willing, Brooklyn A. A., 34:26.

A. annual cross-country run would be held over the Van Cortlandt Park course of six miles on Nov. 24. The event this year will have a military flavor, and invitations to take part in the run have been extended to the soldiers of camps in and about New York.

It was decided that Charles Halstead Mapes of Columbia University, will officiate as referee at the run, and A. J. H. McGrath will attend to the details of the event. The officers elected for the ensuing year were: President, Robert Fleming Blair, Yale; Treasurer, Joseph Alfred Esquirol; Acting Secretary, Hubert Grant Larson.

DRAW FOR SOCCER CUP.

American Football Association Holds Annual Meeting.

At a meeting of the American Football Association held on Saturday night at the Continental Hotel, Newark, N. J., the principal business was the draw for the annual cup competition. All the prominent soccer clubs in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New England have entered for the competition this season, totaling twenty-nine, which compares with thirty-seven who battled for the cup last year. The pairings of the New York, New Jersey and Connecticut teams for the first round, which must be played off on Oct. 27 and 28, on the ground of the first named club, resulted as follows:

Babcock & Wilcox vs. West New York Blues, Alley Boys vs. West Hudsons, New York vs. Clan MacDonalds, I. R. T. Strollers vs. Passaic A. C., Bunker Hill vs. Paterson, Bridgeport City vs. Clan MacDuffs, Scottish American vs. Kinley F. C. Jersey A. C. drew a bye.

YOUTH SURPRISES KAMMER AT GOLF

A. L. Walker, Jr., Interscholastic Champion, Takes Staten Island Title by 1 Up.

Displaying to a record gallery golf of exceptional merit, A. L. Walker, Jr., of Richmond County, the nineteen-year-old Eastern interscholastic champion, yesterday defeated A. F. Kammer, Fox Hills, by 1 up after thirty-six holes of play for the Staten Island golf championship at the Richmond County Club links. Kammer, a four-time winner of the title and a member of the last Metropolitan Golf Association Lesley Cup team, finished the morning round 2 up on his young opponent, but could not hold the advantage.

It was a long putt on the thirty-sixth green which snuggled into the cup that brought triumph to the young Richmond County expert. Kammer had squared the match with a brilliant birdie 2 at the thirty-fifth, a pitch over a pond, and appeared to be headed for the title once more, but at the well-guarded home hole Walker was on in two well placed shots and followed by dropping a twenty-foot putt for a birdie 3. Kammer got his par 4, but it was useless.

Staten Islanders are firm in their opinion that never in the eighteen years of championship struggles for this title has there been a finer match. Kammer began the morning journey by winning four out of the first five holes, having a birdie at the fourth and equaling par on the first, second, and fifth. Walker's long drives regained two holes at the long sixth and seventh, but the short eighth went to Kammer and the ninth was halved, turning Kammer 3 up. Walker was out in 42 to 40 for Kammer.

On the second nine they halved the first three holes in par, but Walker needed an extra putt at the thirteenth, which made Kammer 4 up on the match. Kammer was in trouble at the short fifteenth, which Walker won in par 3, and again at the sixteenth Walker's par gained that hole. Kammer won the seventeenth and the eighteenth was halved, leaving Kammer 2 up at the finish of the morning journey.

Undismayed, Walker began the second round of the course by winning the first two holes and squaring the match. The next three were halved and for the second time of the day at the 547-yard sixth Walker sank a birdie 5, giving him a lead of 1 up for the first time. Kammer won the seventh to even things again, but Walker's pitch to the short eighth landed dead and gave him a birdie 2 to win that hole. Again Kammer pulled up by winning the ninth and they turned for home exactly even.

Walker won the twelfth and thirteenth, when Kammer messed up his putts, halved the fourteenth and lost the fifteenth by using an extra putt. The sixteenth was halved and then it was that Kammer dropped across a pond at the seventeenth to within a foot of the cup and squared the match with a birdie 2. Walker arose to championship heights at the last hole with his brilliant long putt.

PLAY AT OAKLAND COURSE.

Golf Championship Continues Despite Loss of Clubhouse.

The complete devastation by fire of the clubhouse of the Oakland Golf Club on Saturday did not interfere yesterday with the continuation of play in the club championship. The Handicap Committee, consisting of W. C. Morris, H. M. Popham, and Robert H. White, decided to continue the event as originally scheduled. The members yesterday found accommodations in the stone building used as a workshop by Charles W. Singleton, the club professional and his staff of assistants. This arrangement will continue, at least temporarily, and the professional will attend to his work in the shop formerly used for trap-shooting appurtenances. A meeting of the Board of Directors will be held tomorrow night to provide temporary arrangements until a new clubhouse can be erected.

The championship proceeded through the qualifying round and the first round at match play on Friday. The next match round in the two divisions and for the beaten eights in both divisions was scheduled for Saturday, but it was optional with the contestants to play that day or yesterday. In the championship division on Saturday one match was played. W. V. Swords eliminated Lewis M. Richmond, the title holder, by 3 and 1.

Dr. W. Stuart Brown yesterday defeated F. Gerkin. The matches between Charles G. Meyer and H. L. Bogert and C. T. Brokaw and Dr. M. Carpenter were postponed.

In the second beaten eight H. S. Stearns beat H. M. Popham, 3 and 1. H. C. Woodruff announced that he would be unable to continue in the championship and defaulted to H. L. Angell. The match between R. H. Hoadley and L. B. Malone was postponed and E. S. Malone drew a bye.

E. F. Oates will be a finalist in the golf championship of the Flushing Country Club, having defeated A. S. Chatfield in the semi-final, by 2 up. The contest was one of the most closely contested in the championship series. The match between R. H. Boyd and W. A. Mantle was postponed and will be played during the week. W. C. Caulkins won the second of a series of handicaps yesterday. His card was 97, 26—71. H. Payton was second with 103, 24—79, and C. B. Martin third, with 100, 18—82.

Dwight Rockwell won the championship of the Great Neck Golf Club yesterday when he defeated R. E. Edwards in the thirty-six hole final, by 8 and 6. At the end of the morning round they were all even, but in the afternoon Edwards could not get his stride.

YALE GOLF CLUB PLANNED.

Graduates Being Canvassed Relative to Forming Association.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 14.—Announcement was made in yesterday's Yale Daily News that Yale graduates throughout the country are being canvassed as to their opinion on the advisability of forming a Yale Golf Association. It is proposed to hold two tournaments yearly, the first one the latter part of this month.

There will be no initiation fees. The annual dues will be $5. The members of the committee making the proposal include G. S. Chappell, '99; E. H. Hart, '94 S.; C. C. Paulding, '89; E. Q. Trowbridge, '99, and A. E. Walradt, '80, with headquarters at the New York Yale Club.

Covington Gets Golf Title.

H. W. Covington yesterday annexed the golf championship title of the Haworth Country Club, when he defeated E. Geyer in the final play for the honor by a score of 5 up and 3 to play. The final match in the play for the cross season tournament honors was also held and resulted in a tie between C. C. Nobles and R. W. Porter at thirty-six holes.

Boxing Bouts Tonight.

Military A. C., Brooklyn.—Harry Pierce vs. Mike Smith; Teddy Jacobs vs. Young Limbo. Both ten-round bouts.

Vanderbilt A. C., Brooklyn.—K. O. Lew Williams vs. Johnny Kid Alberts. Ten rounds.

WEST VA. TO MEET GREEN.

Mountaineers from South Preparing for Dartmouth.

MORGANTOWN, Oct. 14.—Next Saturday West Virginia will invade the North for the second time this year and all followers of the Mountaineer eleven are hoping that the men will return from the Dartmouth game as successful as when they went to Annapolis a week ago Saturday and took into camp the Midshipmen, breaking Gilmore Dobie's record of victories incidentally, and yesterday when they beat the Indians.

The game with Dartmouth at Hanover next Saturday will be the second meeting between the Mountaineers of West Virginia and the men from New England. Last Fall West Virginia took the same trip, playing on Oct. 25, and the result was a tie at 7—7.

West Virginia will have a powerful backfield in Rodgers, King, Lentz and Harris. Rodgers and King attracted wide attention by their work at Dartmouth last year, but Harris and Lentz are newcomers, and with the first two named from what is considered here easily the best backfield combination that the Mountaineers have ever had. West Virginia's line is not as strong, relatively, as her backfield, but being composed of strong young players, all new men to the 'Varsity this year with the exception of Captain Bailey at centre and Ice at tackle, they have been and still are developing rapidly and by the time Dartmouth is met should present a strong front. Most gains that have been made against West Virginia this year have been through the medium of line rushes and it will be to attempt to strengthen this department that West Virginia's coaches will work during the week.

McNAMARA LEADS CYCLISTS.

Wins 25-Mile Open Point Race from Field of 34 at Newark.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Oct. 14.—Reggie McNamara, the sturdy Australian cyclist, won a twenty-five-mile open point race from a field of thirty-four starters at the Velodrome here this afternoon. McNamara had the low score of 27 points; Alfred Goullet was second with 33 points; Frank Kramer third wth 35 points; Lloyd Thomas fourth with 35 points, and Charley Piercey fifth with 37 points. Although thirty-four riders started, only nine finished. The pace was very fast, the distance being covered in 55:37.

McNamara, riding with Bob Spears, won the two-mile tandem race, and Menus Bedell was returned victor in the half-mile handicap. The two-mile open for the amateurs went to Gus Lang, of the Bay View Wheelmen.

CHINESE PLAYS AT QUARTER.

Rensselaer Poly Team Has a Smiling Son of the Far East.

TROY, N. Y., Oct. 14.—Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute has the only full-blooded Chinese on a college eleven in the East, as far as can be ascertained. His name is Pao-Shun Kwan and he plays the all-important position of quarterback. Kwan had his first opportunity to test his football generalship in the game with New York University two weeks ago and revealed his skill at handling the ball as well as directing the team.

Kwan is lithe and agile and no matter how thick the play wears a constant smile. Kwan is fleet-footed and whenever he undertakes to carry the ball manages to dodge his way through the opposition for a gain. The Chinese had his early athletic training during his prep school days at Mercersburg Academy, and last year held the quarterback berth on the freshmen eleven at Rensselaer. During practice he usually handles the second team, but, after his showing in actual 'Varsity company and intercollegiate competition it is expected that he will get more frequent opportunities to direct the college eleven.

HAVERFORD TO MEET NAVY.

Quakers Have Only One Member of Last Year's Undefeated Team.

HAVERFORD, Penn., Oct. 14.—With Captain Gilmour, the veteran left tackle, back as the only 'Varsity man left from last year's undefeated eleven, things looked pretty dark for Haverford's football chances at the start of the season, but prospects have begun to pick up and the type of football played in the opening games with Stevens and Delaware promises Haverford a creditable eleven. The schedule from last Winter is intact except that a game is scheduled with the Naval Academy at Annapolis to be played on Oct. 27 instead of the Trinity match.

The schedule is as follows:

Oct. 20—Ursinus College, at home; 27—Naval Academy, at Annapolis; Nov. 3—Franklin and Marshall, at Lancaster; 10—Lebanon Valley College, at home; 17—Johns Hopkins University, at home; 24—Swarthmore College, at Swarthmore.

Walter P. Shipley has been just elected Captain of Haverford's soccer team, which has always been a strong contender in the Intercollegiate League with the greatest total of championships to its credit. Three matches with the University of Pennsylvania and two with Cornell University are among those on its schedule now.

HARD BOUT FOR LEONARD.

Champion to Face Britton at Harlem Sporting Club.

Attention of local boxing enthusiasts is now centred about the outcome of the coming ten-round bout between Benny Leonard, world's lightweight champion, and Jack Britton of Chicago, who formerly held the welterweight title. The contest is arranged for the Harlem S. C. Friday night and has attracted more attention than any other match that Leonard has participated in since acquiring his title from Freddie Welsh. It will probably be the last "big" match that will be held before the death of the Frawley law, which will be wiped off the statutes on Nov. 15.

The men have agreed to meet at 139 pounds ringside, and at this figure Leonard feels reasonably safe in taking on his heavier opponent. In fact, the more confident of Leonard's supporters are not backward in advancing the theory that the lightweight title-holder will win the bout by a knockout.

Among those who incline to the belief that Leonard will stop Britton is Billy Gibson, manager of the lightweight champion, who bases his opinion on Leonard's recent string of knockout victories, starting with Freddie Welsh and including Ritchie Mitchell, Johnny Kilbane, featherweight champion; Leo Johnson, the colored boxer, and a host of other dangerous boxers.

Columbia Ready for Union.

Columbia's 'Varsity eleven will play Union this week in the first scheduled game of the 1917 season on South Field. Union will probably outweigh the Morningside collegians, as she has an unusually heavy eleven this year, but the New Yorkers have a line-plunging and aerial attack that is expected to worry the men from up State. As Union was defeated by Amherst 29 to 6, the Columbia men are looking forward to an easy contest.

LUSTRUS M'KINNEY SPEEDWAY VICTOR

Captures 1:09 Pacing Event After Close Finishes with Automatism and Baron A.

The largest crowd that has turned out to witness the weekly trotting and pacing events on the Harlem Speedway, in the Fall meeting of the Road Drivers' Association, was treated yesterday to the closest brush seen on the half-mile stretch since the beginning of the present meeting. In the first heat of the 1:09 pacing event a field of five horses got away at the start, and they ran neck and neck in three heats, the bay gelding Lustrus McKinney being the winner.

Especially keen was the finish in the first heat, in which W. J. O'Neil's Automatism and C. P. Cramer's bay stallion, Baron A., flashed past the judges' stand almost on equal terms. Some spectators were of the opinion that Baron A. had won by the proverbial nose, but the judges picked Automatism. Lustrus McKinney, a newcomer on the Speedway, driven by Kearns, came through in the second heat by a scant margin, and the Kearns entry again showed best in the third heat as well. Both heats, however, furnished close finishes, and in each Baron A. was second. Automatism's first place in the initial heat, however, gave the O'Neil horse second ribbon, and Baron A. got third.

The only other event which went to three heats was the 1:11 trot, in which O'Neil's Kinetic carried off the blue ribbon.

Another interesting race was the match between the veteran J. A. Murphy's two pacers, Mittie Bedworth, a chestnue mare, now conceded to be the champion pacer of the Speedway, and Clover Patch, the brown mare which has held the title for three years. Mittie Bedworth, handled by Jesse Smith, showed the way to Clover Patch, which was driven by the veteran Dave McClary, in straight heats, in 1:05 and 1:05¼, respectively. Smith also guided Marion Toddington, another Murphy horse, to victory in the 1:05 trotting event, showing the way to J. J. Morris's Nell McLintock.

In the colt class J. F. O'Shea's promising young gelding won its third successive victory, defeating both Miss Wiggins and Josephine B. Libby Medium, making its first appearance in the Fall meeting, scored an impressive victory in the 1:13 trotting event, Fox Dean, A. T. Meckel's horse, and J. Callahan's Princess May trailing in the order named in each of the two heats.

Fifty sets of boxing gloves, ten soccer footballs, and ten basket balls will be donated to the soldiers by the Knights of Columbus.

Masters in Consultation Chess.

A consultation chess match of international interest began last night at F. J. Marshall's Divan, when Marshall, champion of the United States, and Basil Soldatenkov, a member of the special Russian commission to the United States, paired against D. Janowski, the French champion, who has Charles Jaffe, the Russian expert, as his partner. The contest will probably extend over the greater part of the week. Marshall and Soldatenkov, playing the white pieces, elected a queen's pawn opening, to which the rival pair replied with knight to king's bishop third.

A DAUGHTER OF EVE AND GRACE GEORGE

The Playhouse Company Opens in an English Study of Wayward Woman.

After a year's interval Grace George returned last Saturday to her tenancy of The Playhouse with a largely remodeled "Playhouse company." The piece with which she opened her season of "repertory" is by Alicia Ramsey, and is called "Eve's Daughter." It is a study of impulsive and wayward feminine character. But in one important particular it did violence to the reputation of the lady who first raised Cain.

The Old Eve, it will be remembered, taking counsel of the Zeitgeist of that time, nicked a large bite out of the apple, munching it cheerfully; and then, with the full courage of her attitude as a New Woman, she gave Old Adam the core. The mortal taste brought death into the world and all our woe; but no one can ever say that the great mother of all of us was not game.

This daughter of Eve had far deeper provocation than her ancestress. Instead of a properly landscaped garden, she lived in an English family which was ruled over with storms of Bible texts, by as passionately, virtuous, and tyrannical a father as ever you saw. Having himself, in his youth, had a fling at the pippins, he was especially tyrannical and biblical with Eve. He knew the evil of her heart, or thought he did, and all that the serpent Zeitgeist was whispering in it. At the end of the first act he died of an overconsumption of dinner and an overexpulsion of texts—leaving Eve a beggarly £3,000.

Her first gesture toward the apple was magnificent. The following act disclosed her living in sables and a London "flat." It was appointed like a gilded palace; but it was a palace of virtue. In one short year, however, she had reached the end of her $15,000, and then it was that the serpent began to get in his really fine work. Tempted, but still wavering, she started for Paris in company with a young lordling of questionable habits.

The last act disclosed the two in a Dover hotel, held up overnight by a Channel storm. The Serpent was still tempting, and Eve still wavering. Her girlhood lover burst in to rescue her, and then retired, quite baffled, as it seemed, by the lordling. The Serpent appeared to be on the verge of his triumph; but, as it happened, the hangings of an alcove were withdrawn, and on the wall was disclosed one of her father's favorite texts, worked in worsted. Thereupon she reverted to type—the type of her father, not of her mother, Eve. All doubt of the outcome vanished. Aided by a ruse on the part of her girlhood lover, the lordling was foiled and routed. The many admirers of Grace George, who would be pained if anything went amiss with her on the stage, were spared in their tenderest sensibilities.

To those whose primary interest is in plays, however, the event did not seem so auspicious. Effective dramas and many effective acting parts have been made out of erring daughters who really err. Like them or not as one will, that is the fact of the case. But the erring daughter who merely wabbles and is yanked back from the abyss by chance and the clever contrivance of the author has most of the unpleasantness of her tribe and none of their effectiveness in the theatre. When that worsted Bible text was disclosed, and wrought upon Eve like a goddess from the machine, the audience laughed outright—very discourteously, of course, but irresistibly.

In many of its lines the play is admirably written, and the fundamental conception of the characters of father and daughter is well psychologized and interesting. The one suffered in the acting, however, from overemphasis—as did, indeed, the entire first act. To the portrayal of the heroine Grace George lent her utmost charm and her rare and delicate intelligence. But the world has not yet produced a viable drama which centres in a vacillating character, and of all species of vacillation this particular one is most unsympathetic.

SAMUEL GARDNER PLAYS.

Young Artist Gives a Recital at Aeolian Hall.

Starting the season's first full week of daily music at Aeolian Hall was a violin recital yesterday by Samuel Gardner, a young artist well known for some years, and one whose bearing upon the stage commended him to his audience no less than did a singularly pure style and ability to draw beautiful tone. The song-like quality was conspicuous in melodious passages of the Paganini concerto in D, though some roughnesses appeared in the more rapid technical embroideries of its themes in Wieniawski's version.

Mr. Gardner, indeed, chose half his program of such double authorship, of works either revised or else adapted to the violin by other musicians down to Kreisler's arrangements of Shubert and Couperin. There were later numbers of Zsolt, Gliere and Arbos, an introductory fugue by Tartini, and the concerto in G minor, Bach-Nachez.

The last named was given with the help of a small orchestra, including Conrad Held, Robert Toedt, Joseph Fuchs and William Kroll, violins; Cyril Towbin and Gerald Kunz, violas; Herman Sezely, 'cello; Richard Cherkasky, bass, and Edward Rechlin, organ.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Jesse Lynch Williams's comedy, "Why Marry?" which the Selwyns are producing, will begin an engagement at Cohan's Grand Opera House, Chicago, on Nov. 4. The company includes Nat Goodwin, Arnold Daly, Edmund Breese, Estelle Winwood, Ernest Lawford, and Beatrice Beckley.

Julia Arthur last night terminated a coast-to-coast vaudeville tour in St. Louis, and probably will be seen soon in a new play.

Margaret Greene and Henry Sharp have been added to the cast of "Jubilee Drax," in which Walker Whiteside will be starred.

Lenore Ulrich, appearing in "Tiger Rose," will hereafter be known as Lenore Ulric.

The Misses Irene and Violet Marcellus of the Moller Dancers have been engaged for the ballet which Adolf Bolm is staging in the Century revue, "Miss 1917."

The first dress rehearsal of "The Old Country" will take place at the Broadhurst Theatre today. The play, with William Faversham as the star, will open at the Thirty-ninth Street on Oct. 29.

A service flag bearing a star for each of the eighty-seven men who have enlisted from the Hippodrome will soon be hung in front of that playhouse.

John S. O'Brien has been added to the cast of "The Torches," which will open at the Bijou a week from tonight.

THEDA BARA AS CLEOPATRA.

With Much Rolling of Eyes She Portrays "the Siren of All Ages."

Cleopatra of Egypt was among the earliest of the vampires of history, if not the earliest, and it was therefore but a matter of time until the siren Theda Bara should duly attend to the transfer of that temptress to the movie screen. The result is "Cleopatra," an uncommonly fine picture which was unreeled for the first time at the Lyric Theatre last night before an audience which included the dazzling Miss Bara herself. The star, by dint of much rolling of eyes and many other manoeuvres, contributes a thoroughly successful portrait of "the serpent of the Nile, the siren of the ages, and the eternal feminine." in the words of the screen, and thus does the ill-starred Queen of Egypt become the well-starred queen of movies.

The story of Cleopatra's many loves needs but the slightest elaboration to make it the finest sort of film fare, and movie fans are certain to flock to it. From a scenic standpoint, also, it is quite a triumph for the director. The Sphinx, the pyramids and a goodly section of Rome are duly duplicated, and the larger scenes are handled in a way that suggests D. W. Griffith. The naval battle at Actium is made most impressive, and the handling of the chariots also furnishes many a thrilling moment.

Miss Bara, to quote the program, "wears fifty distinctively different costumes," many of which are so thoroughly in attune with the period that they are likely to cause not a little comment. In addition to the star, the film enlists the services of Fritz Leiber as Caesar, Thurston Hall as Antony, and Henri de Vries, the Dutch actor, as Octavius. The picture was photographed in California during last Summer.

At the Strand Theatre Billie Burke was seen for the first time yesterday afternoon in "Arms and the Girl," and "The Co-respondent," with Elaine Hammerstein in the leading rôle, began an engagement at the Broadway. Charles Ray, in "The Son of His Father," is the new attraction at the Rialto, and Alice Brady, in "A Maid of Belgium," opened at the Park on Saturday.

LAUDER SINGS FOR SOLDIERS

His Tour of American Camps Begins at Governors Island.

Harry Lauder began doing his bit in America yesterday when he spoke and sang to a large assemblage of officers and privates in the Casual Camp on Governors Island. Mr. Lauder arrived in this country on Friday, and yesterday a special delegation of officers from the island visited him at the office of his manager, William Morris, and invited him to give a concert, an invitation which he quickly accepted, as he had already announced his intention of giving all his spare time from his theatrical engagements to the soldiers in the various camps. A number of opera singers under the management of Max Rabinoff also took part in the concert, as did Julius Tannen, a monologist.

Lauder was escorted from his hotel to the island by a deputation of officers, and on his arrival was greeted by Major Gen. Hoyle, who introduced him to the audience. He told the men of his experiences at the front and what would be expected of them in their fight for world democracy. Then he became the old Lauder and told a lot of funny stories, ending up with a number of songs, "The Laddies Who Fought and Won," "Bantry Bay," and others which he had sung to the soldiers in the trenches in France only a few months ago.

During the week Lauder will visit nearly all of the camps in this vicinity, including Fort Slocum on Wednesday, Mineola and Yaphank on Friday, and Wrightstown on Saturday. On Sunday afternoon he will address a meeting in the Hippodrome under the auspices of the War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A.

FRIEDHEIM GIVES RECITAL.

Afternoon Program of "Pioneers" at the Princess.

Arthur Friedheim, a pianist who always commands respect and often enthusiasm from a public that has known him through the period of a generation at least, began an unusual series of recitals yesterday afternoon at the Princess Theatre, a place among the more fortunate of its kind, blessed with quiet intimacy and resonant acoustics. His program of "pioneers" included Beethoven, whose Sonata Op. 110 will be duplicated by another star pianist this week; Chopin, most largely represented; Liszt, limited to two selections and an encore—Mr. Friedheim does an entire Liszt program next—and Balakireff, first of Russia's "great five," and, as it happened, the one whose "Islamey" led the day.

Mr. Friedheim quoted Beethoven's retort to a violinist complaining of some difficulty in his music, "What do I care for your miserable fiddle?" He rated Chopin as the father of modern pianoforte playing; Liszt, an innovator—as Wagner testified—in harmonic progression, had transformed the instrument and "played the orchestra" on the piano, and Mr. Friedheim, a veteran Liszt pupil, showed his fidelity to the master in giving the rarely heard "Benediction de Dieu dans le Solitude." The player with admirable humor added on recall a pioneer of America's own, Louis Moreau Gottschalk, whose "Bamboula" long ago discovered some possibilities of plantation melody along lines developed of late by Percy Grainger. Some of the pieces were prefaced with remarks as apt as they were brief. A full house appreciated the friendly comment and stayed for an extra Liszt Rhapsody No. 2 and the Gottschalk number.

Postpone 'Chu Chin Chow' Premiere.

The late arrival of a large part of the costumes from London has necessitated the postponement of the first performance of "Chu Chin Chow," originally scheduled for tonight at the Manhattan Opera House. It is now announced that the piece will have its premiere on Wednesday.

'BARTON MYSTERY' MIXED IN MERITS

Walter Hackett's Piece, Partly Melodrama and Partly Farce, Includes a Murder.

A. E. ANSON IN THE LEAD

Returns from England to Give an Interpretation of a Vaguely Drawn Mystic.

THE BARTON MYSTERY, a drama in three acts and an epilogue, by Walter Hackett. At the Comedy Theatre.

"The Barton Mystery," a melodrama from London so singularly mixed in merits that it seems incomprehensible that one man could have written all of it, began an engagement Saturday night at the Comedy Theatre, and will tenant that house until the Washington Square Players are ready to reclaim it at the end of the month. The new piece, although it unfolds a murder mystery in fairly interesting fashion, is important chiefly in that it brings back A. E. Anson to these shores. Mr. Anson is an English actor favorably known in these parts by reason of his work in the New Theatre and other productions, and in "The Barton Mystery" he gives a skillful interpretation of a somewhat vaguely drawn mystic, half genuine and half charlatan, whom the author has made a little bit of everything except real.

The piece is the work of Walter Hackett, who collaborated with Mr. Megrue on "It Pays to Advertise," and has since that time written mainly for the London stage. It is a play which gives frequent evidence of a deft touch, but it is, on the whole, so episodic and loosely knit that the effect of its mystery is constantly spending itself before it can become cumulative. The mystic, despite the fact that he is the moving force of the play, seems to be a character merely laid upon the superstructure and never woven into it. The piece is now melodrama and now farce, and many of its scenes give the impression of being merely successive steps (probably taken after the main story of the play was written) in the building up of the character and the fattening of the part for a star.

The unraveling of the mystery is done with not a little ingenuity, and suspicion is rather cleverly and convincingly thrown upon the wrong person. The author also makes good use of a dream scene in this connection, and if the probabilities are slightly outraged, they are at least not violated without the compensation of dramatic effect. If Mr. Hackett had been able to sustain the pace which he occasionally hits, the result would be a thoroughly engrossing mystery play, but in the endeavor to make it both that and a character study he has fallen into the pit.

Mr. Anson, long of hair and affecting a good deal of the manner of the fur-coated thespian, made the psychic Beverely easily the most interesting figure of the play. The remainder of the performance was rather uneven, although G. W. Anson, the star's father, contributed an amusing characterization, and Mary Malleson, looking a great deal like Mary Boland, did good work in the leading feminine part.

By some freak of staging the room in which the action passed was entirely black, and careless stage management also did its share to detract from the performance.

MISS ANNA CASE'S RECITAL.

A Metropolitan Soprano Appears as a Singer of Songs.

Miss Anna Case, who has been heard at the Metropolitan Opera House and at least once before in a song recital here, sang yesterday afternoon to a large audience that nearly filled Carnegie Hall. There was a time when Miss Case's treatment of her voice aroused some anxiety among her friends and admirers. She has found a better way now, and there was much to give pleasure in her singing yesterday. Miss Case's voice is one of the most beautiful of light and lyric soprano voices, capable of variety of color and of charming effects within its limitations; of transparent purity when it is heard at its best, though it seemed yesterday as if her highest tones were sometimes a little thin and had not always the quality of the rest of the voice.

Miss Case's program was chosen with a judicious regard for what she is best able to do. Such a voice as hers is not capable of a wide range of expression, but the singer's taste and judgment stood her in good stead and enabled her to make the most out of the songs that constituted her program. If any were disposed to find fault with her taste, it would have been in the matter of her fondness for sustaining long tones in effective portions of a phrase, without regard for the musical or declamatory necessity of such an interruption to the rhythmic flow.

Miss Case sang songs in Italian, French, English, German, Latin, and Swedish. Her enunciation in most of these was excellent, and in the English songs unusually good. She gave much pleasure in songs of a rich character, as in an English translation of Chopin's "Lithuanian Song" and Bizet's "Vieille Chanson"—though in this latter, sometimes at the expense of her vocal quality—and she was also especially successful in others demanding the sensustained phrase, as in Sgambati's "Separazione," Schubert's "Nacht und Träume" and an "Angelus" by Mme. Ohrstrom-Renard. The Swedish songs by Alvén, Kjerulf, and Södermann were given with much spirit. Miss Case's command of style did not quite reach to the interpretation of Agnes's air, "Although a Cloud O'erspread the Heavens," from "Der Freischütz." A series of American songs by Macfarlane, Pearl Curran, Harriette Ware, and Ward Stephens closed the program.

SOUSA'S ENLISTED MEN ROUSE GREAT AUDIENCE

321 Bandmen Play at Hippodrome in Benefit Which Nets $11,000.

The Band of the United States Navy played its first concert under roof in New York last night at the Hippodrome, after one previous visit only, when it came to march in the Red Cross parade. Its official navy character was emphasized on the present occasion by the fact that the Woman's Auxiliary for Naval Recruiting had arranged an elaborate preliminary bill of patriotic airs and speeches. In addition, John Philip Sousa, who enlisted last May for "a dollar a month" to train these 321 young Westerners out at Great Lakes, Ill., led his men in an officer's service uniform, sword and all, for the Christmas fund for the sailors abroad. A framed and signed portrait of President Wilson, auctioned by C. E. Smith to Leon Samuels of Providence for $250, was included in the fund, and a late comer, Lady Stewart Mackenzie, added $500 more in a gross total figured at $11,000, that E. H. Sothern announced would give a "Merry Christmas to all the boys over there" or on the way to serve in France.

Five thousand spectators filled the big house as full as the big band filled the stage. The audience early picked its favorite in "Ragtime" Reilly, a sailor from the United States steamship Michigan, who sang encores till he had to catch a train in order not to overstay his leave. Captain Hugh Knyvett, a young officer of the Fifteenth Australian Infantry, in a rousing speech told his American hearers that "we Australians who are in the army will never let this war end so long as a foot of ground consecrated by our dead remains in the hands of the enemy." Scott Gibson, a "Kiltie" comedian, put over some lively jokes he had picked up in entertaining the men in the trenches last year.

The bandsmen are young yet, but they already had their stars last night, such as Seaman O'Donnell, who left a $5,000 a year job to play first cornet, and they turned out a line of marching trumpeters—as many as a whole Sousa band of seasons past—when they faced the footlights and put the climax on the old Sousa march of "Semper Fidelis," just as the big division of trombones did later in the March King's latest, called "The Naval Reserve."

Rear Admiral Chester spoke, and so did Mrs. Crumpacker, whom the sailors, according to Mr. Sothern, call "the 'mother' of the navy." Some of those who sang or played during a full evening were Florence Macbeth, Francis Maclennan, Gabrielle Gills—with whom the crowd stood up for the "Marseillaise"—Maurice Dambois, Dooley and Rugel, Lieutenant B. C. Hilliam, Sophye Barnard, Nat M. Wills, and Seaman Barders.

With the band, Kitty Cheatham sang "Our America," and Percy Hemus gave a new solo by Sousa to Kipling's poem of "Boots," which earned as encore another, "Boot, Saddle, to Horse and Away," written by Florence Selig and Nellie Wilson, two young girls of 15 and 16 years, at Mrs. Merrill's school at Mamaroneck. The concert lasted nearly to midnight, with the crowd still there.

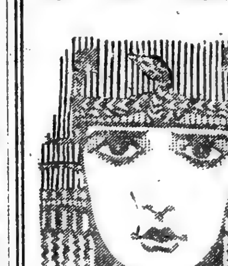
William Fox Presents THEDA BARA in CLEOPATRA
OPINIONS OF OTHER JUDGES ON CLEOPATRA.
"Living every day of her life in the passion of love, hate, jealousy and ambition, wielding her dominion over men or dying in the attempt", says Mahaffy, celebrated English student of the ancient world.
"One of the tragic figures of history," says the great Italian historian Ferrero.
"Her grace and finished manners concealed a ruthless ferocity," says Josephus, scholar of antiquity.
"Of surpassing beauty, brilliant to look upon and to listen to, ambitious for renown and most scornfully bold," says Dio, Roman source of modern savants.
"Cleopatra is among the ten great women of all time," say the historians.
"The beautiful and clever Cleopatra," Mommsen, great researcher, calls her.


WHAT WILL BE YOUR VERDICT after you see THEDA BARA'S portrayal of the passions and pageants of Egypt's vampire queen? ? ? ? ?
Produced at an approximate cost of $500,000 and with a cast of about thirty thousand men and women, this photodrama resurrects the life and love of Cleopatra, Antony and Caesar and in striking fidelity to antiquity shows how one woman changed the destinies of the world.

NEW YORK, MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1917.

THE REGISTRATION.

The reported total of the registration in Greater New York is not larger than the hosts of citizens who desire a Fusion triumph hoped it would be. It is, naturally, larger than the registration at the last mayoralty election four years ago; it is not so large as that of 1916, when a President was voted for. That is normal. There are generally more votes cast in a Presidential election than in any other, no matter how important the issue may be. But this year the soldier vote is yet to be provided for. It is believed that many more than 100,000 young citizens of New York are either in army cantonments and camps distant from the city or with the expeditionary forces in France. If half of this number register for the election the registration will exceed that of 1916. But it is sufficient that a normal registration of voters has been made.

The supporters of Mayor MITCHEL will feel that the odds are not against him now, in spite of W. M. BENNETT's persistence. BENNETT will undoubtedly aid HYLAN, but if all the supporters of Fusion stand by the guns MITCHEL will be elected. During the week there has been some feeling of discouragement in the Fusion ranks because of the comparatively small results of the registration day by day before Saturday's rush. Spreading the work of enrolling voters over six days, with the polls open only five hours on five of them, may simplify the labors of the election officers, but we have had abundant proof that psychologically it is defective. The low daily returns are dispiriting.

There may now be a revulsion of feeling creating a tendency to overconfidence among the independent voters of both parties. This must be overcome. Not a single voter must fail of his duty Nov. 6 because of his confidence that the result is assured. There are, in fact, three weeks of well-directed and vigorous work before the managers of the Fusion campaign, and every prospective Fusion voter should begin now and do his share. Much can be done to correct wrong impressions, enlighten the ignorant, and stimulate the minds of those who are undecided. Tammany must be beaten.

HELPING AIRCRAFT PLANS.

The approval bestowed on the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association by Attorney General GREGORY, who has held that the combination of airplane and motor builders is not in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, was a necessary step in completing the efficient organization of the nation's aviation industry essential to the fulfillment of our ambitious aerial program, now already well begun. It might have been foreseen, and in fact was, by keen observers, because of the acceptance by Major Gen. GEORGE W. GOETHALS of the presidency of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation. Association by the builder of the Panama Canal with one of the two chief members of the airplane combination carried conviction that the association had full governmental sanction.

Nevertheless, official recognition was needed, if only to clear the atmosphere of the haze which had surrounded the creation of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association. The body was a development of an earlier organization, the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association, which, comprising the leading makers of airplanes in this country, was formed some months ago to facilitate intercourse between the Government and the industry at a time when the program later developed by the Government's Aircraft Production Board was just taking shape.

The necessity to avoid the patent litigation which had harassed the progress of the aviation industry in the past was realized at once, and repeated conferences between the makers and the heads of interested departments in Washington, including the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics and the Aircraft Production Board, resulted in the formation of the new association, the members pledging themselves to an exchange of patent rights under a royalty plan. Announcement of the new organization was made by the makers themselves, however, and failure of the Administration to proclaim its sanction of the new body left it open at once to attack as a combination in restraint of trade.

Until its status was definitely established, therefore, the association encountered opposition in many quarters, and the success of the whole Government endeavor in the field of aerial preparedness was threatened, inasmuch as its fulfillment was predicated on certain work by the established industry in addition to that which the Aircraft Production Board had been enabled to develop in allied fields. By his ruling on the legal standing of the association Mr. GREGORY has now removed the last obstacle to the speedy and successful completion of this country's $700,000,000 aviation program.

NO COAL TO HELP THE ENEMY.

Our Government prevents the exportation of foodstuffs or raw material for munitions to the northern European neutrals from this country by withholding licenses for cargoes and coal. It cannot forbid the shipment of such supplies from countries south of us, but carriers from the southern ports must have coal, and many of them have been accustomed to stop at some point on our coast for a part of what they need. Hereafter this fuel will not be given to them for the movement of any cargo that can even indirectly help the enemy. Nor will it be granted to ships going southward from our ports with cargoes as to the final destination of which there is any doubt. Germany needs not only food, but also copper, nickel, cotton, rubber, and other essential raw materials for war. The shortage is restricting her supply of munitions. It suggests the attempted smuggling which has been detected at our ports. While we cannot surely prevent the shipment of such materials from countries south of us, we can and shall refuse to assist by supplying fuel for the ships. Our Government might also withhold the coal which is required for public utility companies in South American cities which are controlled by German capital and officers. The profits of some of these companies have been used for intrigue in the interest of Germany, and before we entered the war there was complaint that a part of their imported coal had been given to German raiders in the southern seas. Coal from the United States should not be allowed to assist the enemy in any part of the world.

The present attitude of nearly all the South American republics toward Germany warrants a belief that our embargo on coal supplies will not be opposed by them. We do not desire to interfere with their legitimate international trade, but cannot consent to help our foes. We shall be glad to supply coal, if it be needed, for the forty-six seized German ships which Brazil will use for the benefit of this country and our allies. But if it is required for the movement across the ocean of anything that will aid Germany, not one ton can be obtained at our ports. Our Government's decision is one that should be heartily commended. It will hasten the coming of peace.

ONE "FORMER OCCASION."

It is now possible to construct the history of one of those "former occasions" on which Count VON BERNSTORFF expended $50,000 or other sums "to influence Congress." When he wrote those words, on Jan. 22, 1917, he said it was to be done "through the organization you know of." There is still no clue to which particular organization that was; he used first one, then another, like a musician touching different keys. In 1915 it was Labor's National Peace Council, but the exposure of his agent RINTELEN made an end of that organization's usefulness, and BERNSTORFF instantly substituted the American Embargo Conference. That, in its turn, had lost its usefulness by 1917, and it must have been some other gang which BERNSTORFF meant by "the organization you know of." But in 1916 he was still working through the Embargo Conference, which, he telegraphed ZIMMERMANN on Sept. 15, had "requested further support"; that is, it wanted more money.

The American Embargo Conference, which BERNSTORFF began to employ effectively in November, 1915, exercised a powerful influence on Congress and the nation's affairs. Only President WILSON's courage and decision prevented it from controlling the action of the country. Its job was to formulate and direct a trumped-up sentiment in favor of an embargo on munitions and against the right of American citizens to travel on British ships. The job was most cleanly and effectively performed, and came within an ace of winning. That is, the German Government came near controlling the American Congress through the bought influence of these employes.

The conferences met in November, its date being planned by BERNSTORFF, doubtless, with a view to the meeting of Congress in December. The outcry it created was so effective that in the first week of that session, on Dec. 13, Senator KENYON of Iowa introduced a resolution forbidding Americans to take passage on ships carrying munitions. But this fabricated sentiment did not begin to work fully until after the recess, when Senator GORE appeared as its chief product with the first of his long series of resolutions, the one forbidding the sale of contraband to England as long as she persisted in her blockade. This was on Jan. 10, 1916. BERNSTORFF's "organization you know of" had done its full work in the way of misleading Congress about the state of public sentiment.

On Jan. 20 Senator HOKE SMITH, in a speech that attracted wide attention, demanded an embargo and favored a truculent attitude toward England. On Feb. 3 The Providence Journal exposed the origin of the American Embargo Conference, declaring that it was "planned and brought into existence by Count JOHANN VON BERNSTORFF at Washington and financed "directly from the office of Dr. HEINRICH ALBERT, the fiscal agent of the "German Government in New York "City," and that it had "taken up the "work of the so-called Labor's National Peace Council." The latter organization was out of commission, its leaders being under indictment as a result of the Rintelen exposures.

On Feb. 22 these infatuated Congressmen went so far as to attempt to use their various embargo resolutions, which were now so numerous, for the purpose of frightening the President. If this was a part of BERNSTORFF's plan, subtly communicated to their minds by the same influence that had made them believe American sentiment was for an embargo, they doubtless never suspected its origin; but its effect, if successful, would have been to prevent the President from ever again taking a firm stand before Germany. Senator STONE and two other Democratic leaders went to the White House to tell him that the Gore resolution was sure to pass at almost any moment. The President, so far from being frightened, told them that he would go to almost any extreme to uphold the rights of Americans. STONE went back to the Senate convinced only that sterner measures must be taken with this stubborn President.

They were taken the next day, when the House Committee on Foreign Affairs served notice on the President that unless within forty-eight hours he warned Americans off armed ships the House would pass the Gore resolution. On that day, Feb. 23, the only one of the House leaders who was still standing by the President was Mr. SHERLEY of Kentucky.

On Feb. 24 the President wrote Senator STONE declaring flat-footedly, "I "cannot consent to any abridgment of "the rights of American citizens in "any respect." On Feb. 25 The Providence Journal disclosed the fact that the whole plot had been formulated by BERNSTORFF, and that two weeks before messages had been sent to pro-German newspapers directing them to publish articles preparing the minds of their readers for it. Undeterred by the exposure, on that same day Speaker CLARK and Representative KITCHIN went to the White House and solemnly warned the President that the Gore resolution would pass by at least 2 to 1, perhaps by 3 to 1. Meanwhile Mr. BRYAN began sending in telegrams urging the passage of the resolution; and so, by a coincidence, did Dr. WILLIAM BAYARD HALE.

On Feb. 28 the President threw the conspirators who were thus hoodwinking Congress into dismay by sending in a demand that Congress should vote at once upon the resolutions. On March 3 the Senate took up GORE's, and, instead of passing it by "2 to 1," defeated it by 68 to 14. At the last moment GORE changed it so as to make it a virtual declaration of war on Germany, but the Senate voted in ignorance of this discreditable trick. On March 7 the House took up the McLemore resolution and defeated it by 276 to 142.

This is the history of one "former occasion." It was one of those which BERNSTORFF had in mind when he wired for authority to spend $50,000 more in the same manner, and it is no wonder that he thought a reminder of it would bring what he wanted. With a paper organization created and financed by him under orders from Berlin he had fooled and tricked Congress into believing that the noise it made was the voice of the American people.

THE COUNTRY AND THE LOAN.

The Topeka Capital says that "the "farmers did not subscribe according "to their ability" for the first Liberty Loan, but it thinks that the farmers of Kansas can and will take $150,000,000 of the second loan. It is a ray of light amid the gloom regarding the floating of the loan in the manner it ought to be floated, that is, among the people and not among the members of the "money trust." The agricultural interest of the country is larger and more important than the financial interest, whether measured by men or money. Farmers are not individually wealthy, but in the aggregate they command billions. Their crops this year are worth eighteen billions, and the farmers' savings are estimated at the amount of the Liberty Loan now offered.

In 1913 the farmers' pre-war profits were put at $1,200,000,000, when the produce of the farms was worth less than ten billions. This year's excess profits would enable the farmers to take half the loan. Bank deposits have increased over loans during the world war by a billion dollars, and $695,000,000 of this increase was in the country banks. The deposits of the country banks have grown so much more than the loans that the excess of the deposits over loans in the country banks, before the deposit of this year's crop money, was $1,251,000,000, or more than the increase for the country as a whole. Elsewhere loans increased faster than deposits, so that there would have been no increase of the excess of deposits over loans without the farmers' deposits.

Bonds sold to the farmers would "stay sold," for farmers are ultimate consumers of whatever they buy. It is true that it is harder to sell bonds to farmers than to others, for they are not experienced investors. But the attempt should be made. The Topeka Capital is doing its share, and its words to the farmers could hardly be improved upon as a counsel to city dwellers:

> The man who has money to invest at this time and invests it in other ways, but not in Liberty bonds, is not patriotic, but is a disloyal citizen, belonging with the profiteers who hold up the country, instead of standing by it.

This applies to everybody, not only to the farmers. The second Liberty Loan must be successful or the Government will lack money to pay the expenses of the war. Buy a bond now, according to your means, whether or not you subscribed to the first loan.

TAMMANY TO WILSON DEMOCRATS.

Tammany and its annexes affect deep indignation at the lukewarmness which they attribute to Mr. MITCHEL in the Wilson campaign last year. "Vote for Judge HYLAN, rebuke Mr. MITCHEL, and sustain Mr. WILSON," they say, in effect, to Wilson Democrats.

The friends of Mr. WILSON are not bothering their heads about the campaign of 1916. In the campaign of 1917 they have no doubt as to the means of supporting Mr. WILSON and the energetic conduct of the war. Mr. MITCHEL is the spokesman and representative of the patriotism of New York City. It is not his own ardent loyalty, his services for preparedness, that have made him so. The chooser, sponsor and patron of the Tammany candidate for Mayor is the chief prop in the United States of pro-Germanism and of a dishonest and German peace. The Wilson Democrats, and everybody else who seeks actively to support Mr. WILSON and the prosecution of the war to a victorious end, will support Mr. MITCHEL. Tammany's eager pursuit of phantom issues is getting comical.

CLOTHING THE SOLDIERS.

Equipment of the first increment of the national army has been slow, but the results thus far have not justified the pessimistic predictions of folks who always look on the dark side. Secretary BAKER is enabled to announce officially that nearly 13,000,000 articles of clothing and sleeping equipment have been provided already for the cantonments, in which today 431,380 men are assembled. The largest number of men in a single cantonment is 39,533, at Fort Funston, in Kansas, which is nearly its full quota. From this fort lately we have heard many complaints of a lack of equipment. The War Department is not prepared as yet to keep apace with all the requirements of the drafted men. There is still an inadequate supply of Winter underclothing, and the weather is wintry at some of the camps. But deliveries are now making rapidly, and before the advent of real Winter all the drafted men will be well supplied with heavy underwear and sleeping bags.

When we entered the war there were no reserve stocks in our manufactories. Large foreign orders had not yet been completed. The creation of new industrial establishments was necessary. Moreover, before the drafted men could be supplied the expeditionary forces had to be fitted out, and vast quantities of clothing were required for the regular army and the National Guard contingents. Therefore, Secretary BAKER is justified in his pride in the work that has been accomplished. The assembling in one draft of 687,000 men, examining and placing them, equipping and training them for modern war, was an undertaking without a precedent in our history. What has been done thus far is an assurance of complete success. So far as the first increment of the draft is concerned, American patriotism has been amply demonstrated, and the American capacity to overcome huge obstacles quickly has been proved again.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A Warning Americans Must Heed. Ever since the Canadian troops went under fire on the western front in Europe there have been circulated in Canada and here stories to the effect that they were unfairly treated by the British high command—that to them were assigned the hardest and most dangerous tasks, and that they were sacrificed to save the lives of soldiers from the British Isles. There never was a word of truth in these reports, of course, but the terrible losses of the first Canadian contingents gave them something of plausibility, and skillfully used by the disaffected element in the Canadian population, and endlessly repeated by secret agents of the German propaganda there, they did much not only to prevent volunteering but to strengthen the hands of the pacifists and anti-conscriptionists in their characteristic appeals to ignorance and prejudice.

In a notably interesting and informative interview printed in the Magazine Section of THE TIMES yesterday, ARTHUR GUY EMPEY, the young American machine gunner who, while serving under the British flag, himself "went over the top," and later wrote a book about his war experiences and observations, explained in a most convincing way the seeming discrimination against the "colonials."

The Canadians, he said, were not sent to "the worst places," but wherever they were was indeed likely to become, and very often did become, a "worst place" because the Germans took care as promptly as possible to make it such by concentrating there attacks of more than ordinary strength and severity. This the Germans did for the purpose of producing exactly the impression that was produced, and their object was to arouse between the British and the Canadians the ill-feeling which to some extent was aroused.

And so well, declared Mr. EMPEY, in German estimation did this characteristic trick work that he felt sure it would be tried again as soon as any considerable number of American soldiers reached the front. Excuse for believing, or at least for saying, that they are sacrificed to save French or British lives will be given in the same way and with a like object—that of exciting among us distrust of our allies and resentment against them.

The warning deserves serious attention. There are among us people more than enough who for one or another base reason will eagerly seize the first opportunity to spread through this country calumnies like those that did so much harm in Canada.

An Appeal Doomed to Failure. According to its wont, the inevitable has happened and a prophet of the certain has his well-earned reward in the joy that lies in saying, "I told you so!" For already the members of one political party have put on the cap which General BELL provided when he issued an order barring from Camp Upton campaign orators who speak from a platform that has among its planks treason and sedition and the subversion of military discipline.

It is the Socialists who confess to more than a suspicion that they, among others, were in the General's mind when he wrote out his order, and though of course they do not admit that they properly come under his ban, "something tells them" that he is likely to think so and act accordingly. For once information from this mysterious source is seemingly correct; for probably he is, and with good reason.

It would not be fair, indeed, to say that, because a man is a Socialist, he is sure to be an enemy of his country—that he has even a "tendency," to repeat General BELL's own word, toward treason, sedition, and the subversion of military discipline. Thousands and thousands of Socialists in Europe have proved themselves to be good patriots, since the war began; and from one, the German, group of Socialists not a little is expected, or at least hoped, in the way of effective efforts to "make the world safe for democracy." But the men at present forming the Socialist Party as a political entity or organization in the United States are in a peculiar position.

They are under the grave accusation, deliberately uttered by men formerly numbered among their most eminent members, of not being Socialists at all, but friends of Germany, and consequently foes of the country in which they live. So authoritative is this accusation, and so well is it sustained by everything done and said by the American Socialists as a party since the war began, that it's no wonder they announce the intention of taking an appeal against an exclusion that has not yet been decided against them. They could make out something of a case if General BELL had put their party name in his order, but he did not do that. What he condemned, however, was not socialism, but men calling themselves Socialists who are merely transplanted Germans. Their appeal to "Washington" will fail, and they know it.

A Desperate Remedy Is Proposed. In warning the American railway companies that Government ownership of their properties may become a military necessity of "the surprisingly near future," the Conference Committee on National Preparedness told of many things the voluntary doing of which by the roads themselves would have prevented, or at least have delayed, the present dangerous "bending" of our transportation service under the weight of the war. In the opinion of the committeemen, evidently, either the American railway officials have not realized the seriousness of the country's situation or else they lack the flexibility of mind required for seeing, when unusual conditions arise, the instant need of changes in established methods.

The railway men will doubtless say that unwise legislation has rendered impossible the getting of money required for faster and better distribution, but some of the committee's complaints will be hard to answer. There is no obvious reason, for instance, why dining cars should form a part of many trains where they are still to be seen. Such cars, of course, are a valued convenience, and all right in times of peace, but no traveler would suffer from the absence of one in making a journey between New York and Boston, say, or between New York and Philadelphia, and these are stretches of country where the "bending" referred to is most troublesome.

Parlor cars, too, could be eliminated without causing any very desperate hardships. Nobody would like such changes as these, but we could all stand them if they would help win the war, and—well, the prospect of Government ownership of railways is disquieting, to say the least of it.

A Meadow or a Garden?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you kindly give me space to thank Mr. Van Ingen for his recent suggestion in regard to the treatment of the old reservoir in Central Park? As daughter of Calvert Vaux, the original designer of the Park, (whom Mr. Van Ingen quotes,) I recognize that he has discerned acutely something fundamental in the original conception and treatment of the surfaces with which the designer had to deal. Mr. Vaux, as an Englishman coming to this country, recognized the beauty of American landscape, and was particularly anxious to retain its characteristic quality in the landscape which he undertook to create for dwellers of the great city. He desired to give them their own, idealized and finished, not something foreign or exotic. This effort may still be recognized in the naturalness of the ramble, in the meadow with its sheep, in the groups of native elms, oaks, and hemlocks, and in the simple, natural treatment of the waterways. It would undoubtedly be most in harmony with the present park and with the intention of its original designer to restore to a natural landscape a spot which the needs of the city had made artificial. This certainly can best be done, as Mr. Van Ingen suggests. "Can Mr. Hastings and Mr. MacMonnies hope to create anything more beautiful than an open meadow?"

A TOSCANINI AMBULANCE.

Fund to Provide One Named for the Conductor Started by Mrs. Ditson.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have received from Mrs. Charles H. Ditson the following note:

> My dear Mr. Johnson: Knowing that the ambulances of the American Poets' Committee are being named for various distinguished persons, I am sending you my subscription of $100 toward the cost of a car to be named for Arturo Toscanini, who has shown himself to be not only a great musician but a devoted patriot. I trust that those to whom his conducting has given such pleasure will join me, as several have already expressed the intention of doing, in thus paying a tribute to Italy in his honor. Sincerely yours,
> ALICE M. DITSON.

Mrs. Ditson's timely proposition has the cordial approval of the committee, and checks sent to me for this purpose to 70 Fifth Avenue, drawn to the order of George A. Plimpton, Treasurer, will be so applied, and when the total reaches $2,000, the cost of the car in Milan, it will be promptly bought by cable, and as soon as possible delivered to the Italian Government.

May I add that thirty-three checks for that amount have been received by us for individual cars to bear the donor's name, and that, in addition to the cash received as printed in your columns today, $78,067, we are assured of $14,000 more from special subscriptions well under way, while others are being set on foot. Of this total of $92,000 much is directly traceable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. Will not your readers—and who is not one of them?—now help us past the $100,000 mark, which will take us half way to our goal? In view of the evidently impending new drive of Cadorna's army, can anything be more practical?

It should be borne in mind that the Poets' Committee is not another organization for general war relief (thank Heaven for every one of them!) but is intent only upon a single special piece of emergency work—to get those ambulances to Cadorna at the earliest possible moment. I have the permission of Henry P. Davison to quote this expression of the attitude of the Red Cross: "We are in complete sympathy with your undertaking. Certainly it is inspiring to note the interest shown in the American Poets' organization." We have just arranged for a small auxiliary committee in Italy under the chairmanship of H. Nelson Gay of Rome, to see that the purchase, preparation and delivery of the cars are expeditiously accomplished.

THE TAX ON PARTNERSHIPS.

Inequality of the Levy of 8 Per Cent. on Profits Over $6,000.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In addition to the penalty, already so widely discussed, which the new Federal tax law, levying 8 per cent. excess tax on their incomes over $6,000, puts upon all salaried and professional men, as compared with those who derive their income from investments, I desire to call the attention of professional men, lawyers, doctors, dentists, engineers, architects, &c., to a particular penalty which it lays upon such of them as are members of co-partnerships as compared with those who practice alone.

The income tax is levied on what the individual receives. The partnership is ignored. But this excess tax of 8 per cent. is laid upon the partnership. The consequence is that the individual's exemption, if he is a member of a firm, may be nothing, and, at best, is only so much of $6,000 as his individual share in the firm.

Thus, a professional firm of three members, sharing equally, in a firm which this year nets $15,000 (which will in most cases be less than its net before the war), must pay 8 per cent. on $9,000, or $720, or $240 for each member. Yet each member's gross share is only $5,000, an income not subject to this tax in the pocket of the professional man who has no partner.

If the firm's net income is $18,000, each partner's share is $6,000, a sum exempt from the 8 per cent. tax in the hands of the professional man without partners, yet in the case of these partners subject to one third of 8 per cent. on $12,000, or $320 for each one.

If the firm's income is $30,000, each partner pays one third of 8 per cent. on $24,000, or $640 tax for each partner, while the individual practitioner would pay only $320 tax on his income of $10,000.

The professional man with an income of $20,000, practicing alone, will pay 8 per cent. on $14,000; if one of three partners, he will pay 8 per cent. on $18,000. In short, if a partner's income is $6,000 down to slightly over $2,000, he will not escape this tax, while the individual practitioner will; and if his share exceeds $6,000 he will in no event have the full $6,000 exemption which the individual practitioner has, but only so much of it as his share in the firm.

Are professional partnerships such an evil thing that the Congress must thus seek to tax them out of existence? If not, why is not this excess tax, like the income tax, levied on the receipts of the individual?

BUY A BOND.

Hey! You fellow with a roll,
Buy a Bond!
Show your heart is good as gold,—
Buy a Bond!
Liberty depends on you,
We must down the Hunnish crew,
We each have our "bit" to do,—
Buy a Bond!

If you are too old to fight,
Buy a Bond!
If you lack in weight or height,
Buy a Bond!
All the battles are not won
By the men behind the guns—
Money talks. Ere setting sun
Buy a Bond!

If your sons have gone to war,
Buy a Bond!
Others' sons have gone before,—
Buy a Bond!
Slackers they who will not fight
Or who draw their purse-strings tight,
Do your bit and do it right,—
Buy a Bond!

If you smoke or if you chew,
Buy a Bond!
Each day skip a weed or two, to
Buy a Bond!
Sacrifice should pleasure be
When the cause is "Liberty,"
That's the way it looks to me,—
Buy a Bond!

Everybody! Get in line,—

Come on in. The buying's fine,—
Buy a Bond!
Crush the Huns on land and sea.
Everybody. One—two—three:—

THE GARY SYSTEM.

Its Goal Is That Held Up by President Hadley.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

So the reader will know that I have some right to speak, allow me to state that I am among the largest taxpayers in Gary, Ind., and I heartily approve the school system as administered by Mr. Wirt. I have been a close observer of efforts in primary education, and made a number of visits to the Gary school, and there is every reason to believe that Mr. Wirt's methods are excellent. In fact, the money expended for educational purposes in Gary no doubt is applied to a better advantage and to the greater benefit of the pupil than in other places.

Some of us wonder what is at the bottom of the criticism apparently systematically directed against the Gary system in your city when the people of Gary are so proud of it and the Gold Medal of the Panama Exposition was awarded to Gary for having the best school system. Broadly speaking, Mr. Wirt is attempting to meet the needs of the pupil rather than have the pupil adjust himself to a system regardless of whether that system meets his wants or not. President Hadley of Yale in an article before me expresses the Gary idea: "The high school or college should not train the boy to compete with the encyclopedia, but should train him to utilize the encyclopedia." The Gary boy, while being taught a science, is given an opportunity to apply or use the information.

The professor further on says: "The better a teacher understands his profession the more he measures his success by the things his pupil can do rather than by the things that they know."

He also answers the carping criticism of the progressive Gary and other such successful educational efforts in saying: "Teachers, instead of frankly admitting that nine-tenths of the knowledge acquired in school will soon be forgotten, talk somewhat vaguely of the importance of culture subjects as distinct from vocational or practical subjects, without recognizing that any subject can be vocational or cultural or neither according to the way in which it is studied and the use which the boy makes of it."

How true. But will the prejudiced and unprogressive accept the fact? There is in all probability as much real cultural education in the Gary schools as is found elsewhere.

Again, President Hadley says: "But no amount of mere information as to the methods of doing things will evoke power unless the boy himself puts his shoulder to the wheel, and no rule is of much help until after a boy has applied himself."

The Gary boy applies the methods. To his knowledge of electricity he adds the practice of operating the school plant. If he is in a laboratory and lacking in some feature of chemistry, he may, also thanks to Mr. Wirt, go to the school and get it. If he is wanting in some theory of mechanics, he may go to the school building and get it.

The Gary schools offer equal educational opportunities for all, but, I fancy, produce fewer misfits.

THE PEOPLE'S WAR.

The People Must and Will Finance It—Therefore Buy Liberty Bonds.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

No decent, sensible person wants a fight if it can be avoided, but when we see a big, strong man abusing a child or any other weak person and disturbing the peace generally, we cannot and must not, if we are good for anything at all, look on complacently without protecting the weak. We none of us wanted the war if it could have been avoided without dishonor, but that was impossible, and now that we are at war, we certainly must carry it on successfully.

This is not Mr. Wilson's war, nor Mr. Lansing's, nor Mr. McAdoo's war; it is our war, the war of every good American, and it is absolutely necessary that financial support must be forthcoming. There is not the slightest doubt that the Government will in some way procure for itself whatever money is needed. Now, when the Government offers for part of the money needed such a high-grade security as the Liberty bond, it is the plain duty of the public and the only sensible thing to do to respond liberally and without hesitation. What better security can we have than the guarantee of the United States Government and at a good rate of interest?

The flower of the nation, our young men, are required to come forward and give up everything, if necessary their lives, for the benefit of the nation, and most of them respond willingly and cheerfully. Let us not hesitate a moment to do all we can in the way of offering our financial aid, particularly in this very lenient way, with absolutely no sacrifice. The loan should not only be taken in the amount that is offered, but should be largely oversubscribed.

ADOLPH LEWISOHN.

Russian Ideas of Indemnity.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Worschin was misled in following Aleksandrov's English-Russian dictionary to define "indemnity" as "vosnagrajdenie." This word means "reward," and is so defined by Aleksandrov. Two things equal to the same thing are equal to each other. Indemnity and reward have, therefore, the same meaning—a manifest absurdity. That comes from relying too much on a dictionary. One means that A did B some evil, and pays compensation to B for said evil. The other means that A did B some good, and B compensates A for said good. The Russians have not expressed themselves against indemnity—a compensation for evil done—but against a "contribution." This word has the same meaning in Russian literature on international law as the word "tribute" in our literature on this subject. It carries the element of vae victis. Tribute is defined by Webster's as money or other valuable thing paid as an acknowledgment of submission, or as the price of peace and protection. And Aleksandrov translates tribute as "contributsia, dan—contribution, gift."

Section 209.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your article this morning calling attention to the oversight and injustice of Section 209 of the excess profits tax, levying an 8 per cent. tax on earned income over $6,000, is extremely interesting. It missed, however, the most striking injustice of the section, which is the tax on the excess over $6,000 for a partnership. This means, of course, a tax on the excess above $600 of a partner with a one-tenth interest, whose income is earned by his personal services as partner. If this income is $3,000, his tax is $208.

Such a tax should be recognized for what it is; that is, a super-income tax which should rest on the recipients of the income and bear equally on all, including, of course, Senators, Congressmen, and the Treasury experts to whom most of the credit of this remarkable provision seems to belong.

WEST IS TO HEAR OF RED CROSS WORK

Public Will Be Told Just How the $100,000,000 Fund Is Being Utilized.

TOUR BEGINS IN ST. LOUIS

Chairman Davison and Others Will Tell of Aid Being Given to the War-Stricken Countries.

Henry P. Davison, Chairman of the War Council of the American Red Cross, and Harvey D. Gibson, General Manager of the national organization, will shortly begin a tour of the West to meet the officials of the Western divisions of the Red Cross, representatives of chapters, and the people generally. The object of the tour will be to interest the public in the work of the Red Cross and to let the people know just how the $100,000,000 Red Cross war fund is being utilized.

The tour will begin at St. Louis on Oct. 22, and before it ends Mr. Davison and Mr. Gibson will have visited Chicago, Denver, Cleveland, San Francisco, and Seattle.

"With the Red Cross of the United States divided into thirteen districts," Mr. Davison said yesterday, "and with each district in charge of an experienced business man, who is serving his country through the Red Cross during the period of the war, the organization in this country is now complete. Special Red Cross commissions made up of competent and sympathetic American citizens are now actively at work on behalf of the American Red Cross in France, Great Britain, Russia, Italy, Rumania and Serbia.

"Up to Oct. 1 collections to the war fund of the Red Cross amounted to $64,424,232.90, of which $6,269,566.57 had been returned to chapters to provide for their own Red Cross activities. Up to that time the War Council had appropriated from the war fund $25,080,870.41.

"The Red Cross membership in the United States is now more than 4,000,000. Included in this number are hundreds of thousands of American women who are knitting, making surgical dressings and comfort kits.

"The Red Cross is seeking to render an account of its stewardship to the American people in the most effective manner possible. It is giving frequent announcements of its activities, and every fact concerning the work of the Red Cross is available to everybody.

"We now wish to go a step further and give a detailed account of our stewardship, as well as advise with Red Cross workers and supporters throughout the country as to Red Cross methods and policies. We have felt that this could be best done by appearing face to face before audiences and representative citizens, telling the Red Cross story, answering questions, and ourselves gaining a more complete knowledge of public sentiment.

"We are exceedingly anxious that the people at large should be fully informed as to the methods and policies adopted in handling the great fund with which the Red Cross War Council has been intrusted, and also that all policies and activities of the Red Cross should be in accord with a fully informed public sentiment.

"The purpose of this trip is not to solicit subscriptions or take collections but to give the American people the latest advice as to conditions in France, Russia, Italy, Rumania, and Serbia. Our reports indicate that the American people have an opportunity to lend a helping hand and to carry a practical message of cheer to suffering humanity such as no philanthropic undertaking in the history of the world has ever had before."

The Rev. Robert Davis of Englewood, N. J., who went to France in May with the Red Cross Commission, and who has recently returned to the United States, will accompany Mr. Davison and Mr. Gibson on their Western tour.

As part of the American Red Cross program for aid to Serbia, which has been undertaken in co-operation with the Serbian Government, the Red Cross has just shipped 5,000 bags of flour for Serbians in Austrian prison camps. This is the first shipment of a series of food purchases which the Red Cross, in co-operation with the Serbian Government, is making in this country for relief of prisoners. The Serbian Minister has deposited $500,000 to the credit of the Red Cross for the purchase of these foodstuffs.

The Allies must provide living necessities for their soldiers who are captured, as the Central Powers are not providing prisoners of war with sufficient food to keep them in good health. By arrangement with Germany and Austria, prisoners are permitted to receive extra rations and clothing from their home Governments. Lack of supplies in Europe has forced Serbia to buy in the United States.

Additional consignments of foodstuffs and clothing for Serbian prisoners are now being assembled and will be shipped by the American Red Cross. The shipments go to the Serbian Consul at Marseilles, and thence through the Serbian section of the Bureau de Secours at Berne, Switzerland, to prison camps in Austria.

The American Red Cross Commission in Serbia is headed by Cordenio Arnold Severance of St. Paul. The ravages of war there are said to have been even worse than in Belgium and Rumania, and many Serbian refugees have been entirely dependent upon America for relief. Next to Belgium and France, Serbia has been the chief centre of American relief work abroad.

FAVORS NATIONAL RAILWAYS

Merchants' Association Votes for Single Federal Control.

The Merchants' Association has cast its vote in favor of the four proposals contained in the railroad referendum which the Chamber of Commerce of the United States is taking among its members for the purpose of ascertaining the business sentiment of the country concerning them. The proposals are:

"That provision be made for Federal regulation of the issuance of railroad securities.

"That Congress pass a general railroad incorporation law under which all railroad carriers subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission may organize.

"That if Congress passes a railroad incorporation law, all railroad carriers subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, both those now existing and those hereafter to be created, be required to organize under this law.

"In view of the fact that conflict has arisen with respect to the jurisdiction of the commission over intrastate rates, even though such rates affect interstate commerce, the committee (of the Merchants' Association) recommends that the commission be given authority by statute to regulate rates when they affect interstate commerce."

TO DISCUSS PRICE CONTROL.

Merchants' Association Will Take Up Question of War Profits.

The Committee on Commercial Law of the Merchants' Association will meet at 2 o'clock on Wednesday in the assembly room of the association for the purpose of discussing Federal control of prices. All business men are invited to be present and assist the association in deciding what action it shall take on the seven proposals formulated by a special committee of the National Chamber of Commerce, which is committed to the principle that there should not be a profit interest in war.

This position was created by the vote of more than five hundred commercial and trade organizations. A report on the vote said that "business men generally adhere to the principle that war should not be a source of profits, either in dealing with the Government or in dealing with the public." It has been suggested that any delay on the part of the Federal Government in regulating prices of commodities may create a situation which will lead State Legislatures next Winter to think it necessary to deal with prices. It is thought that this would cause a diversity of provisions where uniformity is necessary.

MEDICI ARCHIVES TO BE DISPERSED

Sale of World-Famous Collection Announced for London in February.

UNKNOWN MSS. OF LORENZO

Long Letters of the Magnificent Guarded for Centuries by Collateral Branch of His Family.

A hitherto unknown collection of the letters of the mightiest potentate of the Italian Renaissance—art collector, banker, merchant, promoter, and statesman—will be dispersed by Christie, Manson, and Woods, in London, on Feb. 4, 1918, and the three successive days. But this "lot," which embraces the personal correspondence of Lorenzo the Magnificent, forms only a part of the famous Medici archives, which present a record of seven centuries of the history of that great Florentine family—the descendants of a poor but ambitious physician.

The archives, as is well known to collectors, have been inherited by the Marchese Cosimo de' Medici and his brother, the Marchese Averado de' Medici, and, owing to the great mass of material to be gone through, the classification and cataloguing have taken over five years to do.

But the Lorenzo letters themselves, which form only a part of the whole, consisting of autographed letters, records, and documents extending from 1084 to 1770, had for centuries been guarded by a collateral line—the Medici della Castellina.

These, the gem of this great historical collection, are far from being occasional notes on petty subjects or household directions or accounts. Many are long letters, some running to four or five foolscap pages, addressed to Pietro Alamanni, when Ambassador in Milan, from May to December, 1489, and in Rome, from January, 1491, to March, 1492.

They revealed how the great Florentine gauged a score of critical situations, in finance and statecraft, particularly when, in 1480, he risked everything to save Florence from Naples, the Prussia of his day, and thwarted the machinations of an all-absorbing confederation of Italian States. The cataloguing has been in the hands of Royale Tyler, the expert but little known historical writer and archivist. In his introduction to the catalogue "raisonné" Mr. Tyler deals with the members of the family represented by the manuscripts and supplements the biographies by five genealogical tables of the various branches.

The earliest document is a deed gift from one Pietro di Petronio, April 2, 1084, of a fourth part of his estate to the Church of St. Barnabas, Gamungno.

Aside from the Lorenzo group, the most famous writers are Charles VIII. of France, Cardinal Richelieu, members of the Sforza family, Lorenzino de' Medici, the murderer of Alessandro, Duke of Florence; several Grand Dukes of Tuscany, and the famous Bianca Cappello. The archives also include nearly eighty lots of ledgers, account books, and memoranda of members of the Medici family as bankers and merchants. These show the Florentine wages, taxes, prices of land and stock of the day; the prices of watches, jewelry, silver, and gold ware, and of precious stones. One "lot" alone consists of a volume of about 1,340 pages quarto of papers relative to the industrial and commercial activities of the younger branch of the family and their business connections from 1426 to 1711.

Nearly all the letters of Lorenzo the Magnificent are addressed to Pietro Alamanni, Florentine Ambassador at Milan, and afterwards at Rome and Naples, and of Alamanni himself a number of copies of minutes of letters to Lorenzo, and of others to the Otto di Pratica of Florence. The earliest of Lorenzo's letters to Alamanni is dated Florence, May 2, 1489, and of this there is a duplicate word for word, which indicates that the two letters were probably sent to Alamanni at Milan by different couriers, so that if misfortune overtook one the other might arrive, a precaution which Lorenzo frequently took.

This letter, as the others do, deals with the complicated political matters of the time in which the King of Naples and the Pope were chiefly mixed up. In one instance Lorenzo sent a letter to Alamanni to be read out to Lodovico Il Moro, and inclosed at the same time certain secret instructions on another half-sheet, partly in cipher. From this latter we get an early use of the phrase, "making himself cheap," for Lorenzo believes that Lodovico will of his own accord give himself away cheap—"credo da sè medesimo farà in modo che farà di sè assai buono merchato"—sometimes.

The Magnificent perpetuates a homely simile, as, when referring to his adversaries having made a great mess of their affairs, he compares it to his having once tried to cook a cabbage and forgot the salt. In another he admits that it is easier to propound difficulties than to solve them; and in yet another he complains that he has written letters all day long, and feels tired—"Io ho scripto tutto dì et sono stracho." On Jan. 15, 1490, Lorenzo writes that he is glad Alamanni consents to stay some weeks in Rome, as it is well that he should know Rome and Rome him; he will see that men are much the same there as in other courts—"Io so che fu gia qualche tempo da giovane che Sapavate intratenere il o lli donne ad uno medesimo tempo"—and is sure the Cardinals will give him no greater trouble.

Apropos of another letter from Lorenzo to Alamanni, and in sending him some excellent Vernaccia wine, Mr. Tayler points out that a fondness for Vernaccia wine, according to Dante, had sent others to purgatory, notably Pope Martin IV. (who also had a weakness for eels):

"Ebbe la santa Chiesa in le sue braccia;
Dal Torso fu, a purga per digiuno
L'anguille di Bolsena e la Varnaccia."

In another letter three days later he asks if the Pope liked the Vernaccia wine, in which case more shall be sent to him; and in yet a later one Lorenzo is glad to hear that the Pope is going to ask for more wine. On May 17, 1491, Lorenzo announces that he is sending two fiaschi of Casentino wine, as the Pope has urgently requested him to do. He will send more wine in a short time and will continue to send different kinds until the Pope finds one to his taste. He has no greater wish at present than to keep the Pope merry and satisfied.

During the Summer of 1491 Lorenzo's daughter, Maddalena, wife of the Pope's son, Francheschetto Cibo, gave birth to a son, and Lorenzo urged his Holiness to constitute a State for him and allow him to take his rank among the other Barons, and also to set aside a good sum of money for his family. There are frequent references in Lorenzo's letters to his son-in-law, and at length we gather that Franceschetto is being treated in a satisfactory way.

The last of Lorenzo's letters is dated March 20, 1491; he died on April 9, 1492; but the story of the march of events is continued by the numerous minutes of letters from Alamanni to Piero de Medici, and takes us up to the invasion of Italy by Charles VII. of France and the fall of Piero de Medici.

After Lorenzo the Magnificent the interest of the letters naturally lessens, and only a few of the others can be mentioned here. One of these is of outstanding importance; it is from Lorenzino di Pier Francesco de' Medici, Venice, February 5, 1536, (old style,) in which the writer attempts to justify his having, with the help of a hired assassin named Scoronconcolo, murdered Alessandro, Duke of Florence, just a month previously.

WORD FROM STEFANSSON.

Explorer Reported All Well in Letter to MacMillan.

It was announced yesterday that Vilhjalmur Stefansson, the arctic explorer, who had not been heard from for more than a year, wrote to Donald B. MacMillan, while the leader of the Crocker Land expedition was in Etah, Greenland.

Stefansson sent tidings from his camp in the Bay of Mercy, Bank's Land, to MacMillan, and the message was forwarded across the United States and to Greenland via Copenhagen. The letter was brought over the Greenland ice cap to Etah by Knud Rasmussen, the Danish explorer, who is now in the Far North on an expedition with two companions. When MacMillan made his famous trip to Finlay Land he was only about three days distant by arctic travel from Stefansson, although both explorers were unaware of each other's proximity.

The message from Stefansson was received by MacMillan in the Spring of 1916. At that time Stefansson was evidently in good spirits, and all was well with his expedition. This news is of interest, following the announcement made yesterday by Bishop Stringer at Dawson, who had just returned from a five months' trip up the Arctic Coast as far as Cape Bathurst, and reported no tidings of Stefansson. It is the belief of explorers in New York that Stefansson has reached Winter Harbor, Melville Island, and is in camp there.

D. B. MacMillan of the Crocker Land expedition said that Captain Joseph E. Bernier, who has just returned from the arctic on his ship the Guide, left a large cache at Winter Harbor several years ago. This cache is well stocked with provisions, enough to last for a year or more, if Stefansson is fortunate enough to establish a camp on Melville Island. On a former voyage to the arctic Captain Bernier established a number of these caches, or life-saving stations, in the polar regions.

PLAN MANY WAR MEETINGS.

Security League Will Open Campaign in Several States.

The National Security League announced yesterday its week's plan for educating the public in the aims of the Government in the war by sending patriotic speakers throughout the country. The campaign will be begun in Massachusetts, and a "Woman's War Service Meeting" will be held in Carnegie Hall on Wednesday evening. Mrs. Thomas J. Preston, Jr., formerly Mrs. Grover Cleveland, will preside.

James M. Beck will open the campaign in Massachusetts at a meeting in Tremont Temple, Boston, on Tuesday. "Loyalty Week" campaigns will also be begun in New Jersey, Connecticut, Maryland, and Ohio, and the league expects to have meetings in at least twenty-five additional States within a few weeks. State Councils of Defense have been organized in Maryland and Connecticut to enroll speakers to tour the State, talking on patriotism and the aims of the nation. In Vermont a State convention was called, and speakers organized a State unit, with committees in every county and town, to organize smaller societies.

DELAY STRIKE ACTION.

Longshoremen's Leader Goes to Washington for a Conference.

T. V. O'Connor, President of the International Longshoremen's Association, left last night for Washington to confer with R. B. Stevens, Vice Chairman of the United States Shipping Board, over the threat of the marine workers in New York Harbor to strike on Nov. 1 unless wages are increased. Mr. O'Connor was accompanied by Charles Sheraton of the Tidewater Boatmen's Union, James Moran of the Consolidated Marine Engineers' Association, and William A. Maher of the Masters and Pilots' Association.

Mr. O'Connor said that at a council meeting held in the afternoon delegates from the various unions discussed labor conditions in the harbor. No action, he said, would be taken by the men until after his return from Washington.

The New York Boat Owners' Association will hold a conference this afternoon over the demands of their employes. There is a general feeling among the towboat owners and the leaders of the marine workers' organizations that the dispute will be settled amicably by arbitration.

JEWISH CONGRESS OFF INDEFINITELY

Call Will Not Be Issued Until Negotiations for Peace Are Under Way.

DUTY TO SUPPORT NATION

Committee Decides Nothing Should Be Done to Impair Unification of Country During War.

Taking the stand that nothing should be done to hold back the unification of the country during the war, the Executive Committee of the American Jewish Congress, at a meeting in the Metropolitan Building yesterday afternoon, decided by a vote of 73 to 31 to refrain from calling the Jewish Congress until peace negotiations were actually under way.

Those who favored the indefinite postponement of the congress, among whom were Henry Morgenthau, Rabbi Samuel Schulman, Judge Julian W. Mack, and Louis Marshall, declared that as patriotic Americans, all Jews had but one duty, to stand by the Government. All concurred in the view that as Americans, the questions that affect the country as a whole only ought to be considered, and that the interests of groups of individuals, large or small, should be relegated to the background during the war.

The meeting was called to fix the exact date for the congress, which it was planned would strive for full rights for Jews in all lands. It had been previously announced that Nov. 18 was the date for the congress to open at Washington, but because of war conditions and the preoccupation of persons interested in the congress with war work, it was thought best to postpone the meeting. The Administrative Committee met last week in an effort to set a definite date, but was unable to do so, and the matter was referred to a meeting of the Executive Committee.

The discussion by Henry Morgenthau, former Ambassador to Turkey, was typical of the attitude taken by those who thought that the present was no time for any other idea in the minds of the American people except the vigorous and active prosecution of the war.

"The time to have the congress is when we know that peace negotiations are at hand," said Mr. Morgenthau. "It would be unwise to take the chance of embarrassing the Administration by holding the congress now. At the present time all Jews in this country are good, plain Americans, and their feeling and regard for America is uppermost in their minds."

Rabbi Samuel Schulman said that as an American he did not wish to have any impression go forth that the Jews are segregating themselves from the larger American life in the present crisis in order to discuss special Jewish interests.

"What we should do above all is to concentrate our thoughts on winning this war for America, and certainly America winning it will mean a great help to us in procuring the rights of Jews in all lands," he said.

"From the point of view of the Jews themselves it is undesirable to hold the congress now, because we cannot tell what can be asked for the Jews. That will all depend on the outcome of the war. From the point of view of the power and effectiveness of the congress, it is undesirable to hold it now, because in the call for the congress it distinctly states that the gathering shall await the decision of what the Jews in other lands concerned really ask. Therefore, how can we hold the congress now, for how do we know what the Jews in Russia, Poland, Galicia, and the other countries affected really want?"

Rabbi Schulman argued that, if the congress were held soon, it would be legislating for the rights of Jews in various countries without really having information on which to base any conclusions.

"America's victory in the war, we can safely say, will mean a great and friendly help for procuring the rights of Jews all over the world," continued Rabbi Schulman, "and I consider it the duty of every American who loves his country to follow the counsel of those who intimate that it would be best if the congress were postponed."

MUNITIONS SHIP AFIRE PUTS BACK TO PORT

Crew, First in Panic for Fear of Explosion, Work Bravely And Save Vessel.

AN ATLANTIC PORT, Oct. 14.—A large British steamer, loaded with Admiralty stores, principally munitions and six thousand barrels of oil in bulk, was towed back into port tonight with fire in her engine room compartments under control after a twenty-four-hour battle to keep the ship from exploding.

The fire was discovered yesterday evening when the ship was thirty miles out of this port and off a Government station. Blue flames were seen coming from the engine room compartments. In these was stored the oil in every available reserve water tank.

Captain —— ordered the lifeboats swung out, and wireless calls for help brought several Government responses and two tugs. The crew in a temporary panic rushed into the boats, but was ordered back by the naval gunners, who were called into service.

Captain —— told them to be real Britons, and called on his firemen to go below and draw the fires. They made their way through the gases which were pouring off the burning oil, and, with the aid of the ship's pumps, which flooded the engine room, the ship's fires were soon out. Meanwhile the pilot had put the ship into a creek, where the winds were not so dangerous.

Fire was still burning in several of the tanks tonight, but it was said to be well under control and away from other combustibles. The cargo is valued at over $2,000,000, and only the quick action of the pumps is thought to have prevented an explosion. The ship is practically new.

An investigation has been started by Admiralty and United States officials to ascertain the cause.

HIS LIFE THREATENED, REV. DR. EATON SAYS

Tells Congregation Anonymous Letters from Germans Are in Hands of Government.

The Rev. Dr. Charles A. Eaton, pastor of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, told his congregation yesterday morning that his life had been threatened almost daily since the war started in August, 1914. He said that some of the threats came to him in anonymous letters, but that some of them were signed by men with "precious Hohenzollern names." After the service he said these letters had been turned over to the postal authorities.

The pastor told his congregation that one of the letters said that the writer would quit hell, if he found after his arrival that Dr. Eaton was there. The pastor said his reply to this letter was:

"So far as I am concerned, you may go to hell."

The services were marked by the presence of a band of Scotch pipers, three squads of Boy Scouts, the unfurling of a flag which had a star for each member of the Eaton Bible Class who joined the colors, the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner," an address by Colonel George H. Williams of the British Recruiting Mission, and the decoration of the church with the flags of the Allies. Dr. Eaton said that he had invited Mayor Mitchel to speak but that a sore throat kept him from being present. He said the City was "Blessed of God" to have such a Mayor. Speaking of "foreign assassins in our midst," he said it was time that "every man, woman and child get out and send them back to the caves of hell."

Dr. William Spurgeon of London, speaking at the Reformed Church of Harlem last night, said that the Armenian massacres by the Turks were inspired by the Kaiser and the German war party. He said nearly 1,500,000 Armenians were slain or left to die of starvation or exposure.

"I charge the Kaiser and the German war party," said Dr. Spurgeon, "with the murder of one and a half million Armenians. If the Kaiser had even raised a finger he could have stopped the cruelties."

In bidding good-bye to soldiers last night, Dr. Malcolm James MacLeod, at the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, said:

"Keep close to God and the bullets won't touch you. The war has brought to light a great deal of chance talk. Much is believed to be due to destiny. Fatalism is a dangerous doctrine and has a tendency to recklessness."

THREATENED DR. HILLIS.

He Tells of Black Hand Letter in Speech at Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, came to Chicago today to make an address. He announced that just before he left New York he received a Black Hand letter, threatening to blow his head off when he appeared on the platform here, but added that it worried him not in the slightest degree.

German atrocities were described by Dr. Hillis, and the determination of the United Kingdom to see the war through was set forth by T. P. O'Connor, Member of Parliament, at a Liberty Loan rally sponsored by the National Security League as the fourth of a cycle of patriotic mass meetings.

Both speakers have visited the devastated portions of Belgium and Northern France, and pictured the scenes they had witnessed, while Dr. Hillis quoted portions of affidavits obtained by allied agents in proof of his assertions that the crimes were the direct outcome of Germany's prearranged plan for making war.

PREACHER LAUDS I. W. W.'S.

Rev. Mr. Strong, Congregationalist, Likens Them to Early Christians.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 14.—Members of the I. W. W. were compared to the early Christians and otherwise extolled and ministers of the Congregational Church were enjoined to lend succor to them by the Rev. Sydney Strong of Seattle in an address to the National Council of Congregational Churches here today.

Mr. Strong told of his intimate acquaintance with a large number of I. W. W.'s, of visiting their members in prisons and generally of an admiration they commanded in him.

"Their leaders are men of beatific countenance," he said. "They believe in beautiful philosophy or nonresistance and are bounden to a cause they think is right. They are idealists, and they have a remarkable solidarity of purpose. They hold to a principle of 'fold your arms,' a remarkable policy of nonresistance. Their internationalism and interracialism is according to the most lauded standards. Their organization is open to all alike."

Distribution of wealth in this country was deplored by the speaker. In forty American cities, he said, 2 per cent. of the people controlled 60 per cent. of the wealth.

CHURCH HONORS SOLDIERS.

Intercession Chapel Tablet Tells Names of Its 120 Men in Service.

A tablet with the names of 120 men enlisted in the army from the congregation of the Chapel of the Intercession was placed in the chancel of the chapel, at Broadway and 155th Street, yesterday at patriotic services conducted by the Rev. Milo H. Gates. Only two of the men were drafted; 118 had enlisted before the enactment of the selective draft law or did not come within the draft age.

Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity, with which the Chapel of the Intercession is connected, spoke at a service last night for those who have relatives at the front or in training camps. He praised the record of the congregation, and said that of the ten chapels in Trinity Parish it had sent the largest quota to the defense of the country.

"It is right that America is in the war," said Dr. Manning, "and the 120 men who have gone from this parish are fighting for right, justice, Christianity, and human rights. Those left at home should also do their part by 'keeping the home fires burning'; they should aid by buying Liberty bonds; they must see that men who stand for the principles for which we are fighting are kept in public office."

The speaker warned also against a false peace, and said the war must be ended only with the crushing of Prussian militarism.

WAR LIFE INSURANCE UP TO THE AGE OF 65

Sample of Contract Carrying Risks on Soldiers and Sailors Made Public.

COVERS ALL THE SERVICES

Payments on Disability or Death—Rate for $5,000 Policy at Age of 25, $3.30 a Month.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The conditions under which the contracts for the insurance of soldiers and sailors engaged in the war will be issued, in accordance with the War Insurance act, were explained in an official announcement issued by the Treasury Department tonight.

The contract of insurance, a specimen of which was made public by William C. De Lancy, Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department, which will administer the new law, will be largely dependent for its success upon funds which bond sales of the second Liberty Loan are expected to furnish. The new law, under which the contract has been prepared is applicable to the entire naval and military establishment of the United States, including the army, navy, marine corps, coast guard, naval reserves, National Guard volunteers, nurses, and any other branches serving with the army and navy. Provision is made for family allowances, for reeducation of wounded and crippled, for compensation, without cost, in case of death or injury and for the additional protection of insurance at very small cost.

Terms of Specimen Contract.

The specimen contract made public is based on the age of 25 years, and is for $5,000. The premium for such a contract will be $3.30 a month. The insurance will be payable in installments of $28.75 a month in case of death or total disability. The public is cautioned to differentiate between the premiums and the installments, in which the insurance is payable.

The table given for a $5,000 policy begins with a monthly premium of $3.15 at the age of 15 years, 16 years, and 17 years; increases to $3.20 per month for the ages of 18, 19, and 20, to $3.25 per month for the ages of 21, 22, and 23; to $3.30 per month for the ages of 24 and 25, to $3.35 per month for the ages of 26 and 27, to $3.40 for the age of 28, to $3.45 per month for the ages of 29 and 30, to $3.50 for the age 31, with progressive increases for ages above those given. The minimum amount of insurance is $1,000, and the maximum is $10,000.

The insurance issued for any of the following aggregate amounts upon any one life will be converted into monthly installments of $5.75 a month for $1,000, $8.63 a month for $1,500, $11.50 a month for $2,000, $14.38 a month for $2,500, $17.25 a month for $3,000, $20.13 a month for $3,500, $23 a month for $4,000, $25.88 a month for $4,500, $28.75 a month for $5,000, $31.63 a month for $5,500, $34.50 a month for $6,000, $37.38 a month for $6,500, $40.25 a month for $7,000, $43.13 a month for $7,500, $46 a month for $8,000, $48.88 a month for $8,500, $51.75 a month for $9,000, $54.63 a month for $9,500, and $57.50 a month for $10,000.

These installments will be payable during the total or permanent disability of the insured, or if death occur without such disability, for 240 months, or if death occur following such disability for a sufficient number of months to make 240 in all, including months of disability already paid for. The insurance will be issued at monthly rates for the age nearest the birthday of the insured when the insurance goes into effect, increasing annually on the anniversary of the policy to the rate for an age one year higher.

Rates for a $10,000 Policy.

The monthly rates for each age from 15 to 65 for a $10,000 policy will be: 15, 16, and 17 years, $6.30; 18, 19, and 20 years, $6.40; 21, 22, and 23 years, $6.50; 24 and 25 years, $6.60; 26 and 27 years, $6.70; 28 years, $6.80; 29 and 30 years, $6.90; 31 years, $7; 32 years, $7.10; 33 years, $7.20; 34 years, $7.30; 35 years, $7.40; 36 years, $7.50; 37 years, $7.60; 38 years, $7.70; 39 years, $7.90; 40 years, $8.10; 41 years, $8.20; 42 years, $8.40; 43 years, $8.70; 44 years, $8.90; 45 years, $9.20; 46 years, $9.50; 47 years, $9.90; 48 years, $10.30; 49 years, $10.80; 50 years, $11.40; 55 years, $15.50; 56 years, $16.40; 57 years, $17.60; 58 years, $19; 59 years, $20.50; 60 years, $22.10; 61 years, $24; 62 years, $26; 63 years, $28.20; 64 years, $30.70, and 65 years, $33.50.

For a policy of $1,000 the rates range from 63 cents a month for a soldier of 15 to $3.35 a month for a person of 65 years; for a policy of $1,500 the monthly payments range from 95 cents at 15 to $5.03 at 65; for a policy of $2,000 the monthly payments range from $1.26 at 15 to $6.70 at 65, and the payments rise in steady progression until the maximum monthly payment of $33.50 is required from a person of 65 years on a $10,000 policy.

The insurance may be continued at these increasing term rates during the war and for not longer than five years after the war, and may be continued thereafter without medical examination if the policy be converted into a form selected before the expiration of such five years by the insured from the forms of insurance which will be provided by the bureau, provided that premiums are paid therefor at net rates computed by the bureau according to the American experience table of mortality, and interest at 3½ per cent. per annum.

DRIVE ON HYPHEN BEGINS.

Foreign Born to be Taught Just What America Means.

Efforts will be adopted this week by the Vigilantes and the "Children of the Crucible," which is Colonel Roosevelt's picturesque term for the Melting Pot, to line up men of all extractions for unhyphenated Americanism. Hundreds of citizens, who were either born in foreign countries or whose parents were born abroad, have signified their intention of doing all in their power to teach foreign-born citizens just what America means.

"All Americans of other race origin must act toward the countries from which their ancestors severally sprang as Washington and his associates, in their day, acted; otherwise they are traitors to America," the appeal of the two organizations reads. "This applies especially to all Americans of German blood who directly or indirectly in any manner support Germany as against the United States and the Allies of the United States. It applies no less specifically to all American citizens of Irish blood who are led into following the same course, not by their love of Germany, but by their hatred of England. One motive is as inexcusable as the other, and in each case the action is treasonable to the United States."

Colonel Roosevelt has received many letters from citizens of all political faiths and various former allegiances who insist that the Government must be upheld against all foreign and domestic foes and that the Government be spurred to speedier and more effective action against anything pro-German.

In supporting Colonel Roosevelt's plea for Americanism, Jesse Isidor Straus of R. H. Macy & Co. writes:

"Whether we agree or disagree in all your activities and pronouncements, there should be no difference of opinion as to the propriety or wisdom at this time of indorsing and acclaiming the sentiments contained in 'The Children of the Crucible.' You have, with rare insight into our most vital need, done more than any other man in the nation to awaken a conscience, both personal and national. Your vigorous statement of Americanism, of loyalty, and of patriotism has my support, without reservation or qualification."

Curtus C. Bushnell, Professor of Classics of Syracuse University, wrote: "I want to learn to whom I can report some of our anti-American citizens and what I can do with my pen for America."

60-HOUR COURSE FOR ALIENS

Merchants' Association Takes Up Americanization Work.

A plan for "Americanizing aliens," to make them familiar with the language and customs of the country, has been adopted by the Merchants' Association, which has appointed a committee to take charge of the work. Among the members of the committee are Michael Friedsam, President of Altman & Company; Sam A. Lewisohn, of Adolph Lewisohn & Sons; Frank Presbrey, of the Mayor's Committee on National Defense, and Paul Starrett, of the George A. Fuller Company, who is Chairman.

This program lays stress on the importance of instituting an extensive educational campaign on behalf of the 500,000 immigrants in this city who are unable to understand or to speak the English language. More than 300,000 of these, it is said, are unable to read or write, even in their own language. Many of them are manual workers who are unable to attend night school, and these, the committee believes, should have a chance of learning the language of this country.

The committee has submitted recommendations which in brief say that, both as a war measure and a measure of public policy, a campaign should be started to teach the aliens in the city to speak, read and write English; that the problem cannot be solved by the present school system, and that it has been found that sixty hours of instruction will enable an illiterate person to read, write and speak 600 English words in common use.

ENTERTAIN AT PLATTSBURG.

"Hitchy-Koo" Company and a Lecturer Are Heard by Students.

Special to The New York Times.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Oct. 14.—The "Hitchy-Koo" company, now playing at Raymond Hitchcock's Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, appeared at the camp theatre here tonight before an audience of 3,300 students and officers. The members of the company got a great ovation, and were entertained both before and after the performance. The company was brought here at the expense of the camp in four Pullman sleepers, and two baggage cars held the scenery.

The trench warfare training will start this morning and continue during the week, and the students will spend two or three nights in the trenches.

The members of the Fourteenth New York Company were entertained at a dinner at the Y. M. C. A. building in the city last night.

At the camp theatre this morning Leo E. Miller, who was a member of the Roosevelt expedition to South America, and who is a student in the Fifteenth Company, delivered a stereopticon lecture of his experiences.

The Rev. Raymond C. Knox, chaplain of Columbia University, preached at the camp Y. M. C. A. building this morning.

Cape May Aviation Station Opens.

CAPE MAY, N. J., Oct. 14.—The navy airplane station and aviation school here will be opened tomorrow, when the department takes possession of the place for which the present Congress appropriated $150,000. Today seventy-five students arrived to begin their instructions, and four airplanes arrived also in charge of airmen. The forty buildings and hangars are nearly completed. The station occupies ten city blocks on the southern edge of Cape May Harbor.

ASK HEARING OF BISHOP.

Dr. Carstensen's Friends to Present Petitions in His Behalf.

Bishop David Greer was asked yesterday in a letter sent by a committee of residents of Riverdale and Kingsbridge to appoint a time when he would be at home to the committee, who expressed the desire to wait on him with petitions signed by about four hundred persons requesting his intervention in behalf of Dr. G. A. Carstensen, rector of Christ Church, Riverdale, who resigned after fifteen years of service. Dr. Carstensen's resignation was the climax of his differences with the vestrymen which began after he permitted some negro children from a nearby orphan asylum to occupy places in the church at the Sunday morning service.

The committee was appointed at a meeting of the Kingsbridge and Riverdale branches of the Home Defense League held at the Kingsbridge Police Station. It was said at the meeting that the residents of Riverdale and Kingsbridge of all denominations were keenly interested in urging Bishop Greer to keep Dr. Carstensen in the neighborhood of his activities for so many years. Among the members of the committee are J. Arundell, A. C. Schwab, the Rev. Father Michael Murray, the Rev. Father Edward F. Holden, and the Rev. Dr. Campbell.

E. P. Ketchum Sues for Divorce.

Everett P. Ketchum, New York lawyer, has filed suit in the Supreme Court for a divorce from Mrs. Jennie Kelly Ketchum. The plaintiff was sued in this county several years ago for a separation by Mrs. Ada Brown Ketchum, in which action Ketchum testified that he had been attentive to Mrs. Jennie Kelly, a divorcee, before his marriage. His wife divorced him later in Connecticut and he married Mrs. Kelly. They lived together about six months and separated eight months ago.

Window Cleaners Will Strike Today

The window cleaners of this city, according to handbills circulated yesterday, will go on strike today. They will meet early this morning at the Union Headquarters at 431 East Sixth Street to receive final instructions from their leaders. The demands made by the Window Cleaners' Protective Union upon the employers include an increase of $6 a week, making $24 the weekly pay, and the shortening of the weekly work by a half day.

BUYING GOODS WITHOUT TROUBLE.

Storekeepers often run out of a certain line of goods. To replenish, a visit to the wholesale district, with many hours spent in toilsome examination in different houses, is the inevitable result. To obviate trouble, buyers should state their needs in a brief communication to The New York Times and the morning after a small advertisement will appear on the Business Page which will go before those who have the required goods. Cost for service, 50 cents a line of six words.

The Times will provide a box number for replies if advertiser prefers not to have letters sent to his address.

The Man Without a Country

Philip Nolan damned his country in 1807. Until he died in 1863 he never heard the name of his country mentioned again.

He suffered one of the most terrible punishments ever inflicted on mortal man.

YOU live in the dearest land on the face of the earth. You enjoy the blessings of Liberty. But the Nation is at war. You are at war. Kaiserism and Hohenzollernism are seeking by every trick and strategy known to man and the devil to rob you of your Liberty and steal your country from you.

YOU may be a man without a country. All of us will be without a country if the Kaiser has his way.

Buy Liberty Bonds and preserve Liberty for all the world.

Buy Liberty Bonds and preserve our country.

United States Government Bonds of the Second Liberty Loan are issued in denominations of $50 and multiples of that sum.

They bear interest at 4%—payable semi-annually.

You can buy Liberty Bonds at any bank and on the partial payment plan if you wish—Buy all you can.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION IN AMERICA AND EUROPE

When nonplussed for explanations that explained severe declines in the stock market brokers have been known to say, whimsically, that there appeared to be more sellers than buyers. Manifestly, there were many more sellers last week than buyers; sellers who owned shares that they dared not, or could not, hold any longer, as well as those who sold in the expectation of being able to acquire their stock back at much lower prices when the time for deliveries came. Such an outpouring of investment securities as has been seen in recent weeks has seldom been equalled. Reading the ticker one might be excused for deciding that some vast economic change has been worked in the affairs of this country which made securities of old-established corporations—of railroads staggering under a record-breaking volume of tonnage, of manufacturing corporations unwilling to accept new orders because of the sold-up condition of their plants, and of mines unable to meet current demands for fuel—no longer desirable either as investments or for speculative possibilities. Brokerage houses have reported the execution of selling orders for institutions which have carried stocks and bonds for years. These offerings have fallen upon a market almost deserted by a public whose interest in price movements is notoriously fickle, but which usually responds to a break that brings stocks down to bargain levels. The conclusion is natural that the public does not regard securities even at this level as bargains.

Although both of the two general classes of securities dealt in on the Stock Exchange, rails and industrials, have fallen in value in about the same proportion, they have been subjected to influences of widely different nature. Yet the effect has been the same; an indicated lessening of the margin of profits in which the stockholder has an interest. The railroads have been growing more embarrassed month by month by their inability to accomplish the impossible in the way of holding down costs in their industry when higher prices for the same articles, including labor, have been paid and carried on to the consumer in every other industry. Until the Government undertook to fix prices in a few basic lines manufacturers, steamship owners, and agriculturists did not allow themselves to be cramped by successive demands for higher wages or increased costs of materials. They paid the bills as agents for the consumer, knowing that they could not only get their higher costs into selling prices but an added margin for themselves. The railroads have their rates, down to the amount that they can charge for excess baggage or for shunting a freight car on to a siding, fixed on a basis that the Interstate Commerce Commission regards as about as changeable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. Caught between the two millstones of rising costs and permanently low rates the stockholders has been squeezing himself out. In the meantime, the amount debited against the railroads for additions which they should have made to meet the growth of population and business and have not been able to make because no banker would attempt to sell anything but short-term notes in these times, has been steadily increasing. The situation has become so bad that it is almost certainly going to become better, because the case before the commission will soon be self-arguing.

---

One of the favorite topics for a difference of opinion in the financial district has been the effect of the depression in securities on the new Liberty Loan offering. The loan has dragged lamentably; that is a fact frankly admitted by the Secretary of the Treasury. Furthermore, it is a well-known fact that an investor who sees his capital as represented by red and blue certificates marked off a few dollars every day is not keenly interested in opportunities to make new investments. That is about as far as the case for the theory that the decline in the market explains the slowness of subscriptions for the loan can be carried. If every investor who has been disturbed by the fall in prices on the Stock Exchange were eliminated as a possible buyer of his Government's war bonds, there would still remain an investing power which should offer to take up five billions of dollars' worth of 4 per cent. bonds. As a matter of fact, where the depression has been felt most keenly, that is to say, in the City of New York, the efforts of the salesmen have been productive of much better results than has been the case in the Western States where men rarely talk about market movements. A more plausible explanation of the fact that with half of the allotted time gone only a fifth of the allotted bonds have been sold lies in the proved fact that the new war taxes have made such serious inroads upon many persons' expectations of income that they have considered themselves unable to buy bonds, whereas, of course, they should have set about ways of economizing to provide the new tax money and bought bonds for the incentive that such an honorable debt would give them toward new standards of thrift. And a still better explanation lies in the complacent lethargy in which so many Americans have persisted in remaining, despite every effort to stir them up to a realization of their own stake in the great contest being waged "over there." At the eleventh hour they will shake off this indifference and buy bonds. They did in the first loan, and there is every reason to expect that they can be awakened in time to subscribe to the second. Unfortunately, they will wait so long that the moral effect of a great oversubscription gained early in the campaign will be lost. Even with sons drawn from every little community by the training camps, there still exists in a large part of the country a comfortable feeling that the war will be ended without any suffering on the part of the United States less kind than that which results from added tax burdens.

---

Peace may become a fact before the new army becomes an important part of the forces making slow but certain work of Prussian militarism, but the consideration should not take one's mind from his immediate duty to act as he would if he felt sure that the struggle was still young. Evidence is accumulating that Germany is beginning to crumble. No better augury for the future of the Allies could be asked than the multiplied signs of discontent within the Central Empires. Admiral von Capelle is gone; Chancellor Michaelis is in disfavor; the Reichstag is torn by dissension. Even a sporadic outbreak of mutiny has far-reaching significance when it occurs in a navy so thoroughly subject to discipline as the Kaiser's. The despairing prediction repeated by von Tirpitz that England must finally yield to the submarines ends with admission that "We are now at the fateful hour of our existence. Germany cannot maintain her position as a world power unless her position is founded on might."

LONDON MARKET IMPROVES.

Military Successes Help Stocks, Which Close Strong.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—Stocks showed an improving tone throughout the week and closed strong, influenced by continued military successes and the revolt in the German Navy. The demand for investment securities is increasing, the most prominent feature being the steady appreciation of the 5 per cent. war loan, which rose to 95 2-16, although small realizations at the close caused a reaction to 95.

Consols were very firm over 56, other high-grade issues participating well. The demand for British railway stocks was revived, and there was a moderate rally in Grand Trunk, which was not quite maintained to the end.

The speculative groups were more active, the chief demand recently having concentrated on popular oil shares. Anglo-Egyptian B and Trinidad leaseholds were principally favored, although Burtahs were also animated. British American Tobacco was strengthened by the announcement of the sale of 1,000,000 Imperial Tobacco of Canada shares instead of their distribution among shareholders as originally intended.

Cuban Ports made a good response to the announcement of the settlement terms. Bondholders are to receive the equivalent of their present security in Cuban Government 5 per cent. bonds, secured by 50 per cent. of the port dues. The assets of the company are to be transferred to the shareholders.

The weekly Treasury statement disclosed sales of the new war bond in the first five days amounting to £6,154,000, the figure not including applications through joint-stock banks. Treasury bills were reduced by £8,874,000. There was an active demand for money, and up to 4½ per cent. was paid for call loans. The tone of the discount market was firmer and there was less inquiry for short-dated Treasury bills.

PARIS MARKET STEADIER.

American Coppers Close Higher—Rentes Weaker.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 14.—The Bourse presented few interesting features last week beyond the sharp fall in Paris Omnibus shares after their recent rise. This was owing to the strike of employes, but the best part of the loss was regained Friday after the company undertook to examine into the claims.

The markets have been uncertain, with certain new favorites spurting several points, as was instanced by the Salmson Aeroplane Motors, which gained an additiontl 180 francs on the week, while sugars, Hotchkiss, and other speculative war pets lost considerable ground. Colliery shares are on the upward trend. Mexicans remain firm and the Russian group recovered sharply on Thursday on news of the formation of the new Coalition Cabinet, but this section of the market remains unstable and obviously dangerous. Shipping and shipbuilding values regained most of the ground lost during the week before, despite the decision of the Government to extend the taxation on freights, the State having appointed several members of shipping companies to the advisory board. The Transatlantique, issuing 140,000 ordinary shares of 150 francs at 235, reserved for old shareholders a proportion of two shares of old against one of the new issue.

The war loan remains steady, but rentes were again weaker. American coppers closed higher after their recent fall. There was further spasmodic week-end profit-taking, but the general tone of the market was sound at the close.

Saturday sessions of the Bourse have been resumed, but are highly unpopular, especially as the banks close at noon.

Send Your Money to Fight for Your Children

You can't lend yourself or your little son, but you can lend money. Other men's sons are "over there"—fighting so that you and your children may enjoy "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Soon there will be hundreds of thousands of our boys fighting to insure the freedom that you have enjoyed. The happiness of your country—your home—your children—depends on how liberally you respond to the Second Liberty Loan.

You Give Nothing—You Loan to the Nation

Money is as necessary as men to win the war. But you are not asked to give money. Loan it—at four per cent. interest—with the strongest security in the world behind the bonds you get—the United States Government's guarantee.

Buy at least one Liberty Bond for each of your children because of what it means to their future. Let the Liberty Bonds form the nest egg of their savings. You'll never miss the cost, for you can pay for the bonds in easy installments. Ask your bank, or any bank, to explain the plan to you.

You Believe In Insurance

You know how dangerous it is to be without adequate life, fire, and other familiar forms of insurance.

But of what avail is it to in ure the individual, if the nation i not insured?

How will insurance on your home benefit you, if your liberty is taken from you—if you, your home, your family, and everything you possess or hold dear are swept away in a deluge of destruction and desolation?

Make no mistake. The danger is real. Our country must be insured and not a moment must be lost.

Help Insure Your Country

That is the purpose of the Liberty Loan—to take out the greatest insurance policy in the history of the world.

Without this money the war cannot be won, and the fate of Belgium may be ours.

Help your country insure itself by buying Liberty Bonds. Buy all you can and buy them quickly—October 27th is the last day.

You are not asked to give your money—only to lend it. Buying Liberty Bonds is the same as putting money in the bank. The Government guarantees that you will get it back, and pays you 4% interest for its use.

Any bank or trust company will take your subscription. Liberty Bonds are sold also by many department stores and other organizations. You can pay for them by easy partial payments.

Three Scraps of Paper

There are three scraps of paper which affect every American. The first scrap no American will ever see. The second scrap some Americans have seen. The third scrap every American must see.

The First—a Treaty

The first was a treaty. By ruthlessly overruling all that it definitely stated, a certain Emperor brought Death, Insanity, Famine, Terror and Atrocities unspeakable into the world.

The Second—a Drawing

The second is a drawing—a simple cartoon—so direct in its message that it burns itself into the memory and won't come out. It depicts a little boy, with a red-dripping gash over his forehead, staggering under the cruel lashing of a huge Prussian officer. This cartoon was made by Louis Raemaekers, a Dutchman and neutral, and is one of many he made, for he was in Belgium and drew what he saw!

You have never seen anything so horrible as he saw, for we don't thrash little boys here because they happen to speak a different language. Although we have never seen these things, yet we—you and I—are going to help stop them, and the third scrap of paper is the means we are going to adopt to do it.

The Third—a Liberty Bond

The third scrap of paper is another sort of treaty. It's a treaty that will not be torn up. It's the promise of the United States to pay back with 4% interest every cent you loan to our Government for the successful prosecution of the war. That's why a Liberty Bond is the safest investment in the world. Besides, the second scrap of paper shows what the first could not forestall. Let the third protect America from such a fate.

CENTRAL REJECTS WEST SIDE OFFER

Flatly Declines to Accept New Proposals for Rental of Lands Required.

HINT OF A COURT FIGHT

Company, Resisting Compulsory Settlement, May Assail Law's Constitutionality.

The New York Central Railroad Company, through Ira A. Place, its Vice President, yesterday rejected the "tentative proposals" of the Joint Conference Committee of the Board of Estimate and the Public Service Commission for changing the rail facilities on the west side. The "proposals" were made public by the Joint Committee on Oct. 6, and were the result of negotiations undertaken after the Board of Estimate had failed to solve the long-standing "West Side Improvement" controversy, and the Legislature had delegated authority over the project to the Joint Committee. The most important recommendations of the "proposals" were that the railroad should pay rent for the lands required by it, instead of taking title in fee simple, as was proposed in a tentative agreement reached by the railroad and the representatives of the Board of Estimate in June; that the rights and leaseholds acquired by the railroad be subject to termination without legal proceeding after twenty-five years, and that the changes, subject to these conditions, be carried out largely along the lines proposed in the agreement with the Board of Estimate Committee last June.

Mr. Place's reply to these suggestions was summed up in this concluding sentence of a long statement issued by him yesterday:

"The power resides nowhere to compel the company to accept these proposals or proposals of a like character."

In another part of the statement Mr. Place said: "The railroad company cannot and will not, at any time or under any circumstances or conditions which can be proposed by anyone under this statute (the Ottinger-Ellenbogen amendment to the laws of 1911) make or enter into any contract."

Notwithstanding the unqualified rejection of the proposals, it was announced last night by James W. Adams, Secretary of the Joint Conference Committee, that public hearings on its proposals would begin in the room of the Board of Estimate at 10:30 o'clock on Thursday morning. Mr. Adams said that he had invited Vice President Place and G. A. Harwood, the chief engineer of the New York Central, to attend and that, although he had not received a reply, he and the other members of the committee expected them to be present.

"Under the provisions of the Ottinger-Ellenbogen law an agreement must be reached, if at all, by Dec. 1," said Mr. Adams. "No agreement having been reached by that time, the Public Service Commission is given exclusive jurisdiction and can proceed to effect a settlement by compulsion."

The New York Central having decided to reject the proposals of the Joint Committee, and to resist a settlement by compulsion will, it was learned last night, probably assail the constitutionality of the Ottinger-Ellenbogen law in the courts.

Central's Attitude Explained.

Mr. Place began his statement yesterday by explaining that, with one exception, he had not attended any of the sessions of the Joint Conference Committee, and that he desired to correct the impression conveyed at the time the proposals were made public "that an agreement had been reached." The railroad company had been convinced from the outset, he said, that no settlement could be reached under the Ottinger-Ellenbogen enactment, and so informed Governor Whitman while the measure was pending in the Legislature.

"The amending statute took effect on June 2, 1917," his statement read in part. "It became a law on the eve of the consummation of a proposed agreement, which had been reached after long and thorough discussion and public hearings, which by its terms was peculiarly favorable to the city and which had received the practically unanimous approval of the press, of most civic and all business organizations which had taken an interest in the matter. Specifically, it (the amending statute) limited the time within which an agreement might be reached to Dec. 1, 1917, a total of 181 days. No agreement being reached on that date, the Public Service Commission is directed to make a general plan, to be carried into effect through compulsory provisions. On Oct. 6, when these tentative proposals were given out, 128 of those days had passed. There now remain about 45 days before Dec. 1. The plans and profiles which were under consideration at the time the law was amended, and which were the basis of the 1916 agreement, were those which were submitted to the railroad company by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment itself.

"Any modification of those plans, looking to an agreement, must be made and submitted by the same body. Under the statute they must then be on public exhibition at least thirty days before any action is taken. The possibility of this being done may be left to the imagination."

Mr. Place called attention to the fact that the proposals of the joint committee were not accompanied by any new maps, profiles, prices, estimates or figures of any kind, and that all of the changes suggested in the physical plan had heretofore been proposed by various interests, as well as the New York Central, and had been rejected "as either unwise or impracticable." Then Mr. Place took up in detail the chief features of the plan of the joint committee and the objections to them.

"While these proposals do not contain definite information, they do contain some astounding propositions," he said. "Among them are these:

"1. The area of lands and interests in lands which would be required for the physical plan as here proposed would not vary materially, if at all, from that required under the plan of 1916. It is proposed that the company pay rent for these lands and others to be acquired by the city. The city is to acquire the fee of the entire roadway from Seventy-second Street to the north line of Fort Washington Park. This the company is to convey by warranty deed, presumably free and clear, to the city in perpetuity. It is then to accept a leasehold right to use these identical lands; such right is not to be mortgaged, except as specified, and is to be subject to absolute termination at the end of twenty-five years.

"Does any one suppose that this right of way is not covered by existing railroad mortgages, or that this land, now being an essential part of the railroad, could by any possibility be released from those mortgages unless or until it could be shown that they were no longer needed for railroad purposes; in other words, that the trustees of the holders of bonds secured by these mortgages—savings banks, trust companies, all sorts of institutions and individuals—could surrender an integral portion of their security? It is safe to say they would not, if they could. For such of the property, covered by these mortgages, as it was proposed to convey to the city under the agreement of 1916 we were in a position to obtain releases, for the reason that title to other property in fee required to carry out the plan was to be substituted.

"2. It is proposed that the city pay for the lands so acquired and also the cost of construction of strictly municipal improvements. But how; in cash? No, but out of rentals which in some manner are to become due to the city. The real estate which the company was to convey or surrender to the city under the 1916 agreement was appraised by the Special Committee of Appraisal of the Real Estate Board of New York at $8,948,984; that which was to be granted by the city to the company was appraised by the same committee at $12,811,209, leaving a balance in favor of the city of $3,862,225.

"The value of the roadway which it is now proposed shall be conveyed to the city in fee on the basis of assessed valuation with consequence of damages would much more than wipe out this balance. What is there left as a source of rent to accrue to the city to meet these obligations? It makes no difference whether it is on a rental basis or a fee basis. If in an exchange of real estate the values are equal, there is neither a cash balance on a fee basis nor a rental balance on a rental basis.

"3. But the most astounding proposition of all is that this joint committee, two of whom are Public Service Commissioners, having assumed duties and obligations to both the public and public service corporations, and especially charged with respect to adequate railroad facilities, actually proposes that all the rights and leaseholds granted to the railroad company shall be 'subject to complete termination by the city after twenty-five years without legal proceedings.' This, under the terms of the proposal, would include the entire right of the railroad company to operate on Manhattan Island, an absolute right which it now has without limitation as to time, and which has been so established by the decisions of all the courts of the State having jurisdiction.

"In other words, it is proposed that any future city administration may have the right to destroy the most important terminal on Manhattan Island, serving millions of people, the most important cities in New York State and in the Central Western States, and served by thousands of miles of railroad. Of what use are these railroads without terminals? And this is to be done without any provision or consideration for investment in freight stations, yards, and terminals, making them useless for the purposes for which they were constructed, and thereby depriving not only the railroad company but the shippers and the business interests of Manhattan Island of all these necessary facilities.

"Not only this, but every warehouse, every industrial building of any kind, erected on the west side of Manhattan Island, and located with special reference to the use of these facilities and depending on private track connections, would be seriously damaged or utterly destroyed apparently without any recourse whatsoever.

"The situation here has nothing to do with the question of public policy under which it is argued that municipalities should reserve or have the right to take over the entire property of a public service corporation, all of which is located within the jurisdiction of the municipality. To argue that any one municipality, (and, if one, why not all?) should have the right, and that it would be in the public interest, to acquire an integral and necessary portion of the property of a public service corporation, and being a great, important and necessary means of interstate commerce, extending through many jurisdictions, municipal and State, is arrant nonsense.

"Legislative authority is necessary for the solution of this problem. Such legislation has been sought by the company. The act of 1911 was drawn upon the same lines as the act authorizing the Grand Central Terminal improvements. Both acts gave to the city and the railroad company both authority and discretion. Every one admits that great benefit has resulted to the city and to the public by reason of the electrification of the passenger lines of the company throughout the city and the construction of the Grand Central Terminal, the restoration and improvement of streets and of this portion of the city generally.

"It has been and is the desire of the company to achieve similar beneficial results with respect to its freight lines and terminals on the west side. It will do so if permitted. Not only the authority which resides in the Legislature, but the power which it may within lawful limits exercise, is fully recognized. The possibility also is recognized that such power may be so exercised as to result in changes which will not be in the best interests of either the railroad company or the city. The power resides nowhere to compel the company to accept these proposals or proposals of a like character."

Public Service Commissioner Charles S. Hervey is Chairman of the Joint Committee that made the proposals. The other members are Borough President Marks of Manhattan, Borough President Connolly of Queens, Borough President Van Name of Richmond, and Public Service Commissioner Whitney. William L. Ransom is its counsel and Mr. Adams its secretary.

Ransom Defends New Proposals.

Judge William L. Ransom, chief counsel to the Public Service Commission, who drew and urged the passage of the Ottinger-Ellenbogen law, in discussing Mr. Place's statement last night, said:

"The Ottinger law placed the Board of Estimate and the commission, for the first time, in position to proceed to determine what the solution of the whole West Side problem ought to be, in justice to the public, the railroad company, the commercial betterment of the port, and the maintenance of fundamentals of the declared policy of the State.

"Hitherto the Board of Estimate had to proceed by negotiation to see what concessions to the public the company could be cajoled into making. Now the public authorities are in position to ascertain what the adjustment ought to be and then proceed to bring it about, through agreement with the railroad company if possible, but through use of the regulatory powers of the State if need be.

"The Joint Committee has worked out a comprehensive plan, in pursuance of new and adequate powers granted by the last Legislature. Before it adopts and proceeds with that plan it desires suggestion, comment, and criticism from the public, the railroad company, and any other sources. The committee will perfect its plan, and endeavor to make it comprehensive and fair to all concerned.

"If the railroad company has anything to say in criticism, through the newspapers or upon the hearings, such suggestions will be carefully considered. I take it that the committee hopes for a speedy solution through the co-operative action of the company.

"But the new plan is not based necessarily on the assumption that the company will accept it as drafted or with such modification as the hearings may make advisable. The new plan is drawn on the sound basis of public rights and the powers now vested by law, and if an agreement is not reached with the company by Dec. 1, the duty of the commission is mandatory. That duty will be to take the statute as passed by the Legislature and the plan as drawn under the statute and proceed to put the plan into effect.

"Some of the features which Mr. Place most criticises so far as real estate title and rights are concerned are the result of the most careful and thoroughgoing examination that has ever been made as to the company's status on the west side, and the results of that examination may play an important part in the later developments."

Is Better Than a $50 Bill

The bond bears 4% interest—the bill does not.

The bond will bear a higher rate if other war bonds are issued at a higher rate—the bill will not.

The bond will go to a premium after the war, unless all the examples in our history count for nothing—the bill will not.

BUILDING SUBSIDY MAY BE WAY OUT

Realty Values Must Be Stabilized to Offset High Cost of Construction.

A POST-WAR EXPEDIENT

Official Survey of Building Material Price Conditions Promises No Reduction.

Some form of building subsidy or other means of stabilizing realty values for the next half a decade or more will probably be the recommendation made to Borough President Marks's Committee on the Alleviation of Building Stagnation when it meets in the Building Material Exchange tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock as the result of recent investigations made into the various phases of building construction and building material supply markets, says The Dow Service Daily Building Reports today.

One of the first things President Elliott Smith of the General Conference did was to appoint a committee to investigate the supply and price of building materials, and Allen E. Beals, Secretary of The Dow Service Daily Building Reports, was instructed to make a complete canvass of the condition of supply at all the manufacturing centres out of which building materials are shipped to New York and to determine whether conditions warrant the belief held by a great many building investors that the cost of materials would drop simultaneously with the fixing by the Government of the base price of steel and coal. This survey has just been completed and covers the basic factors of the 3,600 items that can enter into the construction and equipment of a modern building.

In every department but one, structural steel, the tendency is toward decidedly higher levels, especially if there should develop any difficulty in obtaining adequate supplies of coal. In the structural steel department the Government's fixed price policy is the subject of still further negotiation at the present moment in Washington and it may apply to tubular goods, affecting pipe and plumbing brass work. The building trade looks for $86 steel in the building, but even this price is far above levels ruling in ante-war days. The difference between $140 a ton steel today and possible $86 steel next Spring or Summer as applied to the builder, according to the Beals report, is that between a prohibited building operation and one on which the margin is little or nothing unless there is some protection by legislation or by insurance or Government subsidy to insure the stability of values until the investor has had time to turn around.

One cause of the higher prices that now seem assured in the next five to ten years is the claim that devastated Europe will make upon American building material resources. Among the results of the survey conducted by the sub-committee on the Supply and Demand for Building Materials is that from Otto M. Eidlitz of Marc Eidlitz & Son, builders, who is a member of the National Defense Society's committee investigating the demand for workingmen's homes in this country, of which there is a very appreciable shortage in many directions, who says:

"There is no doubt that we will undergo an era of readjustment. The present situation has not so seriously affected many classes of workers, who, due to war conditions, are getting higher wages than they ever did, but even with the demands that devastated Europe will make on us for rehabilitating her in different ways, the present situation is caused chiefly because enormous quantities of so many kinds of material are needed for carrying on the war and consequently interfering with the normal demands for civic purposes. When you see gilt-edged securities practically unsalable where the revenue derived from them is far in excess of anything that could be derived from investments in building operations, we cannot wonder that building, except for war purposes or for some special purpose, should practically cease."

Investing builders are guided by two conditions today. If they proceed, it is because they are assured of an immediate sale, or complete rental as in the case of special buildings. Projected buildings have been deferred because they felt sure that building material prices would go down as soon as steel declined. In only one department is there any indication of that being the case within the next five years or more. Their hope, therefore, is that some means may be found to so stabilize realty values that if they do proceed with construction at the present high prices their investment will be protected against any lowering of construction cost.

In the meantime the building material price situation is holding steadily at present levels. There are a great many departments, like glass, common brick, crushed stone, gravel, asphaltum, Portland cement, lime and plaster where manufacturing conditions make it almost imperative to advance prices now. Strikes among the longshoremen in New York and vicinity will interfere with the free movement of building materials as it will other lines of commerce, but if the Government drafts the laborers, building men can see nothing but a priority arrangement ahead. It seemed probable, Saturday noon, that some adjustment would be reached between the shipowners and the men, so that it would not be necessary to adopt heroic measures.

The active features in the building material market as the week ended were trap rock, which has been sold as high as $1.40 a yard for inch and a half sizes and $1.60 for three-quarter inch sizes. The normal price for this commodity is around 80 cents a yard. Many of the metal lines are not quoted at all. In pipe, there is a great shortage of inch and a quarter, inch and a half and two inch black pipe in the market, due to slow freight. Hudson and Raritan common brick are without change, although the market is quoted flat at $8.25, an indication of pending higher prices. Asphaltum has been steadier with the clearing conditions in Mexico and the price of $21 for Mexican paving in wood barrels holds unchanged as well as the $18 level to contractors in tank cars. The expected change in jobbers' discounts for window glass has not been reported in this market.

The entire building material situation is one of expectancy. Since the Government announced its price of steel there has been made active an increasing number of projects that had been indefinitely abandoned and six of these definitely went ahead last week, all, however, of a special type of building, indicating that investors are realizing that building material prices are not going down.

PROTEST CLOSING OF MAILS TO CALL

Madison Square Garden Is Thronged for Mass Meeting at Which Hillquit Speaks.

SEE DANGER TO WORKERS

Speakers Declare Suppression of the Paper Will Extend to All Critics of Government Policy.

A protest against closing the second-class mail to The New York Call was made at a Socialist mass meeting in Madison Square Garden last night. The big auditorium was filled to its capacity, and the police estimated there were 10,000 who couldn't get within the doors.

The Call has been cited to show cause at a hearing in Washington this afternoon why it should not be deprived of the second-class mail privilege for violating the Espionage act. Morris Hillquit, Socialist candidate for Mayor, one of the speakers last night, received an ovation lasting fifteen minutes. He said that it was vain to protest, that the Post Office Department, "accuser, judge, and executioner," had made up its mind and that "The Call is definitely and irrevocably doomed."

United States Marshal McCarthy and fifteen men, Assistant District Attorneys Content and Stanton, Post Office Inspectors Shea, Doran, and Fitch, Police Inspector O'Brien, and Herman Karpeles of the American Defense Society were on guard with stenographers to watch against anything disloyal and were determined to break up the meeting if any sedition showed itself. But there was little virulence in the references to the Government, and what there was was by innuendo rather than by direct statement.

Two hundred policemen outside kept the crowd in good order, lining the people on the sidewalks on all the streets leading away from the Garden. On Fourth Avenue the crowd extended north to Thirtieth Street. An attempt was made to hold an overflow meeting in Madison Square, but the police would not allow it.

All of the speakers saw in the suppression of the Socialist newspapers the determination of the "capitalists" to crush Socialism and "the workers."

Every reference to peace was loudly cheered, and while Morris Hillquit was speaking one of the red, white and blue streams across the ceiling of the Garden broke away at one end and slowly fell. It was a white streamer and at once there went up the cry of "Peace, peace, peace." Then a moment later another streamer floated down. It was a red streamer and grasping an analogy of Socialism triumph after peace, the crowd went wild for five minutes.

In referring to the citation of the Call, Mr. Hillquit said:

"The hearing has been set for to-morrow. The execution has probably been set for Thursday or Friday. From my sad experience in many similar cases, I assert that the so-called hearing is a farce. The revocation of second-class mailing rights means that the Call will lose practically all circulation outside of New York. The measure is intended to cripple, and, if possible, to destroy the paper. I maintain that the proceeding is without any sanction in law and that it is a flagrant violation of the most fundamental constitutional rights of American citizenship."

Mr. Hillquit said that the Espionage act was aimed at willful aid to the enemy and not at suppression of free speech.

Voices Readers' Sentiments.

"The New York Call," he said, "has at no time violated or counseled the violation of any provision of the Espionage act or any other law. It has at all times voiced the sentiments of its readers and followers against war and for peace, and it will continue doing so in spite of all un-American edicts of the Post Office Department."

Mr. Hillquit said that it was unfair to ask The Call to show cause why it should not be barred from the mails without naming any alleged violation of the law. He referred to the Postmaster General as a "prolific accuser, a merciless judge, and a prompt executioner." Then he reviewed the step of the department against The Milwaukee Leader, the Hungarian Elore, the Russian Novy Mir, the German Volks-Zeitung, the Jewish Daily Forward, and said:

"And the great people of the great American Republic stand silent and passive before this boldest of all attacks upon the most vital of their rights and liberties. That is the great tragedy of it.

"There is no reason to believe that the crusade of extermination will stop at the Socialist press. Emboldened by the passive acquiescence of the people, our Post Office bureaucracy may extend the ban to all publications that dare to disagree with the policies of the administration or to criticize public officials, and if permitted to do so under the pretext of a war measure, it may continue the lawless practice in times of peace."

Mr. Hillquit then asked every Socialist to become a circulation solicitor for The Call, to make up the circulation it would lose through disbarment from the second-class mail.

"The short-sighted Washington bureaucracy expects to stamp out the Socialist movement by destroying its organs of expression," he said. "Vain and silly endeavor. The Socialist movement cannot be killed. The Socialist movement thrives and grows and wins under persecution. The tyrants of Europe have learned this lesson to their sorrow. The German Kaiser and the Russian Czar have tried it. We are 4,000,000 strong in Germany, and the only real foe of German autocracy and the only real hope of German democracy."

Then Mr. Hillquit made a plea for his election as Mayor.

Strike Blow for Socialism.

"If the people want peace and justice and liberty," he said, "they must vote into power the party of the people, the party of the workers, the Socialist Party. Workers of New York, let us make the beginning here and now. Let us strike [illegible] blow for Socialism and democracy on Nov. 6."

Mention of Mayor Mitchel's name brought a roar of "boos." There was no mention of Judge Hylan's name by any of the speakers.

S. John Block, candidate for Attorney General on the Socialist ticket last year, presided. He seemed to enjoy the hisses his every mention of Postmaster General Burleson's name brought.

"Our public officials," he said, "are working on the theory that a little knowledge, spread by The Call, is a dangerous thing. Yes, a little more knowledge on the part of our working people will be a very bad thing for our autocratic politicians."

There was prolonged applause when he said "a secret communication has been received in Washington from Mr. Nicholas Romanoff, who up to last Spring held a position of some importance in a benighted country, in which he asks this Government to arrange matters so that he can be transferred to Washington, and he offers his services to the Postoffice Department—he would be at home there."

Ludwig Lore, editor of the Volks-Zeitung, which was cited to show cause why it should not be barred from the mails, defended his course by saying that his paper was fighting German autocracy at a time when our Government officials were hobnobbing with German Emperors and Princes.

"The Volks-Zeitung was called to Washington," he said, "but the Volks-Zeitung did not go because it thought that first the Postmaster General should show cause why it should be barred. It did not go because it could not take back one word it had said in the past or promise to be better or worse in the future."

He denied that his paper had ever been pro-German, and predicted that when "the friends in Washington and the friends in Berlin shall again be shaking hands the working classes in both Germany and America will be fighting both militarism in Germany and militarism in America."

Charles W. Erwin, editor of The Call, referred to his maltreatment by "the lords of misrule," and said: "We shall continue to be uncompromising. We will not yield an inch, and we will be heard." He said The Call had gained 20,000 circulation in the last week, and asked for 40,000 increase the coming week, adding: "The best man on my circulation staff is Postmaster General Burleson."

James H. Maurer, President of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor, who has been active in the work of the pacifist People's Council, spoke against the "master class." When he mentioned the name of Colonel Roosevelt there was a storm of "boos," which he interrupted by saying, "Tain't worth it, boys; 'tain't worth it."

He referred to the statements of Colonel Roosevelt and others against sedditionists. In defending the I. W. W. he said:

"I am not an I. W. W., but I say this for them—their only crime is that they are class-conscious and consistent, and fight for their convictions."

He repeated his attack on the leaders of the American Federation of Labor, accusing them of not supporting the rights of the workers during the war, and then returned to the subject of the I. W. W.

"If the Government can destroy one kind of labor union," he asked, "what is to prevent it from destroying other kinds? I tell you, if the Washington Government gets away with what it is trying, the workers of America will be the most servile class the world ever saw."

WILL BAR WAR COMMENT.

Jewish Daily Forward Hereafter Will Publish News Only.

Abraham Cahan, editor of the Jewish Daily Forward, said yesterday that his paper would refrain hereafter from any discussion of the war news. Mr. Cahan has decided to remain silent on the war as the result of his recent visit to Washington, when he was called upon by Postmaster General Burleson to show cause why The Forward should not be suppressed for alleged seditious utterances. Mr. Cahan said he had received no information that the Government had decided to revoke his mailing privileges.

"Hereafter," said Mr. Cahan, "we will print the news of the war, but will avoid all discussion of it. We do not agree with the interpretation that the authorities have placed upon the law. We think we have always obeyed the statute, even when we did say that capitalism had a great deal to do with the war. We believe it is not in any way interfering with any one's good American citizenship to voice an opinion, much less is it bad citizenship to criticise our allies, particularly in those points where President Wilson's policy is out of accord with their policy. But since all this is declared to be unlawful and since thinking and having your own opinion without expressing it has not yet been considered unlawful, we will just print war news without comment."

ARRESTED AT CAMP DEVENS.

Two Privates Accused of Making Attack on a Corporal.

AYER, Mass., Oct. 14.—The first serious breach of discipline among the 35,000 men at Camp Devens was reported today. As a result two privates of Company H, Thirtieth Infantry, Frank Keenan, a former prizefighter of Bridgeport, Conn., and Nicholas Costello of Waterbury, Conn., are in the guardhouse, awaiting court-martial.

It is alleged that Costello clubbed C. E. Krog of Waterbury, a Corporal of the guard, over the head with a rifle, knocking him unconscious, and was then "willfully disobedient" to Lieutenant John S. Wheeler, officer of the day. Keenan is charged with disorderly conduct.

According to the official version of the affair the two men were returning to camp late last night, when they were halted by Corporal Krog. Costello, it is asserted, took the Corporal's gun away and clubbed him, while Keenan attempted to pin Krog's hands behind him. Later, in the barracks, Costello, it is said, tried to resist Lieutenant Wheeler.

CALL TO THE COLORS FROM HENRY STREET

Room for All to Help in a War Work No Less Urgent Than Hurrying Men to the Front.

HOME MORALE IN DANGER

Each Departing Soldier Leaves Some One to be Nourished, Nursed, and Encouraged.

In the northwest corner of the third floor of the Grand Central Palace, where the Electrical Exposition opened last week and will continue through next Saturday, is the booth of the Henry Street Settlement's Nursing Service. It is part of the Red Cross exhibit, which occupies the entire third floor of the building, and the reason for its presence is explained by a sign which reads:

"Enlisted by the Red Cross to care for the sick in the families of the men called to the colors."

Many persons who visited the booth last week, according to the nurses in attendance, seemed to realize for the first time that "war work" included relief at home as well as abroad. Apparently it had not occurred to a great number of the visitors that there would be sickness among the families of the men in the army and navy and that the sickness in the city this winter would be much more widespread than usual because of the absence of the men, the want and worry caused by their going, and the high cost of life necessities. The Settlement booth emphasized the increased need for home relief, and, when questioned, the nurses in charge admitted that, as the need had increased, the means for meeting it had relatively decreased. They explained that interest in European war relief had commanded much public sympathy and attention to the exclusion of the call from such everyday agencies as the Henry Street Settlement, and said that the Settlement was losing ground daily in its struggle to keep pace with the ever growing demand for its services.

The situation in the city, as presented by Miss Lillian D. Wald, head of the Settlement, and her assistants, is rapidly becoming acute, and the outlook for the Winter is as blue as the little pins used in ever increasing number to mark on a map the location of cases of illness. Those voicing the needs of the Settlement and the people it serves have not sought to divert any contributions from foreign relief work, but rather have based their appeal upon the ground that their work is part of the home defense of city and country and should be adequately supported without neglect of any of the nation's other obligations. It is pointed out that, while the work abroad is imperative, it is just as important here. The destructive consequences of the war will be multiplied, it is emphasized, if, while fathers are killed and wounded in France, mothers and children in New York are permitted to die or deteriorate.

The following figures, which were obtained at the Settlement yesterday, give some indication of conditions:

In 1915 there were, on the average, ninety-nine nurses on the Settlement staff who made a total of 227,028 visits to 26,575 patients. In 1916 an average of 109 nurses made 247,892 visits to 29,105 patients. In the first nine months of 1916, from Jan. 1 to Sept. 30, an average of 109 nurses made 183,777 visits. In the first nine months of this year an average of 133 nurses made 205,536 visits. The significance of this year's figures and a forecast of what may be expected this Winter may be obtained from applying to this year the facts of last year's record of Winter illness. Subtracting the number of visits made during the first nine months of last year from the year's total, it is seen that 64,121 visits were made in the last three months of 1916. Basing calculations upon this number of visits made in the last three months of 1916, compared with 183,777 visits made in the first nine months of the year, one may conservatively estimate that at least 71,300 visits will be made in the last three months of this year, or a total of 276,836 visits for the year.

As a matter of fact this estimate is considered to be an impossible minimum, for the settlement authorities expect the usual Winter rise of increase in morbidity to be greatly exceeded this year.

To meet the present and future needs, and despite the necessity for increasing the salaries of nurses in order that they may live, and notwithstanding the draft of nurses for foreign service, the Settlement has increased its staff to 133 and hopes to add more to the work if money is obtained.

As the need for the nursing service has increased, so have its expenses, and the income for the support of the work has fallen further and further short of accomplishing its purpose. In 1915 the total income of the Settlement's nursing department was $108,949, while the year's expenses were $119,074, leaving a deficit of more than $10,000. In 1916 the income was $120,893, and the expenses $133,999, leaving a deficit of more than $13,000. The financial report for this year is, of course, not yet obtainable, but those familiar with the Settlement's affairs say that the comparison of the 1916 figures with those of 1915 is an indication of what that between 1916 and 1917 will be. The Settlement is facing a greatly increased expense account and a more formidable deficit than ever before, and, in this position, is handicapped now in its work, and fears the necessity for further restriction in the future.

Maternity cases are among the most important cared for by the nurses, and thousands of healthy children who otherwise would have died or grown up impaired in body and mind, have had their chance to become healthy and happy citizens because of the nursing service. More maternity cases than ever are expected this Winter, and the nurses know that many mothers and babies will die if help for them is not ready. And each unnecessary death, or case of unrelieved illness, they say, will indicate a weak spot in the home defense of New York.

CHURCHILL ASSAILS GARY SYSTEM HERE

Says It Was "Foisted" on New York and the Mayor "Distorted" It.

Thomas W. Churchill, former President of the Board of Education, speaking on "New York City and Its Schools" at the Labor Temple, Fourteenth Street and Second Avenue, last night, said that Mayor Mitchel "distorted the Gary system" merely to save the city some money. Mr. Churchill asserted that the Gary system had been "foisted" on New York by "meretricious methods that smack of the quack and the peddler," and that President William G. Wilcox of the Board of Education actually told a Superintendent of Schools that he could not hope for advancement if he opposed the system. To prove his assertions, Mr. Churchill read correspondence he had with Mayor Mitchel and a letter written to a School Superintendent by Mr. Wilcox.

"There are good features about the system, yes, in Gary, Ind., but they were not brought here," Mr. Churchill said. "The Mayor says that I am responsible for the Gary system. I am not. In the next breath he says it is a fine thing. First he tried to pass the buck to me and then he tried to grab it while passing it. When there is a system that Superintendent Maxwell and other associate superintendents come out against, it is time to pause and for the sake of the children determine if the system is good or bad. When I see men, worth their weight in gold to the city, thrown out of the Board of Education because they are in favor of testing the Gary system before putting it into operation in all the schools, when I see men pledged to the system by the Mayor before they become members of the Board of Education, then we must look askance at a system that is foisted on us by such meretricious methods."

Mr. Churchill said that it was not possible to get a word in the newspapers regarding the faults of the Gary system, and he charged that the Board of Education would not allow the school buildings to be used by opponents of the Gary idea, while the buildings were available to any speakers who were in favor of the system. A letter written to him by Mayor Mitchel on Sept. 25, 1915, from which the following two paragraphs are quoted, was read by Mr. Churchill to support his assertion that the Mayor was interested in inaugurating the Gary system merely for the sake of economy:

"I am interested in the Gary plan not merely because it assured economies in the use of school buildings and equipment but because it seems clearly to improve the schools and the education of the children. Has not the time come for general application of the plan to all city schools?

"In view of the present financial burdens on the city it is fortunate that we have available a method of utilizing the existent school facilities which will enable us to keep down expenses for new buildings and equipment while actually improving the quality of education."

"Seventeen schools were changed to accommodate the Gary idea," Mr. Churchill said in conclusion, "yet not one of the Principals was asked if it was a good thing to change the schools. Yet the Mayor says that for some reason I changed my views on the Gary schools. I would rather live my own life decently than be degenerated by wishing to be re-elected for a second term. This man, this so-called fighter, this so-called brave man, who uses my body as a stepping stone, is a coward. All I want is a square deal, but I cannot get it from the newspapers. They won't print what I say."

DEFEND ST. JOHN'S HOME.

Catholics at Memorial Meeting Denounce Political Pamphlet.

Roman Catholic laymen and priests who gathered yesterday at St. John's Home, Albany Avenue and Sterling Place, Brooklyn, to honor the memory of Mother Mary de Chantal, who died on June 4 last, after spending a third of a century in the care of orphans at St. John's, bitterly resented a pamphlet by Ellis Parker Butler entitled "Kids Is Kids," which has been exploited as a campaign document in behalf of Mayor Mitchel.

This pamphlet, which was printed in part in Brooklyn papers yesterday morning, assailed St. John's Home and was read by those who attended the memorial meeting as purposely timed to blacken the name of the institution just before the exercises in honor of Mother Mary de Chantal should take place. William J. Doherty, Deputy Commissioner of Charities, who was active in the charities controversy a year ago, was brought up in St. John's Home but he did not reflect on the management of this institution. Mr. Butler, however, said in his pamphlet:

"Doherty's eyes were not bad when he went into an institution; his teeth were good; he was a bright boy. He received sore eyes, bad teeth, and little education."

Joseph F. Keany, First Vice President of the Roman Catholic Orphan Society and Chief Counsel of the Long Island Railroad, said at the meeting yesterday:

"It is more than a coincidence that on the very day that you gentlemen intended presenting a tribute to her memory that there should appear in the public press a slur on Mother de Chantal's memory. This slur is made in behalf of a man holding public office in this city. It is shameless. It has not been denied. It should be resented. He is described as coming into this home sound and leaving with bad teeth and with bad vision. It touches us as Catholics. We should disband, if that is true. We cannot let a sneer of this kind go unchallenged."

COLD IN HOSPITAL AT SPARTANBURG

Building Constructed on Plans for Tropical Climate Structure, It Is Explained.

MEN ACCUSED OF HOLDUP

Four Soldiers Under Arrest on Charges of Attempted Robbery of an Auto Owner and Desertion.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMP WADSWORTH, SPARTANBURG, S. C., Oct. 14.—There are already 112 men in the hospital here, and today nearly every one of them bitterly complained of the lack of accommodations. The hospital contains no plumbing, no ceilings, no sewage system, no double side walls, no heating facilities, but it has a nonadjustable ventilating system that does not permit of regulation of temperature. With its present tropical construction, the $350,000 structure in this climate is declared to be useless and dangerous for the treatment of the 35,000 soldiers in camp.

Despite the fact that two soldiers were lying seriously ill from pneumonia and three others were twisting under the added suffering cold brings to the sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism, the only heat furnished the sick soldiers today came from two small oil stoves doing double duty as cook stoves. Surgeons were going about their work in fleece-lined trench coats while the nurses were bravely trying to keep warm in sweater coats and light ulsters.

In all of the eight sick wards the same conditions were found. Because of the danger of contracting a chill should they leave their beds, all of the 112 patients are forced to stay in their cots to keep warm. Muffled in blankets, the men, even the convalescents, lie all day in the beds, and this enforced inactivity, the surgeons admitted, greatly retards their complete recovery.

When the hospital staff was asked why stoves were not purchased and installed they pointed out that the specifications of the hospital failed to provide for chimneys and that the only hope of improving conditions was in a sweeping alteration of the building. They called attention to the wide open ventilators running the entire length of the structure and said that until authority was received to remove them the men would have to suffer. The ventilators are built right into the hospital roof and could not be removed without tearing away 50 per cent. of the roof.

Though the surgeons admitted that plumbing was "highly desirable," they again said that the specifications had not contained any reference to it and that it was up to Washington. As the matter now stands, all the hot water used in caring for the soldiers must be boiled on oil stoves and, as this provides a scanty supply, hot baths are out of the question.

According to a high officer, who refused to permit publication of his name, the reason that the hospital has not been properly equipped for service in this climate, where the thermometer frequently goes down to freezing, is that the building was constructed from plans designed for use in the Canal Zone and on the Mexican border. Pointing out that the flimsiness of the building would be necessary in a warm climate, he said that the War Department at first intended to use tents here, but had found a shortage. Rather than delay the construction of the hospital while elaborate plans were worked out, he declared, the department went right ahead on the designs already in its possession.

While he admitted that the same type of hospital building had been found impractical abroad, he asserted that every effort was being made to correct its faults for use at Camp Wadsworth. He did not deny, however, a surgeon's assertion that up to date all efforts to have the War Department install stoves, strengthen the walls, and reconstruct the bad ventilators had been met with the statement that the Washington authorities had not yet decided on how long the hospital is to be used.

The first escapade among the troops occurred early this morning when four privates tried to quit the camp for Asheville, N. C. Shortly after midnight, the headquarters of the military police in Spartanburg received a telephone message from W. L. Blackwell, who declared that four soldiers had held him up at pistol's point and robbed him of $14. Major Shanton, accompanied by Lieutenants Crittenden and Kennedy and several of the soldier police, immediately motored eighteen miles to Inman, S. C., where Blackwell joined them. He alleged that the four soldiers, after hiring his car and riding to Inman, held him up and then, while one aimed a pistol in Blackwell's direction ordered him to drive back to Spartanburg. When he heard the chauffeur's story, Major Shanton made a hurried investigation, and learned that the privates had ridden out of town in another automobile in the direction of Asheville, N. C.

Knowing that the party must pass through Hendersonville, N. C., the Major notified the police there to be on the alert. Within half an hour Police Chief Powers of Hendersonville announced the capture of the quartet. Major Shanton escorted the men back to the military jail, where they were entered as follows: Stephen Kengle, W. S. Smith, and James A. McCludg, all of Company H, Twenty-third Regiment, and Private Roy Bamberger, Company L, Tenth Infantry. In addition to the charge of attempted robbery, the men will face an accusation of attempted desertion, unless they can satisfactorily explain their absence from camp without leave. It was said that Smith already was under arrest for desertion and that Kengle, the man with the automatic pistol, was acting as his guard when they suddenly decided to visit the noted mountain resort.

Major Edward Olmstead, in charge of the Liberty Loan drive, said that the camp's total contribution up to midnight had reached $356,900. The Fourteenth Infantry, with $138,000 to its credit was leading, with the Seventy-fourth second, with $110,000. The next highest units were the Twenty-third, with $26,400, and the base hospital, which had taken $36,200 worth of the bonds.

LILLIAN STILES A SUICIDE.

Illinois Woman Once Figured in a Sensational Elopement.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—Mrs. Lillian Stiles, who a dozen years ago eloped with Herbert P. Crane, a wealthy iron master of Chicago, today, friendless and alone, committed suicide in a hotel at Aurora, Ill. Mrs. Stiles wrote a letter to Miss Anna Berg, with whom she had spent the Summer in a cottage near St. Charles, Ill., and asked that her body be cremated and her ashes scattered over the lake.

Mrs. Stiles was the wife of Robert B. Stiles, Treasurer of the Streator Gas Company. They were married twenty-five years ago. Mrs. Stiles attained some note as a society beauty. Twelve years ago she met Herbert P. Crane, and their elopement caused a sensation in the Middle West. Mrs. Crane and Stiles promptly obtained divorces. The years passed and announcement of the marriage of Crane and Mrs. Stiles, which had been expected, was not forthcoming. Eventually the affair was almost forgotten. Then Mrs. Stiles returned to Streator. There was no explanation of her separation from Crane.

The incident was recalled last year when, after a romantic courtship, Crane married Señora Elita Piza Chamorra, daughter of a wealthy Costa Rican planter.

Meantime Mrs. Stiles had become companion to Mrs. S. R. Chittenden, a wealthy resident of Evanston. Early last Summer she went to Miss Berg's cottage near St. Charles. Miss Berg, who was governess in the family of E. N. Hurley, Chairman of the United States Shipping Board, had known Mrs. Stiles for many years. Thursday Mrs. Stiles appeared unusually despondent. She left the cottage and went to Aurora, where she registered at a hotel and took poison.

TURN CAMP UPTON INTO A VAST SCHOOL

General Bell Issues a Sweeping Order for Instruction of Officers and Men.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMP UPTON, YAPHANK, L. I., Oct. 14.—By Washington's Birthday, it is predicted, the soldiers of the Seventy-seventh Division will be ready for active service. A sixteen weeks' intensive course of theoretical and practical instruction will begin here on Oct. 22, and officers are convinced that the New York City Division will be among the first, if not the first, of the national army prepared to go abroad.

Camp Upton's soldiers will have an added advantage over others in the new army in the schedule of theoretical training that has been mapped out at Divisional Headquarters. It is said that the new order issued by Major General J. Franklin Bell is the most comprehensive for theoretical instruction for a division that ever has been issued in the United States army. Not quite such an elaborate program was put into effect by General Bell when he had command of the Second Division on the Mexican border.

The additional instruction arranged by the military authorities is designed to supplement the schedule of practical instruction prescribed for all national army cantonments by the War Department. All instruction is so laid down as to occur coincident with the War Department's program.

General Bell, in his order, has covered the theoretical instruction necessary for all grades and classes of commissioned and enlisted men. There are schools provided for all ranks from regimental and battalion commanders to cooks and buglers.

In addition to drilling recruits in practical military subjects, the military authorities here will conduct a vast university for officers and non-commissioned officers covering all fields of military work now necessary for trench warfare. All grades of commissioned and non-commissioned officers will be required to attend special schools in subjects dealing with the branch of the service to which they have been assigned.
